His mercy underlies.

And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed he will not break,
But strengthen and sustain.

No offering of my own I have,
Nor works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts He gave
And plead His love for love.

And so beside the Silent Sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

O brothers! if my faith is vain,
If hopes like these betray,
Pray for me that my feet may gain
The sure and safer way.

And Thou, O Lord! by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee!

"Silk Stockings" in Politics.

Much interest has been aroused by the recent election of Honore Palmer, the son of Mrs. Potter Palmer, and one of the gilded youth of Chicago, to the position of alderman in that city. In the Saturday Evening Post, that gentleman himself writes an article under the above title. He says:

Reasons why men of wealth and established business and social position should take an active personal part in practical politics are easier to find than excuses by which they may justify a failure to embrace such responsibilities.

Until recently there had been a large amount of theory and little practice along this line. Finally, however, reiterated truisms on the duties of citizenship are bearing practical fruit. This fact may be taken as a sufficient justification for a review of the arguments involved in this interesting problem, giving fresh zest to what might otherwise appear a somewhat threadbare discussion.

For the large and more tempting political positions there has never been a lack of candidates having at their command all the advantages and allurements that money and position could offer. This has been well enough as far as it has gone, but it has resulted in leaving to men of little or no property interests those minor and less attractive political positions in which men of large business responsibilities could render the greatest practical service to their communities. Men who could not be tempted to take a hand in "small politics" have been eager to serve constituencies in the United States Senate, the National House of Representatives, the executive mansions of their commonwealths, and other places of unquestioned dignity and importance which would add to, rather than detract from, their social standing and enjoyments. It may safely be taken for granted, however, that few of these men would have either the hardihood or the humor to claim that the main motive impelling them to accept such marked political honors was that of a simple and unadulterated regard for their duty as American citizens. In many instances of this kind such a consideration may have been a minor element, but in most instances it has been overshadowed by the more selfish and compelling motive of personal ambition. Meanwhile those places involving, to the man of wealth, a distinct sacrifice of convenience, of immediate personal and material interests, of freedom for social pleasures and of immunity from unwelcome public attention, have gone begging. and have fallen largely into the hands of men having much to gain and nothing to lose through their political associations.

Another objection which has been repeatedly brought forward against the so-called "aristocratic" candidates for municipal office is the charge that men of this class will not be easily accessible to their humbler constituents; that they will be inclined to conduct their official affairs somewhat upon social lines, not caring to condescend to give their attention to the small interests of the poor as would a "man of the people." Again let it be asked: What is the record of the "aristocratic" aldermen in this particular? Every man of them has left a record for approachableness, for good, sound democracy, for energy and faithfulness in little as well as big affairs, which the most zealous "hustlers" of the purely political stripe in the Council could not claim. Men whose fortunes mounted high in the hundreds of thousands were untiring in their efforts to satisfy every legitimate request brought to their attention by the poorest men in their wards. Nor did the applicants for their attention need to come armed with the recommendations of ward heelers or precinct captains to secure the services of these aldermen. No introduction or "pull" was required or desired, and all that the humblest resident in their wards needed was a just and reasonable cause. Their active assistance was cheerfully given as service due, not as a favor doled out to be ever after held over the head of the suppliant as a political debt to be canceled by support at the primaries and polls.

Two natural and logical reasons account for the fact that the poor people received from the "silk stocking" aldermen more faithful and energetic attention to their individual appeals for service than was given them by councilmen who made a business of politics. One is that the men of fortune and position had the leisure to devote practically their whole time to the legitimate needs of the residents of their wards. Their time was their own, and they were not under the necessity of earning a living by their own labor or of devoting their energies to schemes for "grafting" an income by the leverage of their official positions. Then they were awake to the fact that they were peculiarly liable to be suspected of aristocratic notions and methods. This naturally made them zealous to let their democracy of conduct toward all their callers be of so pronounced a type as to confound the suspicions of the most supersensitive. Such has been the record in Chicago, and it will be maintained generally by men of education, fortune and social standing who win their way into public office.

Men who are accustomed to the handling of large property interests realize the responsibilities of management far more seriously than do those who have never carried burdens of this kind. They see large things in a big way and also grasp the importance of details. It is one thing to play with the money of others on the basis of indirect responsibility, and quite another to be trained in the management of one's own. For this reason the alderman or other public official who has shouldered the responsibility of handling large private material interests makes a more conservative and farsighted public servant than he whose chief qualification is the ability to drum up votes. This observation naturally leads to the conclusion that the ideal legislator is the business man who has made his fortune, retired, and is willing to give the public the benefit of his ripe experience, his sound judgment, his severe training in the school of large responsibility, and his desire to leave behind him a substantial reputation as a public benefactor. Next to a mature man of this kind, the choice must be that of younger men who have the same advantages of wealth and leisure, and even a greater incentive on the score of personal ambition. Their lack of experience and judgment is in part compensated by greater energy and keener fighting qualities.

What has already been accomplished in Chicago by the "silk stocking" aldermen and the incorruptible and fearless mayor who is their natural leader is the best possible argument as to the political duty of men who have leisure, wealth, education and social position. They have made the office of alderman one of respectability and honor instead of reproach. Is it not the duty of intelligent men everywhere to work for the same results in their own communities?

Not all of them need to enter the lists of candidates. This has been demonstrated by the work of the public-spirited men composing the executive board of the Municipal Voters' League of Chicago, which has made possible, in large degree, the cleansing of the City Council, the defeating of bad men and the election of honest and able men. Like the aldermen who had nothing to gain by their political activities in the way of money, prestige or influence, these men have sacrificed their personal convenience for the sake of the public good. The influence of their example will be wide and wholesome. The movement for better politics by better men is daily growing, and it should be considered a privilege and duty to have a hand in promoting its progress.

At the Pan-American Exposition.

The flag unfurls its graceful folds,
  The bands begin to play.
Fling wide the portals to the world,
  For this is opening day.
America has garnered here
  Her treasures rich and rare,
The harvest of a hundred years,
  In this her first great fair.

Naught but the labor of her sons,
  The product of her soil,
The flowers of freedom's gentle rule,
  The fruits of trade and toil,
Are spread beneath those gilded domes
  And heavenward-reaching spires,
That point to the immortal stars
  And meet the morning's fires.

Hark! hear you not a distant roar—
  A godlike voice that calls?
It is primeval Nature's tone—
  Niagara's waterfalls.
And mingled with its music grand
  The notes of labor come,
The spindles whirr, the shuttles fly,
  The wheels of commerce hum.

Look! yonder Erie's azure lake
  Tells with a million lips
To every listening ear the tale
  Of Perry and his ships,
And how his sailors felled the trees
  Along the inland sea
And built the frigates tall that won
  His glorious victory.

Where Pilgrims of the Mayflower found
  Deep forests long ago,
The looms of Lowell spin a robe
  From Georgia's cotton snow.
Where on the Kansas prairies roamed
  The painted braves of old,
The sunflower and the yellow corn
  Unite their living gold.

This is the epic of the hour.
  Industry holds her own
And wears her crown of silver wheat
  When kings are overthrown.
Columbia is "at home" within
  The Exposition gates.
Let all the nations come and read
  The story of the States.

The Oil Excitement in Texas.

The discovery of oil at Beaumont has turned out to be one of the most wonderful events of recent years, and the later developments, which show the field to be one of wide extent, will probably revolutionize industrial conditions in that section of the country. There is certainly a great future ahead for Beaumont and vicinity, but it is doubtful whether there is sufficient cause for one-tenth the excitement that now prevails. It is to be hoped that the present intensified feeling will give way to sober judgment and that business methods will soon gain control.

The formation of stock companies capitalized at six or seven figures on mere land leases or on small acreage will have the effect of making legitimate investors wary. Inflated booms have invariably been followed by disastrous collapses. Birmingham, Alabama, and the flurry in Florida phosphates are instances of comparatively recent date, and well remembered.

The great importance of the Beaumont oil discovery lies in the fact that it was made in a region entirely devoid of other mineral fuel. The Southern Pacific Railway, for example, with an unbroken line from New Orleans to San Francisco, and which passes within three miles of the original "geyser" brought in by Captain Lucas, has practically no coal along its 2,500 miles of length. The company has been compelled to import most of its fuel from Alabama, Indian Territory, Colorado and New Mexico. The oil of Beaumont is said to be an ideal fuel oil, and there seems to be no doubt as to a ready and profitable market for large quantities of it. It is reported that the Southern Pacific is already making arrangements to change its locomotives from coal to oil burners, and has planned for large receiving and distributing reservoirs along its line. Other railways centering in Beaumont and Houston are likely to do the same, and manufacturing enterprises already established and to be established will have a bountiful supply of cheap fuel.

If the present indications of a practically inexhaustible supply be confirmed, Beaumont will in a short time be one of the most important cities in the state, if not in the South.

In addition to the market for railway manufacturing and domestic consumption, the Beaumont oil field possesses an advantage peculiarly its own. This lies in its close proximity to the Gulf of Mexico and the facilities for water shipment not found in any other important oil region. The export trade will certainly be a large one, and it is within the range of possibilities to have Beaumont oil displacing coal in the cities on our Atlantic seaboard.—Mining and Metallurgy.

Whistle Again.

"George, George, mind; your hat will be blown off if you lean so far out of the window!" exclaimed a fond father to his little son, who was traveling with him in a railway carriage. Quickly snatching the hat from the head of the refactory youngster, papa hid it behind his back.

"There, now, that hat has gone!" he cried, pretending to be angry. And George immediately set up a howl. After a time the father remarked:

"Come, be quiet; if I whistle your hat will come back again."

Then he whistled and replaced the hat on the boy's head. "There, it's back again, you see." Afterward, while papa was talking to mamma, a small, shrill voice was heard saying:

"Papa, papa, I've thrown my hat out of the window! Whistle again, will you?"—The American Boy.

In His Hand.

In a court-room in a Western city, says an exchange, a tramp stood charged with stealing a watch. He stoutly denied the impeachment, and brought a countercharge against his accuser for assault committed with a frying-pan.

The judge was inclined to take a common-sense view of the case, and regarding the prisoner, said:

"Why did you allow the prosecutor, who is a smaller man than yourself, to assault you without resistance? Had you nothing in your hand with which to defend yourself?"

"Bedad, your honor," answered the tramp, "I had his watch, but what was that against a frying-pan?"

An Amazing Difference.

A young man once said to the Bishop of Winchester (Wilberforce): "My lord, have you read Darwin's last book, on the 'Descent of Man'?"

"Yes, I have," said the Bishop.

The young man continued: "What nonsense it is, talking of our being descended from apes. Besides, I can't see the use of such stuff. I can't see what difference it would make to me if my grandfather was an ape."

"No," the bishop replied, "I don't see that it would; but it must have made an amazing difference to your grandmother.—Watchword.

PETE.

XVI.—Who Nap Was.

I hope you won't mind it very much if we now return to Mr. Edgar Brown and tell what he did on this same Friday evening of the party, for it is really important that you should know. And although he is a grown young man, after all he is not so tiresome as most grown people. He didn't wear such a very high collar, and he never told anybody to make less noise, and when he walked down the street, he didn't look as if he thought the entire town was watching him. And when he spoke to an acquaintance, he didn't say "How d'y do?" as if he took it for granted that you were doing bad, but he said "How d'y do!" in the friendliest manner. And finally, and strangest of all, though a young man in a laundered shirt, he didn't think of himself all the time. Well, this same Friday evening while the children were at Linda May's party, Edgar came around to the barn which you may or may not remember he had rented of Mrs. Morris. It was already dark, with that sweet hazy dim-starred duskiness for which September is famous. Edgar knew the children were having a joyous time at Miss Dollie Dudley's, for he had passed the yard, and he had wondered what Miss Dollie thought of the children playing on her bluegrass. It made him feel strangely lonesome and old, listening to their shouts and laughter. So he came around to the barn-door that opened on the back street, to make sure that all was well. Now I am going to tell you what Madge and Pete didn't know. Edgar had got rid of the tramp by paying him the hundred dollars which the tramp had expected to force from Mrs. Morris. Nap had faithfully promised to take Edgar's money, leave the country, and never bother Mrs. Morris again. If Edgar could only have known the secret that put Mrs. Morris in Nap's power! But he was obliged to act in the dark, and he was willing to part with a hundred dollars for the sake of Madge and Pete. But he hadn't told them what he had done, because he knew Mrs. Morris would not consent to his paying her debt. He had merely told them that he had got rid of Nap. Well, here he is, now, around at the back of the barn.

Mrs. Morris' barn was built with a cornbin, or a corncrib, opening upon the street; I don't know whether you'd call it a bin or crib, for I am not an architect; anyway, it was a small room, with a little door high up from the ground, just right for you to throw in your corn from your wagon. Edgar noticed that this little door stood open, which ought not to be. He knew Pete had not been allowed to go to the party, and he concluded she had been playing party in the crib. He entered the barn, and looked through the narrow door that led into the cornroom. There on top of the corn, making him on a level with the little open outer door, lay Nap, fast asleep! He was even more than fast asleep; he was drunk asleep. The tramp lay with his head close to the square outer doorway, so the breeze could ripple over his whiskers. At first Edgar was so indignant at Nap's presence, since he had given him such a large sum to stay away, that he seized him roughly by the arm and shook him back and forth till the ears of corn slid in all directions. But the tramp was too far gone to be sensible to this indignity. You can get pretty sound asleep on a hundred dollars. Then a thought occurred to the young man. He slipped away, and went to town. At his hotel he called for a man who had taken a room about a week ago, but who was hardly ever in town; a strange man, with very little to say. Let us call him Mr. Gudger, since this is what he called himself. Edgar told Mr. Gudger about Nap in the cornbin, and he also outlined his plan. Mr. Gudger agreed to the plan, and about half an hour later a spring wagon drove up behind Mrs. Morris' barn. It backed till it stood just under the outer door of the cornbin. In that spring wagon were Edgar and Mr. Gudger. These gentlemen first put a good deal of hay in the bottom of the wagon, then dragged Nap out through the opening and stowed him away on the hay. They covered him over with a canvas, till both he and the hay were hidden. Then Edgar and Mr. Gudger got on the seat and drove quietly out of town, and all they could hear were the clatter of hoofs, rattle of wheels and snores of Nap. There they go!

They reached the woods where it was very dark, they drove carefully down into a deep ravine, they paused beside a brook. Then Mr. Gudger lit a funny little lantern that he could open or close just as he pleased, and when he closed it not a ray of light could be seen. And that's a dark-lantern. Then Edgar got a bucket which he had previously stowed away in his wagon, and having filled it to the brim with water from the brook, he carried it back and poured its cold contents upon Nap's head. That made Nap quit being drunk, and he strangled and coughed and choked and, I am sorry to say, he swore. He tried to get up, but Mr. Gudger had slipped a pair of handcuffs upon his wrists, the key to which he had afterwards placed in his pocket. Edgar in the meantime had made a second journey to the brook, and he now returned with another bucket of water. "Where is he?" said Edgar. So Mr. Gudger opened the slide of his dark-lantern and poured its brilliant light full on Nap's face. "You're blindin' me!" cried Nap, "what are you going to do?" "Be quiet," said Edgar, "I'm going to pour this bucket of water upon your face!" "Oh, no," cried Nap, quite earnestly, "what for? What have I done to you?" "You are drunk," said Edgar, "and we want to talk with you, and we must sober you up." "I am sober!" cried Nap. "Oh, no," said Edgar, "you are just half and half." So he poured the water over him and it went down his neck. Ugh! it was cold. "I think that will do," said Mr. Gudger. "Now, Nap, you look alive and listen to what I say. This young gent that has just done you a kindness, making you a sober man,—and you must stop that swearing, Nap, or we'll duck you again,—he gave you a hundred dollars for you to get out of the country and stay out. Didn't he, Nap?" Nap was shivering. He made no answer. He was sullen. "Now, Nap, we're not here to play with you. You say, did he or didn't he?" "Where have you brung me?" demanded Nap, savagely, "where am I?" "Nap, Nap," said Mr. Gudger, patiently, "did he or didn't he?" "Yes, he did," said Nap. "Good. He gave you a hundred to stay away, did he?" "Yes, he did."

"Well, Nap, you are here again, ain't you?" "Ugh! I'm freezing." "Nap, are you here?" "Yes, I am." "Good. Now Nap, explain yourself. Excuse your conduct. Take the floor and make your speech." "I took the hundred and I meant to stay away," said Nap, "but I got to drinking, and when you get to drinking, do you know what you are doing? So I just drifted back. And here I am, and money's all gone. And I've got to have another hundred, and either you or Mrs. Morris has got to smoke for it. You give me another hundred, and I'll steer clear of drinking. But I've got to have another hundred to do my steering with."

FOR CHILDREN

Nothing, that comes in a bottle, is more important for children than Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil.

And "important" means that it keeps them in even health. Whenever they show the least disturbance of even balance of health, it promptly restores them.

It is to be used as a food, whenever their usual food does not quite answer the purpose of food.

Little Helpers.*

Whether his work be pure, and whether it be right —Prov. 20:11.

The church has scarcely begun to awake to the possibilities that lie dormant in her children. Little folks are always ready to do something. They have not yet begun to exercise the worldly prudence that chills the hearts of grown people. They are innocent, happy, bright and winsome. Let us give them a still wider place in the affections and in the activities of the church.

SMALL THINGS.

We are prone to ignore small things, when we have a work to do. To be sure, they ought never to content us, neither ought we to despise them. A very little fire may kindle a very great conflagration. A spark, itself scarcely visible, may blow up a man-of-war. It is said that at the launching of a great ship, the engines failed to move her, when a little fellow ran out from the crowd, and putting both hands against her, began to push! Of course the crowd laughed, but the ship moved! Perhaps the little fellow furnished just the ounce of additional energy needed. Many a church is looking to the talented and the wise among her members for succor, when she would do better to enlist the children. They will obey orders; they will follow their leader; they will win their way where their "elders and betters" might fail. Remember the children, they are men in the making.

And has not God always wrought by little things? When has He demanded great armies and proud fleets? The Master set a little child in the midst and made him the type of the kingdom of heaven.

"Little things,
On little wings,
Bear little souls to heaven."

CHRIST'S PARTNER

When the little boy took his lunch of five loaves and two fishes and went out that day, little did he dream that the Master would take him into partnership And yet, when the hungry people are sat down, thousands of them, the Lord took that lunch and blessed it, and gave to the crowd, and they all ate and were filled, and the fragments left made twelve basketfuls. Surely we may make a parable of this. If one lad could thus be used to feed five thousand with the bread that perisheth, why may not children be used to bear the bread of heaven to famishing souls?

This is precisely what the church tries to do, with her Children's Days. The first Lord's day in June, month of roses, is meant to be a children's festival for heathen missions. On this day all the little ones enter into partnership with Christ, and put their gifts into His hands, that He may bless them and distribute to the famishing souls abroad. Who will dare deny the little ones this sweet privilege?

CHILDREN'S PRAISE.

Children can praise the blessed Master, with pure hearts and fragrant lips. Who does not love to hear their fresh voices, in the familiar strains of our hymns, rising jubilantly on the vibrant air, as artless and as sweet as the birds? And yet, when they shouted and sang His praises in the temple, the chief priests and the scribes were angry, and wanted Him to rebuke them. Christ had to remind them of their own Scripture—"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." Immediately after this incident Matthew says, "And He left them"; why should He stay any longer with religionists who had no sympathy with children, who were angry when they praised the Messiah?

*Prayer-meeting Topic for May 29.

Walking one day through a London slum Thackeray heard the sound of music. Following it, he soon came upon the singers, a little huddled group sitting on the curb; and what do you think they sang there in that squalor and wretchedness? "There is a happy land, far, far away." And as Thackeray thought how very far away it must be, the tender-hearted cynic burst into tears. And yet, shall we not thank God for the blissful ignorance and confiding innocence of children? May the time never come when the world will be robbed of its children; and again, may the time never come when they will no longer sing. Children's Day in the church ought to be a larger and better day than it now is. And every home ought to have a "Children's Day" about twice a week. We should sing more in our homes, and encourage our children to join us.

For, after all, the church of to-morrow is to come forth from the children now playing and laughing about us.

"Through the harsh voices of our day,
A low, sweet prelude finds its way;
Through clouds of doubt and creeds of fear,
A light is breaking, strong and clear.

That song of love, now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star;
That light, the breaking day, which tips
The golden spired Apocalypse."

PRAYER.

Give us, O Lord, the purity of heart and unselfishness of purpose that mark little children. We cannot thank Thee enough for their prattling voices, their pattering feet, their chubby hands, their quaint endearments. Lord, bless them, and save them, and make them strong for the burdens they shall bear, the battles they must fight, and at last gather them, and all thy tired children, with the lambs of the upper fold, through Christ Jesus, our Savior. Amen.

Summer Homes.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m , arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

Jesus Our Great High Priest.

This is a fitting lesson to follow that of the coming of the Holy Spirit. By the wonderful phenomena of the day of Pentecost, the disciples were assured of the exaltation and coronation of Jesus as the King of Glory. They knew, too, that he was now the Mediator between God and man. Peter ended his argument before the multitude in Jerusalem with the words, "Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye crucified both Lord and Christ." Unto him they must bow in obedience, and through him they might have freest access to the Father. Henceforth, as Jesus had told them during his earthly ministry, they were to ask for everything in his name. They went forth and preached redemption through his blood unto all men, both Jew and Gentile, both Greek and barbarian.

But it was difficult for the Jewish Christians to realize that their old religion, with its impressive ritual and solemn sacrifices, was abolished. Together with their practice of the simple ordinances of the church many of them continued to observe the rites of Judaism, and thus were in danger of lapsing again into mere disciples of Moses. To check this tendency, and to show once for all that the gospel had come as the fulfillment of the law, this epistle was written, whether by Paul, as is generally supposed, or by some other, we shall not attempt to decide. It was evidently written while the temple was yet standing, and therefore before 70 A. D. It was plainly penned by one who was equally familiar with both religions, and who understood clearly the relations they sustained to each other, as type and antitype.

The earlier chapters of the epistle are given to the contrast between the angels, through whom the first covenant was given, and Jesus, the mediator of the second; Moses, the faithful servant in God's house, and Jesus, the faithful Son over the house; the Aaronic priesthood, which was temporary and faulty, and that of Jesus, which was eternal and perfect, and the old and new covenants, between which the same sharp distinctions were drawn. In our present lesson the work of Christ as our High Priest is under consideration. Let us note a few points wherein our divine High Priest surpasses those of the old religion.

His priesthood rests not upon his descent from any family or tribe of earth. He sprang not from the tribe of Levi, of whom all the Jewish priesthood were descendants, but from Judah. Like Melchizedek, in Old Testament story, whose parentage is unknown to any earthly record, our High Priest comes from out the mysterious realms of the unseen world above. He is a denizen of heaven, appearing for a little time upon the earth, and then ascending once more to the land of his eternal dwelling place. As the Son of God he is the Supreme Intercessor, the one True Mediator, who can have no successor, since he eternally abides.

He is "a high priest of good things to come." His intercession secures for us not the partial and formal blessings of our God, leaving half unsatisfied the deepest longings of the penitent heart, but a thorough cleansing of the heart from the love of sin, a purging of the conscience from its guilt, and a redeeming of the life from its destructive power. Christ therefore entered upon his priesthood, not by the way of the Jewish tabernacle, with its material altar, brazen laver, golden candlestick, table of shewbread and smoking incense; but through the sanctuary of a life where sacrifice and holiness were the unbroken habit of the soul, where the light of truth, and the bread of love, and the fragrance of prayer made glorious the one ideal human character the world has ever seen. Nor did he take with him into the unseen holiest of all the blood of any other victim than himself. He was both priest and victim, giving himself freely for us all, offering himself as the Lamb of God, without spot, through whose atoning blood a guilty race might hope to recover the favor of a righteous and holy God.

The priesthood of Jesus tells us that the true dwelling place of God is in heaven, rather than in any earthly sanctuary, built with hands. His only altar is the reverent human heart, whose incense of praise and prayer is a sweet savor unto him. Our High Priest needed to make but the one atonement, for it was the complete offering of a perfect human life. When Jesus ended his ministry among men, and ascended to the throne of God, bearing his perfect humanity into the presence of the Father, the work of reconciliation, so far as divine love could effect it, was accomplished. He had borne the sins of men as a willing victim, that he might show to the children of disobedience the Father's infinite love, and woo them back to trust and love him. His sacrifice was not the price, but the proof, of the Father's mercy. Not to avert God's wrath from man, but to convert "the children of wrath," or "wrathful children," into loving and obedient ones, was his purpose.

By the solemn sanctions of death, and the judgment that follows, we are exhorted to cling close to our High Priest. "It is appointed unto men once to die." We needed no revelation to assure us of this. Four thousand years of human history had made this an unquestioned and unwelcome fact. "After this cometh judgment." Scarcely did we need to be told this, for is not the conscience a sure teacher of this fact? Can the wicked hope to escape accountability for their evil deeds, or hath a righteous man ever suffered for his innocence without feeling that, somewhere and somehow, there would come to him a recompense? The gospel comes to confirm these experiences and intuitions of man. It tells us that, as Christ once died for the sins of men, and has gone to bear them upon his heart before the very throne of the Most High, as the Jewish high priest bare Israel upon his breastplate, so will he return to earth, bringing a full and glorious reward for all them that in faith and love await his reappearing. We bless thee, dear Savior, for the sweet assurance that thou art bearing us upon thy heart even now, in the presence of our heavenly Father. Cleansed by thy precious blood, and upheld by thy Holy Spirit of grace, we wait in hope and joy for thy coming.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 2.

How to Get Rid of Sin.

(1 John 1:5-10.)

Perhaps no one of the Twelve had so mastered the Savior's secret of cleansing a life as John. He was the beloved disciple; he was the loving disciple; he realized that love was the fulfilling of the law; he preached love in all his writings; and his very last message to his friends, neighbors, brethren, was, "Little children, love one another."

Here lies the power to oust sin. It is impossible to eject sin, as a landlord does an undesirable tenant. We are told that a landlord once threw a certain fellow out of the house, and had the place all thoroughly swept, painted, scrubbed and repapered; when, suddenly, along came the undesirable tenant with seven others worse than himself and took possession. The last perplexity of that landlord was worse than the first. Now the lesson of that story is not that the undesirable tenant should have been allowed in the first place to remain. But it is that the way to get rid of him was not violent ejection. Improve the neighborhood! If there's an evil thought in the mind, get in such a store of good ones that the undesirable rascal can't stand the company. If there's a constant bitterness creeping into the life, so fill the heart with love and goodness that the bitterness will be sweetened.

Physicians used to believe that the best cure for dyspepsia was to starve the patient. If anything got wrong with the stomach empty it and keep it empty. That certainly cures the disease; but it destroys the patient. It is about as sane as the idea that blood could be purified by letting it. We have now come to believe that all the organs of the body should be kept at work at healthful tasks. And this homely truth of the physical life is of a piece with all the thinking of our age. We believe now-a-days that the sanest way of dealing with our children is not to rob their lives of all brightness and joyous activities and bring them up as little ascetic puritans, but to fill their days full of happy, healthful and loving deeds. Jesus came not to destroy but to fulfill lives.

John uses the figure of light a great deal, and so did Jesus. Light is health-giving; it destroys noxious vapors. They that love the light are of the light; and for them the darkness will flee away. They that love darkness rather than light will find what they love. Fill the life then with light; light of knowledge, light of joy, light of love—most of all the light of love.

A minister told me the other day of a woman who sent for him to comfort her because her husband had gone wrong, was drinking, staying away from home, and was grown quite different from the bridegroom she had loved. Now the minister knew the character of both. Instead of comforting and petting that woman he said:

"Madam, it is your fault. You worry that man, you tease and tantalize and scold and snarl and make his home no place of joy for him. I know him. He's a good fellow. You need to make love to him and brighten his home instead of playing the Pharisee!"

The woman was astounded but, whether you believe it or not, she came to the church the next Sunday, so my friend told me.

What the husband needed to drive sin out of his heart was love: love from his wife and to his wife. What all of us need is just that very thing: love to one another, love to God. Fill the life full—of all possible nutritious and holy and happy activities, thoughts and feelings. There is more satisfaction in them—a vast deal—than in any other sort of activities, thoughts and feelings. And if we are full of good things the others will go away, for there will be no apartments to let.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Among our Advertisers.

Barclay Meador, Adv. M'gr.

From now until the opening of school in the fall much will be seen in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST concerning schools and colleges. Those located in Missouri and states adjacent will especially appear prominent.

Drury College at Springfield, which has made such marked progress under President Homer T. Fuller, in the seven years of his administration, has already engaged space in our advertising columns. Drury is in favor wherever known. Some of her graduates are in positions of high honor, and many of them are filling the humbler places with credit. It is well understood that nothing short of thorough work is expected of her students. Results justify such a standard. We are glad to be the medium through which the merits of such an institution are made known.

Of the names which are becoming familiar to the readers of both the religious and the daily papers in the south and the middle west, is that of J. F. Draughon. Only a few years ago, as a young man with life before him he started out to instruct young men and women in the art of book-keeping, penmanship, stenography and type writing and kindred branches. His first college was on wheels and in it he went from place to place and instructed the young people who came to him. Now Draughon's Practical Business Colleges are to be found in the following named cities: St. Louis, Nashville, Savannah, Montgomery, Little Rock, Shreveport, Fort Worth and Galveston.

It is conceded by all who are in a position to know that Prof. Draughon's success in the Business College work has been by far greater than that of any one else engaged in the same line of business. His superior course of instruction and his special facilities for securing positions are almost an off-set to competition where the merits of his work are known.

The St. Louis College is at 902 Olive St, in very commodious quarters. Though opened less than two years ago and in the midst of the long established colleges of the city, it has rapidly gained in patronage. Its success in preparing both young men and women for business positions is marked and in finding positions for them scarcely less so.

Mr. C J. Van Houten, who died recently in Algiers, rightfully deserved the title of prince of cocoa manufacturers. The house of Van Houten began business in Weesp, Holland, in 1817, having been launched on its great career by the father of the late proprietor. The son, by his skill, energy and inventive genius, brought the business to its present proportions. He had faith in the potency of printers' ink, and at one time advertised to the extent of $1,000,000 a year.

In the first advertising done in the United States, merely the name was displayed. People wondered what it signified, and some even suspected that all was not right with a certain advertising manager. The next month the familiar phrase, "Best and goes farthest," appeared. The third month brought forth the name of the article. Thus had it been thoroughly advertised and its sales given an impetus in a unique but an effective manner.

In 1889 the house was authorized by royal decree to assume the name "Royal Cocoa Factory." The factory, which covers an area of eighty-five acres, employs 3,500 people, the balance of the population of Weesp, 6,000 having been at some former time identified with the institution, This loyalty on the part of employer and employee tells a rare story of mutual regard. The children have no thought of ever getting employment elsewhere. The city possesses all the advantages of other places of its size—theatres, schools, hotels, etc., but everything is owned or controlled by the house of Van Houten, and no other factory is to be seen in the town. Mr. Van Houten was well known as an extensive traveler, having visited all parts of the world, and was in the United States at the time of the World's Fair. He was an extremely affable compamion, of a jovial nature, and clever at repartee. Music and the sciences were his pleasure and recreation. He was never married.

Among the newer names in our columns is that of Sutcliffe & Co., the great Southern mail order house at Louisville, Ky. They have just bought out the entire stock, good will and business of Alex. L. Semple & Co., of the same city. This latter concern was one of the oldest and best known in the entire south, having been established in 1838. Mr. Wm. Griffith, the son of Joseph Griffith, the original founder of the business, will be with Sutcliffe & Co., in the future. They sell practically everything that man, woman or child could want, at prices that are remarkably low. For the summer season they will carry a full line of out-door sporting and vacation goods, including camping outfits and supplies. Our readers may send their money to Sutcliffe & Co., with confidence. Their large general and various special catalogues may be had on request.

DYE

At the home of her father, Mr. Wood Riggs, near Constance, Ky., Mrs. Kittie Dye departed this life on March 28, 1901. She had been a patient sufferer of consumption for some time. She was all that was pure and good and having been a devoted member of the Christian Church from girlhood was prepared to meet her Savior. She was married on March 20, 1892, to Mr. Michael Dye. To this union were born two children, a son and daughter that died in its early infancy. She leaves her son, her husband, her father and three sisters, together with a large number of friends and relatives to love and cherish her memory. She was born July 9, 1871. The funeral was conducted at her father's home by their pastor, Rev. Jones.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease, that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Book Notes.

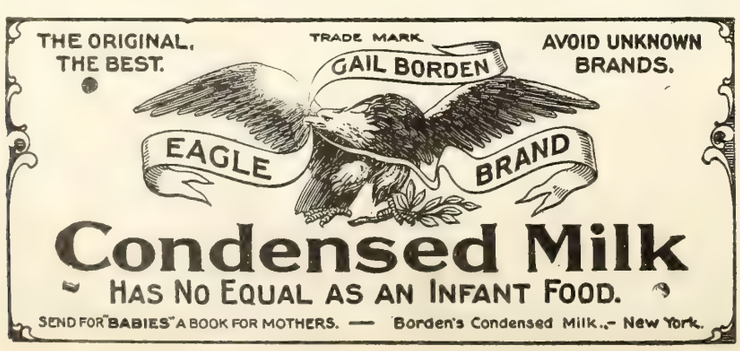
W. F. Richardson, Kansas City, writes us: "Every family among the Disciples ought to have The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. Its story of the beginnings and progress of our movement and its present status, especially as to the development of our missionary work, is most admirably told, and its reading will make more intelligent Disciples of old and young. He who begins to read the fascinating chapters of Pres. Loos, with which the volume opens, will hardly lay the book down till he has read it through."

Whatever other books you may purchase this summer, you should by all means secure The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. He is a pretty sorry specimen of a Disciple who does not desire to have an intelligent understanding of the history of our movement, and there has never been issued a history of this movement worthy to be compared to this late volume. It is a book that can not be too highly commended or praised, nor can we too strongly urge its purchase upon our patrons. It is a volume of over 500 pages, well bound in cloth and the price is $2.00.

In a review of What Is Your Life, in the Christian Courier, M. M. Davis writes: "The book takes in a wide range, but never fails to touch your life at some vital point. . . . It gives me genuine pleasure to commend this book to our readers because I know it to be a book of merit." The same tone characterizes all reviews and comments on this book. Mr. Russell has reason to be proud of the book he has given us. It deserves to be circulated by tens of thousands. If you have not yet read it, send for it without delay, and when you have read it, give it or lend it to some young man or woman. You may thereby change the course of a life. The price is $1.00.

The Liberty Tribune, of Liberty, Mo., in a notice of A. B. Jones' new work, The Spiritual Side of Our Plea, says: "The mechanical work on the book will sustain the high reputation of the house whose imprint it bears. . . . This book is full of strong meat. It will prove interesting and helpful to preachers, old and young, and to all other thoughtful and spiritual men and women. . . . In its logic it is as clear as the sun; in its pleadings for deeper spiritual living it is as refreshing as the breath of a spring morning." This is none too high praise. The volume is one of those rare books which actually help and uplift the reader. Many books entertain; some books instruct. There are all two few that make men better, broader and nobler. The price of the work is $1.50.

The following is from G A Faris, editor of the Christian Courier: "Elijah is the title of one of the most helpful books we have had the pleasure of reading in a long time. It was written by our own M M. Davis in his naturally smooth and fascinating style and published by the Christian Publishing Co. . . . The character of Elijah is beautifully and graphically pictured and each of the thirteen scenes in his life is followed by an application to our present conditions. It is brimfull of interest and will be helpful to all who read it." Price, 75 cents.



"What Is Your Life."

This is the title of a beautiful and timely book of 316 pages just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and it shows that this company understands the art of book-making. The author is not a stranger to the reading public. His "Wonders of the Sky," also a late book, has given him a most favorable introduction. His name is W. J. Russell, our pastor at Rushville, Indiana.

The book takes in a wide range, but never fails to touch your life at some vital point. After a vigorous opening chapter on his title, he follows with helpful chapters on the value of time, bodily health, intellectual and moral culture, character building, enthuisasm, business life, good citizenship, influence, pure speech, reading, amusements, and love, courtship and marriage

After these thirteen most helpful studies he concludes his book with four other studies more distinctly religious: "What is a Christian?" "The Bible Life's Great Guide Book;" "What Think Ye of Christ?" and "The Golden Steps Heavenward."

It gives me genuine pleasure to commend this work to our readers because I know it to be a book of merit.—M. M. Davis, Christian Courier.

IT is a time of college commencements. The subject of education will be in the air for the next month. It needs to be a strong constituent of our American atmosphere, until it shall precipitate in larger endowments and better equipments. It will require all that both education and religion can do to save this nation, now making such rapid strides in material wealth, from bondage to its prosperity. Education liberalizes, widens the horizon, opens up the world of art, of science, of literature, and gives the mind and heart a taste and a hunger for something higher than stocks and bonds, gold and silver, offices and their honors and emoluments. He who gives his money wisely to colleges and universities is helping to disenthrall the nation from a gross commercialism and to multiply the number of its citizens who, by the development of their intellectual and moral faculties, confer distinction upon their country and add to its true glory and wealth. The men and women who are moulding the youth of the country into noble manhood and womanhood are among the world's truest benefactors and deserve the hearty sympathy and support of all who love their country and their fellow men.

The Reformation of the XIXth Century

Being the first complete, authentic, adequate history of the beginnings, development and progress of the Disciples of Christ that has ever been published. It stands without a rival, in a class by itself. This work, which has been long expected, has just been issued, and has been hailed with delight by all those who have an intelligent, active interest in our great cause. The chapters devoted to the beginnings and early history of the movement are especially valuable, being written by men who were intimately associated with Campbell and the "fathers," and who were, themselves, actors in those early events and scenes. This history was published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during 1899, but has since been entirely revised, rewritten and amplified.

These two great books, the one dealing with our principles and the other with our history, are properly companion books, and should stand side by side in the library of every one who cares to comprehend "our plea." They should be placed in every home among the Disciples of Christ. There can be no question but that these are the most important volumes in all our distinctive literature, and we believe we are justified in feeling proud that we are the publishers of two such splendid works. Both works were planned and edited by J. H. GARRISON, editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We especially urge every preacher, who has not already done so, to speedily obtain both of these volumes. Again and again have we heard preachers say of The Old Faith Restated, "It has helped me more than any other ten books I possess." The second and later work is equally valuable. Both are large, handsome volumes, of 456 and 514 pages, respectively.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxviii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, May 30, 1901. No. 22.

Current Events.

Porto Rican Tariff Cases. The Supreme Court has handed down its long-awaited decision in regard to the colonial tariff cases. For several months the court has had under consideration a number of cases involving the right of the government to collect duty on goods imported from Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines after these islands passed into the possession of the United States. The opinions handed down do not concern all the cases, but primarily only those in regard to imports from Porto Rico. In brief, the court held that duties could not be collected on Porto Rican imports under the Dingley law, but that Congress had a right to enact a special law imposing such a tariff. In other words, the main contention of the administration that the constitution does not follow the flag and that Congress has plenary power to govern acquired territory, is sustained. The cases decided are divided into two classes and two decisions were handed down: first, cases involving the validity of tariff collections under the Dingley law after the treaty of Paris and before the passage of the Foraker Porto Rican tariff bill; second, those arising out of cases occurring after the passage of the Porto Rican tariff bill and involving the constitutionality of that enactment and the general question whether or not the constitution follows the flag. In the first case, it was decided that the Dingley law did not apply to Porto Rico after its annexation under the treaty of Paris because that law explicitly states that its tariff schedule is for goods imported from "foreign countries." Chief Justice Marshall and Justice Storey defined a foreign country as "one exclusively within the sovereignty of a foreign nation and without the sovereignty of the United States." Porto Rico therefore ceased to be a foreign country when the treaty of Paris was ratified, and the Dingley law can not apply to it. All duties which were paid under protest within this period must therefore be returned. This opinion was written by Justice Brown and was concurred in by Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Brewer, Harlan and Peckham.

The Constitution Does Not Follow the Flag. The second part of the Supreme Court's decision is by far the more important. Although Porto Rico is not foreign territory, it is held that this does not make it an integral part of the United States as regards the constitution and the tariff. Domestic territory is divided into the United States proper and the possessions of the United States. The constitution applies only to the former and our insular possessions can be called a part of the United States only in the latter sense. Congress has therefore a right to hold and govern territory indefinitely without regard either to ultimate statehood or to the provisions of the constitution. It is in the exercise of this right that the Porto Rican tariff bill, the Hawaiian territorial government act and the Spooner amendment, giving the President power to organize a civil government in the Philippines, have been enacted. The administration's policy is therefore substantially sustained so far as its constitutionality is concerned. On both of these decisions the court stood five to four and its division was somewhat remarkable. Justice Brown, who wrote both opinions, was the only member who was in both majorities. Of the eight other members of the Supreme Court, four held that the collection of duty on imports from Porto Rico was legal both before and after the passage of the special tariff bill, and four held that it was illegal both before and after. If there is any inconsistency in the two majority opinions as given above, it must be remembered that, with the exception of Justice Brown, the opinions were supported by entirely different persons.

Croesus Out-Croesused. Probably no benefaction on record has ever been received with such surprise, such bewildered astonishment, as Mr. Carnegie's recent gift of $10,000,000 to the four universities of Scotland. The Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen and St. Andrews have a long and honorable history, but it includes no record of such bounty as this. No wonder it has caused a great gasp of astonishment throughout the United Kingdom. The money is to be used for making the Scottish universities free to all Scotchmen. But the canny Scots, however much surprised at the magnificence of the gift, are still, with the instinct of their race, apprehensive of evil. The fear has been expressed that, when university education is made free, the number of students may be so increased that the present endowments will be inadequate and it may be necessary to appeal to the public for more money. What a horrible possibility! Think of Harper or Hadley or Eliot hesitating to accept $10,000,000 for fear it might compel them later to "appeal to the public for more money." They welcome any excuse for appealing to the public for money. The Scots will undoubtedly accept the gift, but not without misgivings as to its possible effect on their educational system. One of the most influential Scottish papers, the Edinburgh Scotsman, fears that, when the universities are made free, it will be only a question of time when secondary education also must be made free, and it seems to regard that as a great disaster. Think of that! Fearing that it may become necessary to make the common schools free to the public. If Mr. Carnegie's gift shall, as the Scotsman apprehends, lead to a complete system of free education, it will confer a benefit out of proportion even to the vast sum which it costs. Chauncey Depew has recently calculated that King Crœsus, who is commonly supposed to have been a person of considerable financial resources, could not have had at most more than $9,000,000—not as much as Mr. Carnegie has given away in one lump and that within six weeks after giving away twice as much in smaller amounts. Crœsus was doubtless all right for his day, but in this generation he would have been looked upon as a mere lamb if he had ventured into Wall Street, or as a minor donor if he had become a patron of education.

The South Carolina Senators. Just as pacification seems to have been almost accomplished in China, South Africa and the Philippines, and the gates of the Temple of Janus stood a fair chance of being closed for the summer vacation, war breaks out afresh in a new spot. South Carolina is the seat of hostilities and Senators McLaurin and Tillman are the combatants. Both of these South Carolina senators profess to be pure and unadulterated Democrats but neither admits the other's claim and they differ upon almost every point of public policy. McLaurin is a gold Democrat and an expansionist. Tillman is an anti-expansionist and a Bryanite. Relations between the two have been growing more and more strained for several weeks and a crisis was reached when they held a joint debate at Gaffney, S. C., last Saturday. It was less a debate than a free interchange of epithets. After they had accused each other of everything from petty larceny to high treason and had each declared that the other was misrepresenting rather than representing the state, they agreed to resign their senatorships and put the matter to the test of a new election. Accordingly in a joint letter to the governor they both resigned to take effect September 15. In South Carolina senators are practically chosen by a popular primary, the legislature merely ratifying its nomination. So it will be a direct appeal to the people. Both will contest for the long-term senatorship formerly held by Senator Tillman and other candidates who may enter the race are requested to try only for McLaurin's short term. Tillman is hastily getting his rapid-fire, breech-loading pitchfork ready for action and will fight a fast campaign all summer. The precarious condition of McLaurin's health may prevent him from making an equally active fight.

Paying Tribute to Europe. During the past few years the public has become pretty well accustomed to the constant reports that the balance of trade is increasingly in our favor, that the exports from the United States exceed the imports by several million dollars annually. It naturally occurs to one to wonder how we get the pay for all these things which we export, since the amount of goods and money sent out of a country is always greater than the amount of goods and money brought in. An authoritative answer to that question has recently been given by the Bureau of Statistics. The fact is that we are still paying tribute to Europe in ways which do not appear in the statistics of trade, but which equalize this vast balance of trade. For many years four causes have operated to settle the account. In the first place, during the first period of our rapid development in railroad building, large quantities of American securities were marketed abroad and the money which would otherwise be coming home to pay for our excesses of exports, remains in Europe to pay the interest on these securities. In the second place, much foreign capital is invested in this country and its dividends and earnings must be paid. In the third place, the great bulk of our exports is carried in foreign vessels and the payment of freight therefore takes money out of the country. Finally, the annual rush of thousands of American tourists to Europe means the expenditure abroad of millions of dollars that have been earned at home. These four items which do not appear as affecting the balance of trade do affect the balance of credit. In addition to these items it is to be noted that in the last few years American securities abroad have been canceled and foreign securities have been sold in this country to the extent of many millions. All these payments by America to Europe are made, not by sending cash, but by balancing them against Europe's indebtedness to us for the excess of what she gets from us over what she sends to us. This accounts for the fact that we are apparently year after year sending abroad more American goods than we are getting paid for.

To Explain the Confession. After several days of lively discussion, the Presbyterian General Assembly, which is still in session in Philadelphia, came to a unanimous agreement on the question of creed revision. The minority report, representing the ultra-conservative view, was voted down and for the majority report, the substance of which we have already printed, a substitute was adopted. The measure which was approved by the Assembly provides for the appointment of a committee to prepare and submit to the next Assembly "a brief statement of the reformed faith expressed as far as possible in untechnical terms. The said statement is to be prepared with a view to its being employed to give information and a better understanding of our doctrinal beliefs and not with a view to its becoming a substitute for or an alteration of our confession of faith." The committee is further instructed to prepare amendments to certain sections of the confession "so as more clearly to express the mind of the church, with additional statements concerning the love of God for all men, missions and the Holy Spirit, it being understood that the revision shall in no way impair the integrity of the system of doctrine set forth in our confession and taught in the Holy Scripture." The unanimous agreement to this measure gives promise of a happy outcome to the discussion and certainly the spirit which was manifested throughout this very trying debate is worthy of all commendation. From the standpoint of an outsider, however, it does not appear probable that all the difficulties growing out of the Westminster Confession will be settled by this simple means. The resolution assumes the absolute doctrinal correctness of the Confession, but admits that its language is not sufficiently definite to prevent misunderstanding. The trouble, then, grows merely out of the failure of so many persons to understand what the Confession really means. This seems to us a violent assumption. By this method the reasonable demands of the moderate progressives can be satisfied only by reading into the old creed ideas which nobody has been able to find there during the past two centuries. As it appears to an outsider, there would have been a better chance of a satisfactory outcome if the re-statement had started with a recognition of the fallibility of the Westminster divines instead of an assumption of their inerrancy.

A Cool Reception. When Sir Alfred Milner arrived in England last week he received what was scheduled to be a great ovation, but it lacked warmth. There had been a good deal of popular doubt as to whether he was being brought home from South Africa for promotion or to be replaced by a more efficient man, but the preparations for doing honor to him on his arrival indicated clearly that he was still in favor with the government. Cabinet ministers, peers of the realm and members of Parliament came to meet him as if he came in triumph from a completed work, and the King raised him to the peerage. But in spite of all these demonstrations of official approval, the public, having its own ideas about the value of Sir Alfred's services, paid him very little honor. The crowd which met him at Southampton was distinctly slim and its hurrahs were as thin and unconvincing as the tumult of a stage populace consisting of five supes and three scene-shifters. When the British forces were in sore straits a year and a half ago and there was desperate fighting to be done and beleaguered cities to be relieved, there was plenty of popular enthusiasm for the war. But it is hard for "the man in the street," however jingoistic may be his natural impulses, to maintain any proper degree of enthusiasm over a war which no longer presents a spectacle of heroism and at the same time is wretchedly expensive. The British public is as loyal to its government as any people, but it is too much to expect them to stay enthusiastic for two years over a war of this sort whatever may be the merits of the case. Besides, Sir Alfred Milner's mission in South Africa, which was to assist Gen. Kitchener in making peace with the Boers, was a flat failure and the worse, very likely, for his participation in it. Chamberlain, Rhodes and Milner are the three Englishmen in whom the Boers have absolutely no confidence and Gen. Kitchener will have a better chance to patch up terms of peace alone than with the aid of any of them.

Prof. Herron, of "Social Apostolate" and divorce court fame, was married on Monday to his patroness, Miss Rand.

Brevities. Senator Quay has publicly stated that he will retire from politics at the end of his present senatorial term. It is not often that we can say "Amen" to his political utterances as heartily as we do to this.

King Otto, of Bavaria, who has for some time been insane, is reported as worse. He is Bavaria's second insane king within fifty years.

A concerted movement of the British forces in the northern part of the Transvaal is reported to have resulted in the capture of a thousand Boers and a large quantity of supplies.

The native judges who have been put on the bench in the Philippines have not proved a success. They are well enough educated, but their idea of justice is Spanish.

The Sultan of Turkey has abandoned his contention for the abolition of the foreign post offices in Constantinople and besides will apologize for detaining and opening Austrial and Russian mail-bags.

The Shah of Persia is said to be dying. The Czar will send condolence and flowers and meanwhile will keep his eye open for a chance to shove his boundary along a few versts while nobody is looking.

The episode in May corn is over and Mr. Phillips, the successful young speculator, is said to have cleared about a million dollars. It is the sort of money-making which must always be accompanied by an equal amount of money-losing for some one else.

Mrs. McKinley's condition has improved sufficiently to make the long journey from San Francisco to Washington. The trip has been made with no considerable stops and the party is by this time nearing the capital.

Ex-Gov. Tanner, of Illinois, died suddenly last week. He had been prominently identified with the politics of his state for twenty years and was a man of considerable strength, especially as an organizer. He was in no sense a statesman, but was a capable machine politician.

It seems practically certain that on Tuesday of this week the Cuban Constitutional Convention will virtually accept the Platt amendment. It has already rejected by a vote of 19 to 9 the minority report recommending the rejection of the amendment.

The Morgan-Hill syndicate may soon control railroad and steamship lines forming a complete belt around the world. It already has a line of trans-Pacific steamers, railroads which cross the continent, and the newly acquired Leyland line from New York to European ports and Alexandria. There is needed only a steamship line from Alexandria through Suez Canal to Hong Kong.

The English yacht "Shamrock II," owned by Sir Thomas Lipton, which was entered for the international yacht race, had a serious and dangerous accident last week in a storm on the Solent. King Edward and the owner were on board at the time but escaped unhurt. Sir Thomas, who is highly esteemed in America as a sportsman of the best type, has requested a postponement of the race to enable him to make necessary repairs on his boat.

Are We Ready to Advance?

We say there are a million and more people in this country content to be known as Christians or Disciples of Christ, and who are committed to the plea for Christian unity and to the work of restoring the Christianity of the New Testament. That seems a strong army and we naturally feel that we may expect much from its operations in the next decade. But there are some questions to be considered before we are prepared to estimate the probable conquests of this army a million strong.

It is thought to be wise, when a great campaign is impending, for the commanding general to carefully inspect his army, consider the health of his soldiers, their equipment, their discipline, their food-supply and the efficiency of the officers who have immediate charge of them. Something like this would seem to be necessary on our part in planning for an aggressive campaign against the powers of darkness. We have the word of Jesus Christ for authority that it is wise before going to war to consider well our own strength and weakness as compared with the enemy with which we are to come in contact, and over whom we hope to gain the victory. Following are some of the questions which seem to us to demand the careful consideration of local churches, of district, state and national boards and conventions:

1. About what proportion of our membership are so thoroughly converted to Christ as to feel the obligation daily to live and to labor in harmony with His will?

2. How many of them have a clear knowledge of the principles of our religious reformation, and know why they are what they are?

3. How many are receiving anything like continuous, systematic instruction and training in the things of the kingdom of God, and are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the truth.

4. In how many homes is there regular religious instruction and worship, where the children are being trained for God?

5. How many of these million reformers take any religious journal urging this reformation, and acquainting them with what is being done, with what has been already accomplished, and with what is being planned for the future, so as to enlist them in active sympathy and co-operation?

6. How many are actually contributing, with regularity, according to their ability, to the support, not only of their local church, but to our missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises?

Other questions might be asked, but these will suffice for the present. When we have sat down and carefully considered these questions, we will be prepared to make something like a proper discount from what might be expected of us from our numerical strength. A faithful probing in the direction of these questions would also moderate any spirit of boasting that might be indulged in, and would certainly indicate, unmistakably, some lines of work which are greatly needed to fit us for a successful, aggressive movement against the wiles of the devil. It will not suffice for us to compare ourselves with others and to feel content if we conclude that we are as good as our religious neighbors. We are committed to a very high standard of religious life. How do we compare with that standard? That is the question we must face, individually and collectively.

Numbers is something, of course, but it is not the chief thing. Thoroughness of conversion, consecration to Christ, unity of effort, enlightened zeal, a membership whose lives illustrate the truths for which we plead, congregations whose order and worship, discipline and activities, furnish concrete examples of what we are trying to realize—these are the factors of supreme value. Charged with a mission so important, as we believe, to the triumph of Christianity in the world, let us not do ourselves and the truth we hold in trust the injustice of overlooking these essential conditions of a successful advance against the forces of evil.

Historical Method in Bible Study.

The organization of the International Sunday-school Committee and the introduction of the system of uniform topics was undoubtedly the most important improvement that has ever been made in Sunday-school methods. The present system of lessons, however, has two great defects which are now becoming so generally recognized that the Committee will doubtless soon take some step toward removing them. The first, which is inseparable from an arrangement which has one lesson for students of every grade, is a lack of proper adjustment of the lesson to the attainments of the pupils. Every teacher feels this and knows that the difficulty is only partially removed by the use of graded lesson helps. The lessons themselves must be graded, so that primary teachers will not be driven to distraction by lessons on the doctrines in the epistles, and advanced classes given Bible stories which, in the hands of the average teacher, can only become texts for arid and unprofitable homilies which add nothing either to knowledge of the Bible or interest in it.

In the second place, the present system fails to recognize that a large part of the Bible is history and must be taught as such. It is true, of course, that the ultimate object of the Bible-school is not instruction in historical facts but the inculcation of religious and moral truths. It is also true that the ultimate object of all education, whether in science or literature or history or any other so-called secular subject, is the development of character; but this object cannot be attained by a method which substitutes moralizing for instruction. Similarly a system of Bible teaching cannot, in the long run, be religiously and morally effective unless it fulfills this first condition—that it shall embody a rational method of historical instruction. The present practice of selecting as lessons a few verses here and a few verses there, to the practical exclusion of all that goes between, is wholly indefensible when applied to anything beyond the primary class. For the youngest pupils it is allowable to select those passages which are most picturesque and, to their minds, attractive, without regard to historical connection. But for all higher grades, a method which relegates nine-tenths of the narrative to comparative oblivion as "connecting links" outrages every known principle of historical instruction. Why should a method be applied to the study of the history of Israel which would be absurd if applied to the study of the history of England? No teacher of the latter subject would think of selecting half a page here and half a page there in Green's History, for example, as the subject for a minute exegesis, with a little easily-uttered moralizing at the end of every sentence and passing over the intervening pages and chapters hurriedly with a word or two about "connecting links."

With the next quarter, the study of Old Testament history will be begun at the beginning and it will be a good time for teachers to remember that telling the story of the few verses assigned as a lesson, with illustrative anecdotes and moral deductions, is not really teaching the lesson. Unless, as the outcome of this study, there is a more comprehensive and systematic acquaintance with the development of the Hebrew people and the gradual unfolding of God's purpose in their history, the work will not have accomplished what it should. The responsibility rests primarily with the teacher. The lessons as at present arranged do not encourage the employment of good historical method, but they do not render it impossible if the teacher be capable.

Preach the Gospel.

There is no evil easier to condemn than the evil of sensational preaching, and it is a real and lamentable evil which needs frequent rebuke. A little epidemic of criticism directed against sensationalism in the pulpit sweeps over the country periodically, often finding its most zealous advocacy strangely enough in the daily press, which is jealous of any encroachment upon what it considers its own proper domain. The criticism usually ends with the positive exhortation to the sensational preachers to quit their sensationalism and "Preach the Gospel," and no admonition could be more wholesome or more appropriate.

There is no question about the fact that there is only one thing to preach, and that the Gospel. But one is sometimes inclined to doubt whether those who so lightly deliver this comprehensive exhortation really understand all that is involved in their utterance. "Preach the Gospel." Surely, but the Gospel is a vast message. It is simple, but it is far-reaching. It may be preached in many ways. Apparently the only way in which the preacher to-day can meet the common idea of preaching the Gospel is to take a text and expound from it certain doctrines, enforcing them by appropriate illustrations and ending with practical applications.

If the preacher announces that he will preach on Browning's "Saul" or Tolstoy's "Resurrection" or on "Religious Conditions of To-day," there are always those who will cry out that this is not preaching the Gospel but preaching about literature and current topics, and the preacher is fortunate if he is not dubbed a sensationalist. But why? Browning's "Saul" is itself a sermon, an argument for divine love and personal immortality, and contains as much Gospel as any sermon which the preacher is likely to construct independently on that subject. Tolstoy's "Resurrection" is a sermon in the form of fiction on the duty of brotherly love toward all men. The story of it is simply illustrative like the anecdotes which all Gospel preachers employ. As for preaching on present religious conditions, it occurs to us that Christ very frequently made the religious conditions of his day the starting-point for preaching the Gospel.

By all means let us avoid sensationalism and let us avoid substituting lectures on literature or politics for the preaching of the Gospel. But it is well enough to bear in mind that one may find in a poem or a novel a forceful statement and illustration of Christian truth, the exposition of which is by no means a lecture on literature; and it is even possible, though more difficult, to treat of national affairs in the pulpit in a manner which will be really preaching the Gospel.

Notes and Comments.

It is well, no doubt, at times, to appeal to the element of fear in man's nature to turn him away from the paths of iniquity. The Scriptures are not without their terrific warnings against the consequences of sin. At the same time we think it is safe to say that the appeal to the higher motives is more effective as a rule, and should be more relied upon as a means of winning men to a better life. The old-fashioned preaching gave entirely too much emphasis to fire and brimstone and not enough to the love of God. In Parkman's "Jesuits in North America" he relates that "a Jesuit ordering pictures from France to use in the Huron mission orders many of souls in perdition in various styles. Of souls in bliss he thinks one will be enough!" This illustrates about the proportion of emphasis which has been given to the two classes of motives in the past. Sinai has its place in the process of saving men, but Calvary is the great drawing power by which men are to be saved.

"Anyone who travels much," said Phillips Brooks, "and sees the past and the present of the world on a large scale comes, I think, necessarily to attribute a wider and more solid power to sentiments and feelings, to affections, superstitions and antipathies in human history—things that seem shadowy and unreal—than he was used to do. What have they done? Nay, rather, what have they not done?" Nothing is more common, we think, than to underestimate the power there is in sentiments and feelings. In religion, in education, in government, in industrial enterprises, as well as in social and domestic life, they play an important part, and to overlook them is to neglect one of the strong factors in achieving success. Men are not governed so much by their heads as by their hearts, and sentiment is often more puissant than cold reason in determining one's course of action.

Our crude interpretation of the Bible and our failure to test even its utterances by the teaching and spirit of Christ have led many well-meaning people to cast unjust reflections on the character of the Almighty. "You do good to your friends," said Le Jeune to an Algonquin chief, "and burn your enemies. God does the same." There has scarcely been an atrocity committed among men that has not at times been justified by reference to the Bible. Slavery, polygamy, persecution, sectarianism, have all claimed the sanction of religion, and have sought to shelter themselves under the protection of the Bible. This all comes, of course, from an abuse of the Bible, and ignorance of the proper method of studying it—an ignorance, we regret to say, that is not wholly extinct.

It is a strange fact, which some one has noted, that "when the number of any public body exceeds forty or fifty, the whole assembly has an element of joyous childhood in it and each member revives at times the glad mischievous nature of his school-boy days." This is true, as every one has observed who has attended conventions of various kinds, whether political, educational or religious. Even some of our ministerial institutes become so hilarious that it requires a stern presiding officer to keep them within the limits of decorum. Every one is familiar with the fact that an anecdote which would scarcely provoke a smile in a small group will convulse a large body of men, including "grave and reverend seigniors" with uncontrollable laughter. This is probably the contagion of mirth. But however we may account for the fact, the fact remains, and the unknown author quoted above may be right in supposing that it is a revival of the "glad mischievous nature of school-boy days."

The Saturday Evening Post recalls the fact that when President McKinley was invited to visit Hawaii the point was raised that it was contrary to precedent for a president to leave the United States during his incumbency, and suggests that here is another knotty point for the Supreme Court to decide—whether or not Hawaii is part of the United States in this sense. The question can be settled without all that trouble. Whether the archipelago is a part of the United States or not, the most ardent expansionist certainly would not claim that the two thousand miles of Pacific ocean which one must cross to get to it is a domestic sea. If we are going to have the United States scattered around all over the globe, we must either annul the precedent which confines the chief executive within our boundaries, or buy up connecting strips of the high seas, or limit the president to one particular section of our dominion.

It is conducive to an all-round, dispassionate view of the amusement question to note what amusements other good people consider dangerous. The game of checkers has no particular sulphurous odor upon it for most of us, as some other games have, but a contemporary, in answering a querist who asks, "What should be done with an elder who plays checkers and maintains that there is no harm in it?" says: "The proper way would be not to have that kind of an elder. He should be required to give up the ministry or his checker-board. Think of Peter or Paul playing a game at checkers. Men who give the proper attention to preaching the Word have no time to waste with vain, worldly games." It is absurd, isn't it, to think of the apostle Paul playing checkers? But not more so than to think of him wearing a long-tailed black coat and white tie, or riding on a trolley car. A great many of these absurdities that are pointed out to us in such connection are not moral incongruities but mere anachronisms.

A new plan for Christian union is suggested by a contemporary representing a denomination which maintains that only the Psalms of David can be legitimately used as hymns in public worship of the church. If all denominations would give up their human and man-made hymns "by which divisions are perpetrated and their opposing doctrines are disseminated" and would use only the inspired hymn book, then peace and unity would prevail in the religious world. How easy it is to condemn things which common sense declares to be good by applying to them our good old phrase, "human and man-made." It is a low view of man which would condemn anything and everything simply because it is "human and man-made." No machine can be made fool-proof, and no maxim can be made proof against narrow interpreters.

That was a very hard hit against the city government of New York which Dr. Parkhurst gave it recently when he said: "There are more children started hellward by the city government every three months than are saved to God and decency by the churches in a year." We wonder if that isn't true in other cities than New York. If it is even approximately true, is there any much greater sin than for church members to be indifferent about their civic duties or to divide and neutralize their strength by partisan votes instead of concentrating it against the "hellward" tendencies the in city?

Dr. Lyman Abbott recently defined the New Theology as the belief in the universal Fatherhood and love of God and in His desire for the salvation of all men, so that if all men are not saved it is because God's purpose is frustrated. Some of the Universalists have quite unnecessarily hailed this as a triumph for their position. It would be if God had not created man as a creature who can frustrate His purpose in some particulars. In the matter of salvation, God has put it into the power of each man to block the divine plan so far as he is concerned.

Bishop Potter has been defending the ministers against the charge that they take too long vacations. The defense would scarcely be necessary in this part of the country, but all that he says about the laboriousness of the calling is quite true. Most ministers work seven days in the week, and their day's work is limited by no eight-hour law. "Two months' vacation is none too long for the average preacher." True. But how about the poor editor who has to get out fifty-two issues a year, vacation or no vacation?

A Presbyterian paper says, apropos of the revision controversy, that if a statement of belief is adopted it will have to have "more Calvinistic snap and definiteness" than some of the proposed substitutes. The present creed certainly does have a good deal of fire in it.

The Westminister confession is supposed to interpret the Bible, and the new statement is to explain the confession, but still each man must interpret the new statement for himself. Is the situation improved?

The Advance (Congregational) of Chicago makes a well-meant attempt to report the discussion of evolution at our Lexington Congress, and concludes by saying that "it was agreed with essential unanimity that the doctrine of scientific evolution is as a theory of religion untenable." Two criticisms may be passed upon this: First, that no one at the Congress any more thought of considering scientific evolution as a theory of religion than of so using the nebular hypothesis or the law of gravitation. It was a question of the compatibility of scientific evolution and Christian faith, not of the substitution of one for the other. Second, that while there was "essential unanimity" in the conclusions as to Christian faith, there was no unanimity as regards evolution.

Questions and Answers

I note your explanation of Hebrew 10:26, in your issue of April 18. The answer to my question is too general to meet the condition of mind of one who has stumbled and fallen over the passage. May not the meaning be that the Jews, to whom the letter was addressed, were accustomed, even after having accepted Christ, to resort to the sacrifices under the law for pardon when they had sinned, and that the writer tells such that having once received the knowledge of the truth, that is, having accepted Christ, there is no more sacrifice for sin required, but that, through Jesus Christ as Advocate, they are to seek and receive forgiveness of sin?

Homestead, Okla. R. S. Smedley.

The epistle certainly does teach what is stated by our brother, but the particular passage in question seems to deal with something more serious than a mistake concerning Jewish sacrifices. There seems to have been a disposition on the part of some of these Hebrew Christians to turn away from Christ after they had known the truth and to reject him. These are warned that when they have once "trodden under foot the Son of God" and have "counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing," there "remaineth no more a sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful expectation of judgment, and a fierceness of fire which shall devour the adversaries." This probably refers to deliberate apostates from Christ, who can no longer rely upon the sacrifice of Christ, nor upon any other to come after him. Christ is God's final appeal to men.

I have read with much interest Mr. John Augustus Williams' article in the Christian-Evangelist of last week on the "Infallibility of the Bible." He has shown us conclusively, I think, that there is no infallibility in the Bible. Now what I would like you to explain through the columns of the Christian-Evangelist is, What are poor, weak, sinful beings, as we are, to do? Are we to turn back to an infallible church composed of fallible men, or are we to rely upon nature, reason and intuition for our guide through this world of sin, sorrow and death? Please tell us. H. N. Allen.

Saginaw, Mich.

How would it do as a last resort, then, to turn to Christ as an infallible Savior, seeing that there is no infallible church and no infallible book? Is it too much to suppose that God intends to drive men to Christ, who alone can save, by refusing infallibility to all other men and to all aggregations of men and all the productions of men? The Bible is an infallible guide to salvation because it is an infallible guide to Christ, who alone is able to save. No prophet or apostle ever counted himself infallible, but their united testimony concerning the things that pertain to religion does point out the way of salvation so plainly that any earnest seeker after truth need not err therein. Roman Catholics have relied upon an infallible church, and later upon an infallible pope. Protestants have appealed to an infallible book, not always stopping to limit the special mission of the Bible, as inspired writers do, to the matter of salvation. Our appeal is to an infallible Christ, who alone is the object of faith and the Savior of men.

Recently when we had the Lord's Supper for our Sunday-school lesson there was in the notes on the same this statement: "This is the feast of the Passover." Please give proof of this statement.

C. S. Harmon.

We have not the notes at hand which are referred to, but we presume the remark quoted was intended to discriminate between the Passover and the Lord's Supper, which occurred together at the time the institution known as the Lord's Supper was introduced. It is generally understood, we believe, that the Passover feast was eaten one day ahead of the usual time that year for reasons growing out of the conjunction of events.

Editor's Easy Chair.

No one is wholly uninfluenced by his environment. Hence if there should appear any academic flavor in the Easy Chair this week it may readily be accounted for from the fact that these lines are written within the walls of a college. It is not a mere college building, with its bare recitation rooms and halls, but a real college home, with its parlors, reception rooms, sitting room, sleeping rooms, study rooms, and last but not least, its dining room, as well as recitation rooms, halls, etc. It is a college for young ladies. We have been permitted to look through some of the rooms of the young ladies, typical of all the others, and can but express our admiration and surprise at the up-to-date comforts and conveniences they contain. And then the broad hallways, the library, the parlor and reception rooms, elegantly furnished, complete an almost ideal home for young ladies while securing an education. Do not imagine we are at Wellesley or Vassar or any other eastern school. We are writing in one of the classic halls of Christian College in the Athens of Missouri—the beautiful town of Columbia.

What other kind of institution in all the world can draw together a body of as fine-looking young women as a college, particularly a Christian college? There is something about the pursuit of learning and the development of character that goes on with it, under Christian influences, that imparts a sort of supernal charm that is more than mere physical beauty. It is the mingling of the intellectual and the spiritual which gives to womanhood its crown of glory. It renews one's youth, somewhat, to come in contact with this fresh young life, when it is under the inspiration of high ideals and starting forth in life to do its share of the world's work. Especially does it renew and strengthen one's conviction in the transforming power of Christian education, to look upon these concrete illustrations of its influence in developing the intellect, cultivating the heart, beautifying the character, and in imparting high and worthy motives. What on earth or in heaven is to be compared with this character-building—this development and consecration of all our God-given faculties? This is the true aim and end of all education that is worthy of the name. Indeed, it is the true end of all institutions among men—homes, schools, churches, governments and every subordinate organization having a divine sanction in the beneficent character of its work. Everything antagonistic to this supreme end is antagonistic to the divine purpose, and should be abolished.

Not only is it true that the end crowns the work—Finis coronat opus—but it is perhaps a greater truth that the end gives direction, character and inspiration to the work. This makes it impossible for any education to adequately serve human needs that is not controlled and shaped by Christian motive. The end of all human and divine training is a perfected and glorified manhood and womanhood. Christianity alone furnishes a perfect ideal of character, and hence it alone can inspire any adequate education for man. We cannot limit our view of man to this world alone. He was intended to be a citizen of another world. His life is not completed here. He has aspirations, hopes and intuitions which reach out into the everlasting future. Education should at least furnish us with the ideal and motive of life, and should give us a start in that intellectual and moral development which has only its beginning here, but its sublime consummation in "the world to come." We are at best only fragments here of what God is seeking to make us, and will make us if we allow Him to have His way with us. In Jesus we see the complete man—the end which will crown all our work.

The little city of Columbia, capital of Boone, does not rank high among the cities of Missouri in population or in business, but it is and must remain the educational center of the state. This means that it is the center of the influences which mould the life of the people. The real wealth of a state consists not in material things, such as mines, manufactures, trade and commerce, but in the enlightenment—the mental and moral character—of the people. The State University is moving forward by leaps and bounds. The legislature is dealing more generously with it and the increase in its patronage and its growth in all that makes a real university have been remarkable and most gratifying. Christian College and Stephens College, both of them for young ladies, are located here, the latter being under the auspices of the Baptists. The magnificent new buildings of Christian College, together with the improved curriculum and the high degree of efficiency in the splendidfaculty which Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair have gathered about them, together with the atmosphere and order which pervade the school, easily place it among the leading institutions in this country for the education of young women. Add to these facts the additional one that we have $50,000 endowment for a Bible College for the benefit of these thousands of students who gather here and it is easy to see why Columbia holds so regal a place in promoting the future greatness of the state.

Chaplains of Congress

By Edward B. Bagby

Meeting a member of Congress on the street one day, I asked, "How is the new chaplain getting on?" "It is a case of the blind leading the blind," he answered.

If the political vision of our legislators is as darkened as the physical vision of their spiritual leaders, the country has some ominous pitfalls ahead.

Henry M. Conden, the present chaplain of the House of Representatives, lost his eyes in one of the battles of the Civil War. William H. Milburn, the Senate chaplain, became blind as the result of a blow received in childhood.

Dr. Milburn is better known in connection with this office than any of his predecessors. This is due to the fact that he was the youngest of the chaplains having been elected at the early age of twenty-two, to the length of his service, having held the office for eleven years in the House, and eight years in the Senate, and to the remarkable episode that secured his first election.

In 1845, as a Methodist circuit preacher, he was traveling on the Ohio river between Cincinnati and Wheeling. On the boat were a number of congressmen on their way to Washington. The young minister lingered near them hoping to catch some scintillations of wisdom and add to his store of knowledge. He was, instead, greatly shocked at their reckless speech and habits. They swore outrageously, drank villainous whiskey and played cards incessantly. On Sunday, Mr. Milburn was asked to preach. When he arose to speak, he saw the offending Congressmen in the audience. "Cry aloud and spare not," seemed the divine message to him that day. In closing his sermon he turned to the group of lawmakers and told them that he had supposed that the representatives of the nation at its capital were representatives of its character as well as of its intellect.

"But," he said, "if I am to judge the nation by you, I can come to no other conclusion than that it is composed of profane swearers, card players and drunkards. As a preacher of the gospel I am commissioned to tell you that unless you renounce your evil courses, repent of your sins, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with your hearts unto repentance you will certainly be damned."

He retired to his state-room reflecting upon his temerity in thus arraigning distinguished men, every one of whom was considerably older than himself, and wondering what the consequences would be. There was a rap at the door, a gentleman entered and said:

"I have been requested to wait on you by the members of Congress on board, who have had a meeting since the close of the religious exercises. They desire me to present this purse"—containing about $75—"as a token of their appreciation of your sincerity and fearlessness in reproving them for their misconduct; they have also desired me to ask if you will allow your name to be used at the coming election of chaplain of Congress. If so, they are ready to assure you an honorable election."

In the beginning of our legislative history the employment of chaplains met with considerable opposition. It was thought that this would provoke discord among rival sects and was not consistent with the absolute separation of church and state.

The American Congress met for the first time, Sept. 5, 1774. When Mr. Cushing moved that the sessions be opened with prayer, it was opposed by Mr. Jay, of New York and Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, on account of the different religious sentiments of the members.

Samuel Adams said, "I am no bigot and can hear a prayer from any gentleman of piety and virtue, who is at the same time a friend to his country." It was in accordance with his motion that Mr. Duche, an Episcopal clergyman, appeared next day and read prayers in the established form and then read the collect for the 7th day of September, which happened to be the 35th Psalm. John Adams details these facts in a letter to his wife and adds, "You must remember this was the next morning after we heard the horrible rumor of the cannonade of Boston. I never saw greater effect upon an audience. It seemed as if heaven had ordained that Psalm to be read on that morning. After this, Mr. Duche, very unexpectedly to everybody, struck out into an extemporary prayer which filled the bosom of every man present. I must confess I never heard a better prayer. Episcopalian as he is, Dr. Cooper never prayed with such fervor, such ardor, such earnestness, such pathos and in language so elegant and sublime, for America, for Congress, for the Province of Massachusetts Bay and especially the town of Boston. It has had an excellent effect upon everybody here. I must beg you to read that Psalm."

It seems as if, in that day as now, the good effects of earnest prayer are soon forgotten. When the convention met in May, 1787, to frame a constitution, there were no chaplains and no prayers. June 28, 1787, Benjamin Franklin arose and according to the report of Madison, said, "In this situation, groping as it were in the dark to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has it happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Lights to illuminate our understanding? In the beginning of the contest with Great Britain when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayer in this room for divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the measure of establishing our future national felicity, and have we forgotten that powerful friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need assistance?

"I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth—that God governs in the affairs of men, and if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured that "except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it." I firmly believe this, and I also believe that without his concurrent aid, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. We shall be divided by our little political local interests, our projects will be confounded and we ourselves shall become a reproach and byword down to future ages. And what is worse, mankind may hereafter, from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing governments by human wisdom and leave it to chance, war and conquest.

"I, therefore, move that henceforth prayers, imploring the assistance of heaven in our deliberations, be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business." The motion prevailed.

While there have been since the beginning skeptics and profane and bibulous men among our congressmen, the majority have been firm believers in God and the efficacy of prayer and have been profited by the ministration of the chaplains.

Those elected to the chaplaincy have usually been residents of Washington and had only a local reputation. In looking over the list I find some names of national note: William Linn, the first chaplain of the House, a pulpit orator of much power; Jesse Lee, whose ardent and abundant labors earned him the title, "Apostle of Methodism"; Jared Sparks, the most industrious historian up to his time; T. H. Stockton, brother of the novelist, Frank Stockton; C. P. McIlvaine, bishop of the Episcopal Church, whose ability was recognized in this country and England; in the Senate, J. P. Newman, who organized the great Metropolitan M. E. Church of this city, and served three terms as its pastor. He was known as "Grant's" pastor and was famous as a pulpit orator and public lecturer. The name of another Methodist bishop, Thomas Bowman, appears in the list. There is also Byron Sunderland, Cleveland's pastor and for sixty years minister of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, and J. G. Butler, a leader among the Lutherans. The religious affiliation of the chaplains has been as follows: in the Senate fourteen Episcopalians, ten Methodists, nine Presbyterians, six Baptists, and one representative of the Congregationalists and Lutherans, respectively. In the House of Representatives there have been fifteen Presbyterians, twelve Methodists, seven Baptists, six Episcopalians, four Congregationalists, two Disciples of Christ, and one each from the following, Unitarians, Universalists, Lutherans and Methodist Protestants.

In the list of chaplains kept in the library of Congress, I noticed that the denomination of F. D. Power is recorded as "Christian (Campbellite)," while mine is given as "Christian, Disciples of Christ." I called the attention of Mr. Spofford to this and told him I was glad to see this evidence of a better information in regard to our people. "What is the correct designation?" he asked. "We call ourselves simply Christians or Disciples of Christ." "I shall be glad to make the correction," he said, "for I do not think that we should call ourselves religiously by the name of any man."

English Topics.

Protesting Too Much.

England is engaged in two wars. One is known to all the world. That will, I suppose, come to an end ere long. But the war at home, the religious conflict, seems to be a war in which, as the Scripture says, "There is no discharge." The Romanizing Ritualism of which so much has been heard for half a century is fast becoming a national scandal and a chronic calamity. Certain people who would otherwise never be heard of have become notorious on both sides of this extraordinary ecclesiastical quarrel. Clergymen of the most commonplace calibre are managing to thrust themselves into cheap fame by creating commotion through papistic intonations in Protestant churches. And other men have started a reputation by their stormy opposition to these mongrel priests. Lord Beaconsfield, in a famous parliamentary speech, declaimed against the Ritualist "celebration" of the sacrament as "the mass in masquerade." The Church of England is now being rent and torn by a distracting feud. None of the Dissenters are interfering. They are all looking on in wonder, speculating as to the possible evolution. Will the great and venerable Anglican Church become the scene of a violent disruption, or will it lapse into absolute popery, or will it be disestablished and disenthroned by an indignant nation? Who can tell? At present all is chaos. W. John Kensit, the now notorious bookseller of Paternoster Row, is busily fulfilling his self-imposed vocation of bishop-baiting. His latest performance was another program of protest. He brought a big load of Puritan churchmen with him to denounce the appointment of the new bishop of London, in Bow Church, Cheapside. There was a rough riot, for bishop Winnington Ingram is accused of favoring the High Church party. He certainly does. He is undoubtedly of Ritualist tendencies; and so are at least 8,000 out of the 25,000 clergy of the Anglican Church. But some of us, while sympathizing with Mr. Kensit's aims, believe they will signally fail. The Protestant Anti-Ritualists should go straight for freedom and demand the severance of the church from the state. This the Kensitites will not do. They want to eat their cake and have it—to be state churchmen and yet to be free from state authority. Impossible!

The Adoration of Bishops.

Curious developments are ensuing. It is often said that the English "dearly love a lord." Perhaps it might still more appropriately be said that they "adulate a lord bishop." There is something curiously obtuse about this blind and servile adoration of church princes. The chief ambition of thousands of pious young men is to become a bishop. But the human soul is a curious psychological complexity. People bait the bishops and yet beatify them; they extol a prelate and at the same time execrate him; they load him with maledictions while they arrange his apotheosis. A dignitary in lawn sleeves with crozier and mitre is a social idol. The average English bishop is a demigod of the drawing rooms where duchesses love to entertain the literary, social, scientific, artistic, musical, dramatic and ecclesiastical "lions." A live lord bishop, right reverend father in God, wherever he goes has English society cringing at his feet; while at the same time half the clergy take a fierce delight in flouting and snubbing their spiritual superiors and in treating their decrees with contumely. In short nothing can be more unlike a New Testament and apostolic bishop than one of these modern English prelates. Nevertheless half of the English people simply assume that the Church of England is the true Church of Christ, descended by direct lineage from the days of Paul. So popular and intelligent a clergyman as the Rev. E. A. Stuart, one of the most eloquent of London preachers, gave a lecture which lies on my table. This so pleased his audience of cultured people that they clamored for its publication. This precious production actually claims to prove that the Church of England originated in Ephesus under the preaching of Paul! I mean to say that this kind of current fact furnishes a painful demonstration of the difficulty which we reforming pioneers of gospel restoration have to deal with. England has been elaborately educated all the wrong way and we have to undo the evil work of centuries. Glorious is the enterprise; but the undertaking is stupendous. It will succeed at last, for this reason, that the Church of England will be destroyed by its own corruption. The truth is going to be built up on the ruins of error. Pioneers must be patient. Truth can afford to wait!

Some of Our Churches.

I turn from the strange Church of England chaos to point out once more what is taking place in our own spiritual circle. The truth as it is in Jesus is indeed a beautiful thing. More and more do I love to watch the development of this reformation in our land. Our preachers are good men and true. They are ministers to be proud of. Each of our brethren is fighting a good fight. On this occasion I will allude to two of them. We are in danger of losing one of our most estimable pastors. Our Brother Johnson, minister of the Church of Christ, Southport, has announced that he contemplates removing to America. Should this project "materialize," then we shall have in the United States a band of our preachers, once among us here in England, as large as the number still remaining among us. Moore, Earl, Garrison, Richardson, Van Horn, Buckingham, Hodkinson, Ireland, Powell, Gliddon, Martin, Haley, Troy, Foster—what a galaxy of stars! But these have all pushed off at a tangent from the orbit in which they revolved awhile and now shed their light over another continent. I knew, loved and honored them all, and often long to see and hear these brothers in the work. The English work has not been made easier by this series of removals. It is not wonderful that another preacher should have felt impelled to follow the westward drift. But there are compensations. American preachers of fine calibre are with us in several of the vacated places. If the report of Brother Johnson's removal should be definitely confirmed, then a preacher will be needed at Southport and I shall have some interesting things to relate in my next concerning Johnson and Southport—an honorable man and an honored church. Also as I am hearing some good news from several other churches there will be a pleasurable record for me to register in another of these letters.

WILLIAM DURBAN.

Wherein do We Differ From Others?

By A. W. Kokendoffer.

The aim of this paper is a summary of the points wherein we (Disciples) as a religious organization differ from others. Statement rather than argument is purposed, and results more than processes are to be sought for. Possibly an outline of what we are by comparison; a resume of what has been wrought out parallel, rather than in conflict, with the denominations, would better suggest the scope of this effort.

There are several points worthy of emphasis in which we differ, if not from all at least from many of the leading religious bodies. As already suggested, we may run parallel with some, while marking sharp contrast with others. In but few of these points, possibly, do we differ from all others, and yet in all points taken as to the entire doctrine and polity of the church, we are sufficiently distinct as to stand out as a separate body.

First. The movement itself differs, and from all others, in that restoration and not reformation was the supreme ambition of the pioneers. This word and the spirit of it belong exclusively to the Disciples. No such inspiration was ever possessed by others. If so, it was neither permitted opportunity of expression nor recorded upon the pages of any history. The Disciples, if for no other reason, at least for this, merit recognition at the hands of religious thinkers everywhere.

By restoration we mean "a complete return to apostolic doctrine and life as a model for the church of to-day, a reinstatement after a divine pattern rather than an attempt to reform any existing church that may or may not have diverged from the path plainly set forth in the chart." In this we think we are unique as well as biblical, since the Scriptures allege that other foundation can no man lay than that is laid.

Martin Luther essayed to reform the Roman Catholic Church; Henry VIII of England, through a base and selfish motive, sought only a change of its head; John Calvin wrought to modify the modifications of Luther; John Wesley profoundly shook the formalism of staid English episcopacy, desiring nothing more. So we might continue to enumerate the many efforts at reformation, through Methodist and Baptist and Presbyterian folds, but these will suffice. In sharp contrast here the restoration movement of the nineteenth century.

The second point of difference is the beginning of the church, a favorite theme of many of our earlier preachers, sometimes lost sight of in the newer conflicts that have arisen. On this the Christian world is not a unit. By some the church is asserted to have had an existence in the days of Moses and David. By others John the Baptist was its originator in proclaiming that the kingdom was at hand. The Disciple urges that the day of Pentecost is the birthday of the church, and rightly, too, from the Scriptures. In Matt. 16:16 the Christ says: "On this rock I will build my church." This is future; the church not yet built. In Acts 2:47 believers were being added to the church daily. This is past. Between these stand Pentecost and the out-pouring of the Spirit and the fulfilling of the promise and beginning of apostolic effort after the resurrection, and most surely the beginning of the Church of Christ.

The third note of divergence is sounded in the mention of the name by which we are known. We step lightly here since there is not perfect harmony in our own ranks. But if we are broken into bands we remain in calling distance and joyful fellowship prevails, since we insist on Bible names and recognize as Head of the church not man, but Christ, whose name we are to wear, whose honor we are to preserve, and whose Sonship we are to confess before the world in doctrine as well as life. Therefore the Christian Church, or the Church of Christ, or the Church of the Disciples, designates this peculiar people.

Fourthly, the creed. The position here of the Christian Church needs but bare mention. The very core of the book is the truth that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." This truth is our creed. To confess that admits the candidate into divine favor, and therefore into the favor of the church. It has no other article of faith. If sometimes the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, is recognized as the creed of the church, it is because the Bible is an amplification of the one thought, because it declares by prophet and apostle that Jesus, the Son of David, the Man of Sorrows, is also the Son of God. Therefore with the Bible as the handbook of information and of truth, and the Star of Bethlehem as the beacon light of hope, the weary pilgrim takes his journey home.

The fifth point is conversion, which involves our surrender, our turning to Christ and our confession of his name before men. This has been a term to juggle with and it has been successfully done. Mysticism and uncertainty have beclouded the air, have held control, have driven on unconscious of the simple and specific directions of the book. Without controversy, Luke in his gospel and in the book of Acts, and Paul in the Roman letter, are plain and succinct in their statements of faith in Christ, repentance of sin, confession of his name and the candidate's right to the waters of baptism, from which he comes both as a rejoicing convert and disciple of the Lord. So that a mere yet earnest presentation of these facts to be believed and commands to be obeyed with no admixture of human confusion is the one position alike of apostle and the Christian Church.

Baptism as the sixth point of difference follows naturally. This is the strong point of the Christian Church. It insists on one baptism and that by the immersion of a penitent believer as the consummating act in the forgiveness of sins. There are those who practice immersion but use what they regard as other methods. Then there are also the trine immersionists. There are also those who immerse only, but do this because of the remission of sins, through faith and prayer and make this but an ordinance of admission into the church. The Christian Church is positive and biblical in following Rom. 6:3, 4; Col. 2:12, and Acts 2:38, in that they bury the believing candidate in water in order to the remission of his sins and his possession of the Holy Spirit and its gifts of joy.

Again, the celebration of the Lord's supper on every first day of the week deserves mention. Here, if not obeying a command, we are at least following precept and example. The early Christians, beyond doubt, met on the first day of the week to break bread. No other day is appropriate. Friday is the day of the crucifixion and broken fellowship and gloom. Saturday he is in the grave, the triumphant resurrection not dreamed of by his own. But on the first day of the week there is new life and joy and fellowship and the assurance of the effectiveness of the atoning blood. In this, though somewhat alone, we most assuredly follow biblical footsteps. If an error, it is on the side of loyalty and love, and not the dereliction of a duty.

We mention last for emphasis Christian union as practically the very genius of our plea at the beginning. Our brethren thought it a thing not incredible that God's people should be united, even though it might be equivalent to raising the dead. They thought the basis of union was the word of God. They doubtless believed that God has brought them into the kingdom for such a time as this.

But while all has not been accomplished that was hoped for and confidently expected, yet much has been done, and the work in this particular has not been in vain. It was believed that the religious world was stumbling over the terms of faith and opinion. Hence they urged for union in matters of faith. "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty." What God has set forth as his will men should be required to accept and do. Faith in Christ demands this. Without this there could be no unity of faith. Further than this we cannot go without requiring unity of opinion and that is not only impossible but unauthorized by the word of God. In this grand leadership we have followed successfully and happily.

Is It Faith or Doubt?

By W. T. MOORE

A habit of speech is sometimes accepted as expressing a truth, when there is really no truth in it. In some way we have come to speak of the present as an age of doubt until almost everyone accepts this characterization as just without much if any questioning. Is this habit sustained by the facts of the case? Let us see how this is.

Not long ago Henry Van Dyke called this an age of doubt and published a book to meet its needs; and now Amory H. Bradford has published another book in which he strongly contends that this is an age of faith. Can both of these views be true? Certainly not in the sense of the men who use them. Dr. Van Dyke evidently means that this is an age wherein doubt is the most dominant influence of the times in which we live, while Dr. Bradford just as evidently gives the controlling place to faith. The latter takes a very hopeful view of the present outlook and leaves the reader with the assurance that the sun still shines in most places, and even where it does not shine upon us, it is still shining behind the cloud, however dark that cloud may be. Dr. Van Dyke preaches the gospel of pessimism and Dr. Bradford preaches the gospel of optimism. While some will not agree with the whole of Dr. Bradford's contention, it is probable that nearly all will feel the force of the facts he presents and the sunny brightness of the atmosphere he creates. One of the points emphasized by Dr. Bradford is the large proportion of men of science who are ranging themselves on the side of the Bible and the Christian religion. In literature he finds a similar encouragement.

Now all this sounds very well; but over against this optimistic view may be set the pessimistic wail of Mr. Frederic Harrison in the December number of the North American Review. He thinks that nearly everything is going in the wrong direction. He regards the Bismarckian policy, inaugurated some thirty years ago, as the parent of most of the evils to be found now in the political world. He enumerates a long list of eminent names in literature, and then asks, have we any names to compare with these in the literature of the present day? He reckons that the last twenty-five years have been almost barren in producing any great literary works.

Now if this were exactly true it would still prove very little. It is always very easy to compare a past age with the present to the disadvantage of the present; and especially as regards eminent men. The men of the past have finished their work, and we have their history before us, while the men of the present are performing their work and very little of their history is written. Comparison in such a case is almost ridiculous. Exactly the same kind of thing will happen at the end of another twenty-five years. The men of the present will then be superior to the young men of action who are at that time in the field and making a name for themselves.

This is just the way some estimate our young ministers. They are compared with the old men who have already made their characters and impressed themselves upon the age in which they lived. Our young men are in the formative stage, and cannot, therefore, be legitimately compared with those whose characters have already been made. It can safely be affirmed that the preachers of the present day will be the great preachers of twenty-five years hence, though they do not compare favorably with the preachers of twenty-five years ago.

Mr. Harrison's contention is not justified by the facts of the case. It may be that Dr. Bradford has not sufficiently reckoned with the shadows in giving us his view of the coming days. He certainly does not care much for a dark background for his picture of the present. All the same, his view of the matter is much more refreshing, and we believe much truer to the life, than anything Mr. Harrison or Dr. Van Dyke says. It is very easy to grumble. Surely no one needs to be encouraged in the art of fault-finding or murmuring. The Israelites served an apprenticeship at this business during their wanderings in the wilderness; and it is evident from the history of their case that they made nothing by it. It was altogether unprofitable. So it will ever be.

Doubtless there are many things in our civilization that could be improved. There are also some tendencies that ought to be overcome if possible. Church life is not what we would like to see it. Undoubtedly things do not always go well in the political world. But in spite of these things the general trend is upward and onward. We are making progress in almost every direction; and in nothing is this progress more evident than in religious matters. While we are not entirely rid of doubt, and may not be for years to come, still it is unquestionably true that the present is an age of faith rather than an age of doubt. This is certainly a very encouraging fact; and is also a distinct promise that the coming days will be better than the days that are past. We believe that the world's brightest destiny is yet in the future. We are just now living on the dividing line of two ages. From this line the darkness recedes while the dawn of a glorious light is breaking on the future. Blessed is he who has eyes to see and will see.

Truth and Union.

By D. G. Porter.

I am interested in the question raised between Dr. Moore and some of the other brethren at the Lexington congress. It is a difficult question. I do not wonder that Mr. Campbell got on the fence. That is the thing to do if you do not know which way to go. I am on the fence now both as a Baptist and a Disciple, but with a strong inclination to jump on what Dr. Moore would probably call the wrong side. Let us consider for a moment what the question is and how it originated. Certain pedobaptists, disgusted with the divisions and contentions of sectism, struck out for Christian union. They formulated a principle, and, as we believe, the true principle, on which the union was to proceed. They said in effect, "We will insist upon nothing that the Scriptures do not plainly require." This principle led them directly out of the line of union with pedobaptists and into the line of union with Baptists. Then the Baptists drove them out of their company and they stood alone on what they conceived to be the true principle of union, a principle which they had adopted against their own inclinations and former practices and with the sole end in view of the union to which truth only could lead.

Now what shall they do? Shall they profess union or readiness to unite with those who reject what they believe to be the only practicable rule of union? Certainly not. That would be to abandon their whole contention. But shall they judge those who differ from them? Certainly not. Whatever they think of the errors or duties of others, they must not judge them. Baptists, in theory at least, forbid the Lord's table to pedobaptists. Disciples wisely say, "You know where and why we differ, but we cannot judge you. Let every man examine himself." That is undoubtedly the true course. Let us in no wise relax our testimony to the truth upon which we believe the only possibility of real union depends; but do not offend and repel others by assuming to be judges over them.

But the case is more difficult for us than for the fathers. In their time a large majority of even intelligent pedobaptists believed that both sprinkling and infant baptism could be sustained from the Scriptures. Now that belief is substantially abandoned but they seem to persist nevertheless in what their fathers would have thought an evil way and at the same time talk loudly about union. This fact certainly does not make the duty of standing for the right and the truth any the less important. But indiscriminating fellowship with pedobaptists in so-called union movements does inevitably have the effect of relaxing the force of our testimony in favor of the truth and of union built upon it. For this reason a too free and indiscriminate participation in Y. M. C. A. and Y. P. S. C. E. movements is beginning to be looked upon with distrust by many, as to some extent nullifying the effect of our main contention and for which alone we exist as a separate body. This accommodating spirit prevails so widely in England that in a large majority of Baptist churches no discrimination is made between Baptists and pedobaptists even in the matter of church membership or church offices, and as a consequence the force of their denominational testimony is practically nil, though some of the strongest men in the English pulpit are Baptist preachers. And if there is anywhere a determination to disregard the plain requirements of Scripture with regard to baptism, which amounts to positive and reckless wilfulness, it is to be found among the pedobaptist nonconformity of England.

So it easily appears that there is a difficult question here and a discriminating balance should be kept between the two extremes. There is probably as much danger of "slopping over" with union gush as there is of offensive, crude, unwise assertion.

But the Disciples are not "the whole thing," and one reason why they are not is probably because they have not the whole truth. The Campbells and their adherents made a grand start and their followers in the faith have considerably improved their positions in certain points; but God has doubtless "yet more light to break forth out of his holy word" for them as for others. We shall all do well to maintain an attitude of expectancy with regard to that light.

Waterbury, Conn.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

A district missionary convention was held in Longmont, about forty miles north from Denver, last week. The attendance was large, when the number of congregations and members in the district is considered. There are in Colorado, all told, less than five thousand Disciples of Christ; but you are to remember that there are only about six hundred thousand people in the state. This is a better showing than seven thousand Disciples in a population of six millions. But did it ever occur to you that quality rather than quantity influences men? A small membership of a high grade is worth more, for practical purposes, than a large membership of a low grade.

The cozy little meeting-house at Longmont was well filled during the day and in the evening its seating capacity was tested. The work of the Sunday-school and of the Societies of Christian Endeavor was considered, as well as missions. Thursday afternoon was devoted to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The interest reached its highest point in this session. The writer could not be convicted of speaking extravagantly were he to use the word enthusiastic in describing this session of the Longmont district missionary convention. A society auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board was organized in the Longmont church, with two and twenty members, and a dozen subscribers to the Missionary Tidings were obtained. In the evening an address was delivered by G. K. Berry on "The Disciples of Christ"—their history and some of their peculiarities. This discourse was a fitting climax to this convention.

The following preachers were present: Leonard G. Thompson, corresponding secretary and evangelist of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society; J. E. Pickett, president of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society; G. K. Berry, late of Ionia, Mich., pastor now, pro. tem., of the Christian church at Fort Collins, the seat of the Colorado State Agricultural College; T. J. Van Horn, recently from Missouri, now pastor of the Longmont Christian church; J. M. Lowe, late of Iowa, now pastor in Boulder, the seat of the Colorado State University; E. F. Harris, for a number of years pastor of the Christian church in Longmont; W. T. Hunt, who presided over the convention, the efficient bishop of the Loveland diocese; Samuel R. Wilson, the patriarch of the assembly, pastor in Windsor, where a new house of worship will be dedicated in a few months, and B. E. H. Warren, whose home is at Oakes, Col., and who is doing good work in the surrounding region. This is as clean and noble a company of men as can be found in the ministry in the United States. There is not space in this letter to speak in detail of the several addresses and discussions—nor is it necessary after what I have said of the men who were present. They were of a good quality, intellectually, and their spirit was faultless. Prominence was given to the word and its study.

I wonder why it is that the young people in a Christian Endeavor convention speak so well. Thirty or forty years ago, boys and girls, young men and young women, did not express their thoughts as they do now. To begin with—they had not such thoughts as have the young people of to-day. Now they seem to know what they want to say and proceed, without apparent embarrassment, to say it in good style. Two or three papers read in the Christian Endeavor part of the Longmont convention possessed such decided merit that I wanted to ask the writers to let me have them for publication in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—when I remembered that the office editor is puzzled to know what to do with the good things already on hand, and I did not ask for them. But how are the young people able to do such excellent work?

G. K. Berry, mentioned above, has recently published a book of sermons, designed especially for young preachers, entitled "The Truth Condensed." The author says, modestly, that "these sermons are sent out as helps." The "introduction" contains "A Word to Young Preachers," which reminds me of a practical talk I heard three or four years ago by President McGarvey to the students of the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky. Bro. Berry is not an aged man, as one might infer from "A Word to Young Preachers." He is only forty-seven years old. R. E. Dunlap, of Seattle, writes the story of the author's life in an entertaining style. This unpretentious little volume, properly used, doubtless will be helpful to those for whose benefit it was especially prepared.

When it became known that the bishop of the diocese of Laramie would deliver a discourse in the Episcopal church five or six of our preachers, who were in the convention, went to hear him. It was Ascension day, in the ecclesiastical calendar, and the sermon was on the return of our Lord to his home in the heavens. The congregation consisted of eight women, two little girls and one man, besides the choir, and five preachers from our convention. I learned that the man in the audience was a Baptist and that his home is in New York. Two women and a man were in the choir. The text of the discourse was Heb. 9:24—"Christ entered into heaven itself now to appear before the face of God for us." The sermon was a plain answer to the question: "Why did the Christ ascend to heaven?" The answer was, (1) To resume the glory which he had with the Father before he came to the earth; (2) to appear before the face of God for us; (3) that the Holy Spirit might be sent to his people as an abiding guest; (4) that he might from his throne in heaven the better rule his church on earth; and (5) that he might prepare a place for his people.

The service was quite elaborate, as is the custom in Episcopal congregations, including an impressive celebration of the Lord's Supper. Such an audience assembled to hear a bishop seemed to outsiders rather discouraging; but not a note of discouragement was heard. The service and sermon were as if an audience of a thousand persons was present. There is a lesson in this.

Do your work as well as you can without complaining. If the audience is small do not scold. Preach to a small audience as if it were a great congregation. Do your best every time. God only knows what the result may be. Jesus sometimes preached to a single person. What the Master said to Nicodemus, to the Samaritan woman and to the Rich Young Ruler, was deemed worthy of preservation in the Living Oracles. I am glad that I heard Bishop Graves. I not only heard a good, plain, practical, helpful sermon, but obtained a valuable hint as to how to bear myself when the congregation is small.

There is no doubt in my mind that there is a rising tide of interest on the subject of missions among us. A note, just to hand, from Benj. L. Smith, the indefatigable secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, says that there was a gain in the offerings the first week in May, over last year, of $500. He is already thinking about and planning for a profitable observance of Forefathers' day. Let all pastors determine to make it a high day. The Central Church, Pueblo, Chas. S. Early, pastor, has arranged, I hear, for a week of missionary meetings. These meetings are to prepare for the annual missionary offering. This congregation has one day in the year sacred to the cause of missions. This way of preparing for the day is excellent.

Bruce Brown, of the Central church, this city, recently baptized two Chinamen. Yee Kung Toy is a bright boy eighteen years old. Bro. Brown thinks of sending him to Drake University. Yee Kung Toy's life has been in peril because of his determination to be a Christian. His faith is steadfast under trial.

What Most Interests Me Now

By J. S. LAMAR

XII. The Temptations.

Perhaps very few persons have duly considered that the union of the Divine and the Human in one Personality puts the true and consistent life of such a Being beyond the limits of human imagination to conceive. No impostor could have met its demands—no uninspired writer have fabricated its story. Human fancy might conceive and portray a man, representing his life and work as those of a man; and, however grotesque the imaginary being might be, it could form some sort of idea of a god, living and walking among men; but a Being who was both—in whom dwelt all the fulness of God, and all the weakness and trials of men—how he should act and speak, so that the man should not be lost in the God, and so that the God should be clearly manifest in the man—this was the problem whose extreme difficulty, now that it is solved for us, can hardly be realized. To human thinking, in order to be truly man he must have man's infirmities, feelings, sufferings and temptations, and to be truly God he must not have them. Who but the Infinite Being could have led such a life? who but the Infinite Spirit have inspired and indited the story of such a life?—a story whose beautiful simplicity and honest candor, whose unstrained statements and surprising reserve, whose depths and whose heights have made it the admiration and the wonder, the delight and the glory of the ages!

In the light of all that I have said, I come now to select a few of the facts in the unexampled Life which impress me as being peculiarly pertinent and significant.

That the tempter, "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," would come to him, was what we might have looked for; but that he could be tempted is an amazement. Doubtless it made him realize more profoundly than he had yet done the depth of his humiliation in taking upon him our nature. Doubtless, too, as he experienced the terrible force, and realized the subtle wiles of the tempting spirit, he felt in himself how sorely the world needed a divine helper. The tempter came to him, we may be sure, not in an outward form, visible and audible, but as he came to mother Eve, and comes to all men, through the lower nature by suggestions to the mind, arising in it mysteriously as his own thought. Understanding this to be the meaning of the inspired text, we may paraphrase it thus: The tempter said to him, that is, by an internal and inaudible suggestion to his mind, If you are the Son of God, as the voice at Jordan declared, you have been sent here to perform a great and arduous work; you cannot do this without health and strength; hence you must have food. Is it certain that you are the Son of God—and left here in this wilderness to perish with hunger! The case demands proof a little more positive than the voice you heard, which might have been misunderstood. A matter of so great importance ought to be settled beyond a doubt. And now you can easily get rid of all uncertainty, and so enter confidently upon your mission. Here are stones, if you are the Son of God, you made them stones—now turn them into bread to sustain your life, for you are very hungry, and sorely need it. Such and so powerful was this first temptation. But instantly he repelled it by remembering the Word of God: It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. I am in this world as a man, and I must show, not how a mere animal, but how a man must live; and I must illustrate for him the way of life—of the true life.

Next (as recorded by Luke), the devil led him up and showed him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, i. e., caused him to think of them, and suggested: You have come to establish a kingdom—you will need men and money and power and glory. As things are, the world cannot appreciate an invisible kingdom, nor be influenced by unseen and far-away glories. Your standard is all right, but too exalted for men in their present condition. Lower it a little just for a time. First draw men to you by the offer of splendid earthly reward, and then you can mould them to your will and make them instruments suitable to your purpose. Of course you will have to devote yourself to the spirit of the world in order to win the world, but for one like you it will be only for a moment—just the briefest yielding to the world, and this to save the world, and all shall be yours. No, never! The thought is false; the suggestion is from the father of lies; get thee hence, Satan; this would really be worshiping you, and it is written for man, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

Finally, he led him in fancy to Jerusalem and placed him on the pinnacle of the temple, suggesting: You may possibly get on without the help of the world, but of course you must have the countenance and support of God's own chosen people. Remember the kingdom you are to establish is to be the kingdom of God—made up of his people, animated by his Spirit and ruled by his Word. This is his house; those people down yonder are his worshipers, and many of them are great and learned and influential. Besides, they have the oracles of God—they are familiar with the prophecies, and they are all looking and longing for the Messiah, but of course you can not expect them to believe that you are he without a sign. Give them one. Cast yourself down from this height, and light among them unhurt. This will satisfy them and be absolutely safe for you, for it is written, "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee."

"Yes, it is so written, but it were base infidelity to act upon it thus; it would be daring God to fail to keep the letter of his promise; it would be distrusting him while relying upon the form of his word; and again it is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Thus the victory was complete.

The inspired record of the temptations in the wilderness is very brief, narrating simply the essential facts without color or comment. In this form the story could best be preserved and transmitted, and in this alone it is authoritative. But while the paraphrase I have given is only meant as an expository comment, still, this expansion of the original or some similar treatment of it—perhaps some view which any reader may take for himself—seems necessary in order to realize the actuality of the temptations, and especially to perceive their intellectual subtlety and force—insinuating, plausible, veiling the bad with a seeming good, apparently on the side of God and truth and worthiest motives, while essentially they were every one an assault through the lower nature upon the higher. In itself there would have been nothing wrong in making loaves of the stones—later on, when it subserved a benevolent purpose, our Savior did multiply the loaves by his creative power—but in the wilderness the case was totally different. The temptation was to subordinate his higher nature to the demands of his lower; it was for the God within him to be subjected to the service of his flesh. So with all of them—the appeal of the three was through the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life,"—and he, first of all mankind, knew and taught and felt that they were "not of the Father but were of the world." Still, he conquered as man, but in the strength of God—the strength of perfect trust and unfaltering steadfastness—thus opening the way for us all to conquer in the might of the same Strength, secured through the same unwavering faith.

Finally, I wish to say that if Christ was really clothed with our nature, if he was truly the Son of Man, so that he could be, and actually was, tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin; and if he knew no sin, notwithstanding the possession of this whole and entire human nature, it seems to me that a fact so phenomenal and lustrous should be duly and reverently weighed and considered in estimating the speculative dogma of hereditary and total depravity and corruption.

Sources of Campbell's Theology.

By Ira Billman.

The purpose of these papers is to lodge a protest against the growing disposition in some quarters to represent Campbell as a dealer in secondhand wares. The issue in a former paper was joined on the question whether he was the disciple of any human leader and should so be called. A million and a quarter Christians say: no one is to have the name of any man thrust upon him against his protest and the teaching of the Word of God. Any possible statement that may be made to the contrary is not only "irrelevant," but perverse. If this position be not already established, so that Campbell may not innocently be called a Lockite, against his serious convictions, then all of us, despite our conscience on the subject, should be called Campbellites. It is our logical name.

The discussion of the Sources of Campbell's Theology will be helped by a clear understanding of the meaning of two important words. Theology and religion are not one. They do not range the same field. They are not of like nature. A man does not need to be a theologian to be a Christian. In brief, religion is a revelation, theology is a fabrication. Religion was here long before theology came, and got on pretty well without it. In advance of its coming Paul said: "Whatsoever things are pure, lovely and of good report, think on these things." Since coming it has been principally busy making immoral distinctions between morality and religion.

Says the author of "The Fact of Christ": "The primary fact on which Christianity is based is neither theological nor ethical, but personal." It is the thought of this paper. The religion of Christ, Christianity, is a message, not a philosophy, a revelation, not a theology. In its essential nature it is a gospel and not a set of abstract deductions of the reason. It is a summary of facts which have occurred by divine intervention with a view to human salvation. The Christian minister, therefore, is neither a philosopher nor a theologian, but the herald of a divine message. For this cause, Revelation speaks by divine wisdom of "the angels of the churches." The theme of gospel preaching, therefore, is Christ—a person and not theories or theologies.

Surely the brainiest man of his day had reason for slighting theology. In this way he taught: "No man will be saved by the belief of a theory or lost by the disbelief of a theory." And what else is theology but theory? Such masterful handling of a great subject is hardly in harmony with our reviewer. He says: "Campbell evinced no special genius for philosophy, since he neither ignored philosophy nor originated anything in it, he must have been a Disciple." This does not argue that Campbell's was not an essentially philosophical mind, as he was the only man of his day able to withstand the philosophical Goliaths of sectarianism, theology, Catholicism and infidelity. A principle of reasoning that holds good in philosophy must obtain in theology. In the words of our reviewer, Campbell evinced no special genius for theology, since he neither ignores thelogy nor originated anything in it, he must have been a Disciple. It follows from this argument that Campbell, being only a disciple of other men's theologies, and thus having no theology of his own, there can be no "Sources of Campbell's Theology." The very name is misleading.

But let us hear Campbell himself on the subject. His writings abound in disclaimers that his teachings had any sources in the human systems of his times. He says: "The reformation we plead is not characterized by new and original ideas or human inventions, but by a return to the original ideas and institutions. We can assure our readers we have been led to these conclusions by the simple perusal, the unprejudiced and impartial examination, of the New Testament alone." Christian System, p. 230. Campbell certainly knew what he was writing about, and he says the only sources of his teaching, of whatever kind, were the New Testament. In another place he writes: "We want the old gospel back sustained by the ancient order of things, and this alone rests on and proceeds from the testimony of God and not from the reasonings of men." C. S. 234-5. Again he affirms: "We have taken the Living Oracles as our creed, our rules and measure of faith and practice, and in this department have no additions, alterations or amendments to propose." C. S. 274. What could be more conclusive than the following? "There is not a spiritual idea in the whole human race that is not drawn from the Bible." C. S. 15.

The explanation of Campbell's treatment of theology is, that he despised it as Christ did the traditions of the elders. He not only refused to be branded with its trademark, but characterized its venerated terminology as "the language of Ashdod." It was because he had no theology that he built no theological school—no parrot cage in which to train a succeeding race in the classic, "Polly wants a cracker." The very name of theology was so distasteful as to be seldom used. He speaks of it as "unprofitable and foolish dogmas." "Theoretic, scholastic, metaphysical, speculative theology," he calls "moth-eaten systems." Christian Baptist, p. 246-7.

There is no possible way of belittling the meaning of this well understood attitude of Campbell toward theology, but by confusing the terminology of the subject, and making it appear that the theology of man and the gospel of Christ are one and the same thing. Till then, to talk about the "Sources of Alexander Campbell's Theology," is as absurd as it would be to write a book on the human origin of the teaching of Paul or the wisdom of Christ.

Evansville, Ind.

[The writer of the above article would save himself much unnecessary trouble if he would bear in mind the distinction which he so carefully makes, in the beginning of his essay, between religion and theology. Let the reader get that distinction clearly in mind and then ponder this fact: Bro. Billman starts to show that Campbell had no human sources for his theology, and he does it by showing that he had no human source for his religion. The argument fails to connect with the thesis. We are not saying that theology is the power of God unto salvation, but that it is a useful science, as botany and chemistry are. Bro. Billman's statement that "no man is saved by belief of a theory or damned by disbelief of a theory," is very true—but not to the point. The question under discussion is not, How is man saved? but, Has theology any possible value, granting that it is not a means of salvation? Did Campbell have a theology? If so, how did he get it?

We suggest again as we did in connection with Bro. Billman's former article, that the a priori method of dealing with questions of fact is not apt to lead to conclusions of much value. To determine whether Campbell had a theology, look into his writings and see if there is theology in them; don't stop with quoting what Campbell said about the essentials of salvation. Similarly, the only way to determine whether Campbell was a Lockian is to study the writings of Locke to find out what Lockianism is and then study the writings of Campbell to see if it is there.

It is almost incredible that anyone should interpret the admonition to "call no man master" as applying not only to religion but to all departments of human learning. Yet Bro. Billman evidently so holds. It is clear enough that when Campbell is called a disciple of Locke, it is meant that he was a disciple in philosophy. Bro. Billman's shrewd argument then is this: If Campbell was anybody's disciple in philosophy, then we are his disciples in religion—i. e., Campbellites. But drop the matter of philosophy for a moment. Campbell doubtless held our common view regarding the solar system and so was a disciple of Copernicus; but no—"call no man master."

And he probably was a disciple of Newton to the extent of believing in the law of gravitation. Far be it from him; "call no man master." Was he a disciple of Locke in holding that all the materials of knowledge came to man through the senses and that all knowledge is the product of sensation and reflection? He certainly did express those ideas—but impossible, "call no man master." What this use of "call no man master" really means is: never learn anything from anybody; never go to school.

We ask the indulgence of our readers for having devoted so much space to a matter in which most of them may find but little interest. The views expressed by our contributor in regard to discipleship and the interpretation of this much abused phrase "call no man master," were so unique that they had a certain curious interest which entitled them to a hearing.—EDITOR.]

Disastrous Leagues.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

The truth is plainly taught in the Bible, and confirmed by the history of both individuals and nations, that it is extremely hazardous for God's people to form leagues with the enemies of the Lord and the cause of righteousness.

There is oftentimes a peculiarly strong temptation to those of God's people who, in a certain locality, are numerically weak to form some kind of a league with the people of the world, for the purpose of strengthening themselves and for the better carrying on of their work.

For the sake of success, whether it be religious or temporal, the Lord's people have made a compact with worldly forces, and for a while they have secured a kind of success. But such success has been only superficial, and at the expense of spiritual power and best prosperity.

In the political campaign of last autumn, Mr. Bryan made a league with Tammany Hall in New York. There is reason for believing that Mr. Bryan convinced himself that this league would go far towards giving him success in the election. But the sequel shows that it was a disastrous league. I do not inject politics into my articles for religious papers, but I beg to refer to this political league now, for it has at least one lesson which I regard as being especially significant. That organization represents the worst elements of the great metropolis, and indeed of the whole country, and it was this practical league which did a vast deal to arouse the better elements of the great parties and array them against Mr. Bryan.

Since the election I have been thinking of the history of the Israelites in regard to the times when they formed leagues with very wicked nations, for the purpose of fortifying themselves and waging successful wars.

In the second chapter of Judges we are told that an angel of the Lord spoke these words to the Israelites, speaking for God: "I will never break my covenant with you, and ye shall make no league [covenant, R. V.] with the inhabitants of this land." God forbade the Israelites from forming a league or covenant with that wicked people.

We also learn that King Asa made a league with the King of Syria, and they and their armies went on a siege of conquest; but note the result: "Hanani, the seer, came to Asa, King of Judah, and said unto him, Because thou hast relied on the King of Syria and hast not relied on the Lord thy God, therefore is the host of the King of Syria escaped out of thine hand." That was a disastrous and losing league. Let churches ponder this lesson.

Alexander Campbell.

By Aaron Prince Aten.

The age had waited for his advent long;
For time had come and gone on weary wing
Since one before, a stalwart man of God,
Had risen with an unction from on high
To do the church's work of great reform.
From out the darkness and from captive chains
Had Luther led the beauteous Bride to light,
But mists had shadowed o'er again her form
While darkening gloom had gathered thick once more.
So now in His good time whose hand of might Directs the ways of angels and of men,
And clears the clouds from all the earthly skies
And darkened souls of mortal men as well,
Bursts into being one whose mighty mind
Could grasp the work awaiting him so long;
Whose arm of mental might could reach the depths
And rescue from Pollution's touch the Church.
With faith deep founded in eternal things
And rising into realms unknown to sight;
With courage greater than the conqueror knows
Who faces death upon the field of blood;
With knowledge matchless of the word of life,
And keenest insight into sacred lore;
With grace of godliness upon his soul,
The heavenly gift from hand of love divine;
With wisdom from the fountain infinite
To guide amid all dark and devious ways;
And, crown of all, the universal love,
The pattern of the perfect attribute
That crowns the glory of the godhead great—
All these were his to fit him for the work
So needing some tall spirit of the earth,
And for whose coming did the people wait.
With sword of Spirit grasped by arm of might,
Behold him challenge Error's countless hosts
And rush where angels well might fear to tread.
Behold the victories of the cross once more,
And rising up again to glorious life,
A church revivified from touch of death.
Grand man of God, though dead thou speakest yet,
And still beyond the years thy work shall last,
And waves of influence from thy mighty life
Shall break in blessing on eternal shores!

A Sermon in Nature: Acorns.

By J. H. Fuller.

Acorns are diminutive in size but vast in their possibilities. In nothing do antecedent and consequent differ so much. The cause seems wholly inadequate to the effect—the origin out of proportion to the history. But herein are expressed the laws of the universe. The first great allusion is to the potentiality of an unseen force. The oak and the forest are not palpable to the senses in the acorn; nevertheless, they are in it in a potential way. An acorn in the soil amid moisture and sunshine is the condition precedent. Behold it there awhile, and by a strange combination of powers, out of it will rise the oak like mist up from the ocean bosom.

In this is seen the finite become all but infinite by conformity to its own necessary conditions—its own best nature. Because an event in its beginning is unpromising is no proof that the final issue will be a nullity. It is thus of character, of the history of inventions, of governments and business enterprises in general. Many a dull-looking mind or personality, like the acorn, needs only its own proper conditions to make it capable of weathering all the storms. Like the acorn it is responsive to such environment and not to any other. The mighty oak comes from the tiny acorn according to law.

Another matter arises. Who put a forest in so small a compass? It could not have gotten there of itself. Moses says: "In the beginning, God."

Lastly, silently the acorns fall to plant the forest, but when an oak falls, the whole forest resounds and thunders to the leafy dominions what has happened.

A Revival of Righteousness.

By J. V. Coombs.

Some months ago I wrote a note for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in which I made the statement that because a man is good is no reason why his false theories should not be exposed. The editor entirely mistook my purpose and wrote a reply upon right living. I agree with the editor, the great demand of this age is a revival of righteousness. It is apparent to all observers that within the last few years worldliness has filled the churches to an alarming extent. Theatre-going increases, church-going decreases. The theatre last year cost $41,000,000 while we sent $5,000,000 to foreign fields.

In Middleton Mass., on Lord's day morning, a preacher of one of the fashionable churches auctioneered off a fine quilt. Trilby socials, and grab-bag gambling tricks are common. A young man in Indianapolis admitted he lost all his money playing cards at a church festival. I am sure that our people are as free from all these things as any religious society, yet we are aping these society churches.

We have college presidents who give balls at their homes. We have college professors who entertain with cards. A few weeks ago a mother said to me: "I sent my daughter off to our girls' school, thinking that she would be under religious influences, instead of which the managers of the institution used unfair means to get her to dance. Because she did not dance, she was ridiculed even by the managers." I was in a town last winter when one of our Endeavor girls had returned from this same girls' school. She went away a devout worker. She came back a dancer, and for five months she had not given one hour's time to the church, but had organized dancing clubs. If these schools are going to teach dancing, let them put it in their catalogues, so that our mothers will not be deceived.

Did you, reader, ever stop to think how little of your time you give to Christ? What has your life been worth to the world? What have you done to bless those with whom you associate? There is something better for us than all this mad rush for society recognition. Do good.

Current Literature.

In Dr. North and His Friends, the author introduces as a minor character a young woman who asserts that her profession is teaching the art of conversation. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell might say that the purpose of his novel is the same, if a novel must have a purpose. Certainly there is little enough in it besides conversation, and the conversation itself is of the most delightful and improving sort. There is virtually no action and no plot worth mentioning. The reader who finds himself in this extraordinary and delightful company of Dr. North's friends expects these very remarkable people to do some remarkable things. But they never do anything beyond taking dinner together and running off to Mount Desert Island for summer vacations and ultimately, some of them, going for a trip to Europe. One is inclined to complain at first that the story is never going to get anywhere, but one soon ceases to care whether it gets anywhere or not. It is enough to linger in the society of these charming people and hear them talk. They talk of all sorts of things. The ordinary conversation in a novel is sadly limited by the author's conviction that he must make every item of it lead up in some way to the culmination of his plot. But Dr. Mitchell recognizes no such limitation and he makes his people say things that are worth saying on their own account. Naturally they discuss a good many topics in the course of their dinners, drives and strolls.

The only approach to plot is in connection with a young woman who is afflicted with a peculiar type of double personality. In one state she is in love with an impulsive and eccentric artist and writes him love letters which might be compared to the Englishwoman's, while in her normal condition she is unconscious of what she has done and considers him just a good friend. It is embarrassing for the artist. In the end, the reader is led to believe that she shakes off this duality but maintains her affection for the man whom she had previously loved in her sleep, and that it all comes out happily. Nobody but a doctor could have written such a book and yet, in spite of this uncanny bit of double personality, the whole book is sound and sane and very well worth reading. (Century Co. $1.50.)

There have been some remarkable instances of novels containing vivid and accurate descriptions written by persons who had never seen the localities in which the plots were laid. Tom Moore's "Lalla Rookh" and, in more modern times, Miss Runkle's "Helmet of Navarre" prove that the thing can be done. Still, the normal and natural way for an author to get local color is to go and get it where it grew. George Horton, who wrote Like Another Helen, a romance of the Græco-Turkish war of 1897, was for several years United States Consul at Athens and he knows the ground as Lew Wallace knows Constantinople. There is nothing either heavy or pretentious about the story. Its scene is laid in Crete and its leading characters are a Swedish lieutenant and a young Harvard graduate, who are both members of a filibustering expedition which is wrecked on the coast of Crete, and a Cretan girl of the village in which the filibusters take refuge. A Turkish captain leads his company against the village to capture the girl for his harem, and the conflict for the possession of her person furnishes the occasion for plenty of good fighting. The story does not touch upon the real war of independence but only upon this little eddy of war. The Turk eventually gets the worst of it.

The novelist's skill is scarcely equal to the task of making the girl other than a graceful lay figure about which the story moves, but the Harvard man and the Swedish lieutenant are individual and vital. The former occupies the chief place as hero in the early part of the story and duly falls in love with the Greek girl—or thinks he does. But he has too much New England prudence to be a permanent success in the role of romantic hero and, when he has reason to believe that the girl has become infected with leprosy, he quits the whole business and takes the first steamer for Trieste. As a matter of fact, the leprosy was a false alarm and the Swede, who is really the finer character and is more deeply in love with the girl, goes back to "yust take his chances" with the supposed leprosy and the Turks. (Bowen-Merrill. $1.50.)

The American interest in the Philippines, the imbroglio in China and the completion of the trans-Siberian railway have given an enormous stimulus to the production of books about the far east. There are books of travel, books of history, books of prophecy and political essays. Among the most useful of these, though perhaps not the most readable, is The Awakening of the East, by Pierre Leroy-Beaulieu. It is a solid compend of information about the recent history and present condition of Siberia, China and Japan. Henry Norman, who writes the introduction, commends it as entirely accurate, and so it is apparently in all points which come directly within the scope indicated. The author's statement, however, that "the Finns rarely if ever emigrate" is far from correct, in view of the fact that thousands of them are coming annually to Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas, and that some who most fiercely oppose Russia's aggressive policy in Finland urge the complete abandonment of the land and the seeking of a new home in the west.

In speaking of the situation in China, the author urges the necessity of patience. Reforms must be introduced slowly. Haste will cause the downfall of the already weak government and perhaps anarchy. The policy of the powers should be to go slowly and preserve the integrity of the Empire. The book was written before the outbreak of last July. (McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50.)

It is a good thing for rich men to give large sums for public libraries in the great cities, but the rural districts have an equal need and should not be forgotten. The American Sunday-school Union makes this a part of its work and wishes to establish circulating libraries for rural townships. A thousand libraries costing from $10 to $50 each could be placed to advantage in a thousand rural communities in the southern states and they would do a work of enlightenment certainly not less than that accomplished by an equal expenditure in a city.

W. J. Stillman, whose "Autobiography of a Journalist," published last year in the Atlantic Monthly, has now appeared in book form, tells of some camping experiences in the Adirondacks with Emerson and Agassiz. One who knows those mountains as they are to-day writes that Ampersand Pond is still as wild and untouched by civilization as it was then and deer still feed upon its margin. "The chief difference is that the land that Stillman and his friends bought in 1857 for $600 could not now be bought for $100,000." In this age of all-pervasive civilization there is no luxury so expensive as a bit of primeval wilderness conveniently located with regard to railroads.

In a poem entitled The Lady of Nations, Richard H. McCartney sets forth his ideas as to the literal fulfillment of certain Old Testament prophesies, especially the prophecy of the utter destruction of Babylon which, he says, has not been fulfilled, because the site of ancient Babylon is not at present absolutely uninhabited. The author's point of view is that of the man who maintains that if the Jonah narrative is not history, then the resurrection of Christ must be fiction. The verse is of very uneven quality, varying from doggerel to moderate respectability. (Fleming H. Revell Co. 25c.)

Protestant Missions in South America is a missionary text-book packed full of information in regard to the field which it describes. Eight capable writers contribute chapters on those portions of the field with which they are best acquainted. The arrangement is such that the book can be conveniently used by mission study classes. It stands entirely alone, so far as we know, as a comprehensive statement of the missionary situation in South America. (The Students Volunteer Movement, New York, 50 cents.)

Three handsome helpful booklets are Beyond the Marshes, by Ralph Connor (25 cents), For Hearts that Hope, by J. G. K. McClure (25 cents) and Effectiveness in Christian Work, also by Mr. McClure (10 cents). The first mentioned is a missionary sketch from the northwest and breathes much of the spirit which has made The Sky Pilot a success. (Fleming H. Revell.)

A volume entitled "Substitutes for Saloons" will soon be issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. One chapter is devoted to statements by labor leaders of the attitude of their organizations toward saloons and drink. As the saloon question is closely connected with the labor question this ought to be an important contribution.

A new and revised edition of Maurice Hewlett's "Earthwork out of Tuscany" is in preparation. Many readers of his novels may not know that he is a competent writer on art, but such is the case. The book is a record of his impressions of Italian art and a criticism thereon.

Jonathan and Other Poems is a small volume of hymns and religious poetry by D. W. Whittle. Most of them were intended to be sung rather than read, and are more suitable for the former purpose. The collection was suggested by D. L. Moody. (Fleming H. Revell Co. 75c.)

Our Budget.

—Edgar Price has been called for the third year to the church in Red Oak, Ia.

—Jesse Gresham, late of Wyoming, has been called to Craig, Mo., and is at work there.

—O. D. Maple delivered his lecture on "The Blues" at the Christian Church at Alexis, Ill., May 23.

—H. A. Denton, of Warrensburg, Mo., preached the baccalaureate sermon for the High School of that city.

—Prof. O. C. Hubbell has been called for the fourth year to the principalship of the Fairfield (Neb.) schools.

—Receipts for foreign missions during the week ending May 21 were $2,433.31, a gain of nearly $1,500 over the corresponding period of last year.

—J. W. Holsapple, of Sherman, Tex., expects to visit his old Kentucky home this summer and could hold a few meetings en route or while there.

—C. M. Hughes, who has been kept at home on account of sickness in his family, is now ready for engagements as singer. Address him at Lexington, Ky.

—The annual camp-meeting of the Christian Church of Christ of Whitman county, Washington, will be held at Long Grove, five miles east of Palouse City, June 13-23.

—The first district convention of Illinois will meet at Erie, June 13-16. The convention will be addressed by W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, and Mrs. Melvin Menges, of Cuba.

—J. P. Davis, of Burlington Junction, Mo., preached the memorial sermon there. He recently donated the church one of his lectures which went far toward purchasing a new set of hymn-books for the congregation.

—We have received the following card from Bro. H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, Mo.: "My mother died last night. She was 81 years old. She had been a member of the Christian Church 60 years." Bro. Northcutt will have the sympathy of his many friends.

—A provisional program for the International Christian Endeavor Convention, Cincinnati, July 6-10, has been received. It is too long to publish, but we call attention to it again and can assure those who contemplate going that it will be well worth while.

—The deputy warden of the Nebraska penitentiary says there would have been a serious outbreak during the recent burning of the buildings had it not been for the quiet demeanor and efficient aid of the eighty members of the Christian Endeavor Society within the prison.

—The thirtieth annual commencement of the University of Illinois will be held at Champaign, June 7-12. The baccalaureate address will be delivered by President Draper, the alumni address by Congressman James R. Mann and the commencement address by Luther Laflin Mills.

—J. P. Lichtenberger requests us to announce that prospective visitors to the Pan-American Exposition can secure quarters in Christian homes by addressing him at 175 Laurel St., Buffalo. The rates are: Rooms, 50 cts. to $1 per each person; room and breakfast, 75 cts. to $1.25 per each person. For further information address as above.

—The Christian ministers of Kansas City and vicinity give their third annual luncheon at 12:30 P. M., June 7, the menu being served by the ladies of the Forest Avenue Christian Church. J. H. Hardin is toastmaster and a number of the brethren are down for speeches. The occasion will no doubt be a delightful one and we regret our inability to accept the kind invitation extended us to be present.

—Bro. Geo. L. Snively, of Jacksonville, Ill., has resigned his pastorate in that city to become general secretary of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, whose expanding work, including the maintenance of three Homes, has come to demand the services of such a man in the field.

—The Board of Church Extension has just issued in No. 38 of Business in Christianity a new collection of church plans which will be of value to all churches contemplating building. This, together with a former collection of plans issued in 1898, will be sent to any address for 10 cents. Address G. W. Muckley, 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—The School of Pastoral Helpers held its first commencement at the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, May 12-14. The class sermon was delivered by J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard. An address was delivered by Dr. H. L. Willett. A. M. Harvuot, who more than any one else may be called the founder of the school, presented the diplomas to a class of eight graduates. This was followed by the class reception.

—We are informed by a member of the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, that the prayer-meeting of that congregation on last Wednesday night was of especial interest. The topic was "Missions," and was discussed by six papers on various fields by members of the C. W. B. M. and Y. P. S. C. E. The literary standard was high and the papers showed study. The attendance was about 100.

—The fifty-ninth commencement of the University of Missouri, including the tenth anniversary of the inauguration of Richard Henry Jesse as president of the University, will be held at Columbia, June 1-5. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. J. S. Kirtley, of Kansas City, and Dr. S. S. Laws, former president of the University, will make an address. On commencement day, President Jesse will speak on "The University during the Past Decade."

—Mr. and Mrs. Aden L. Fillmore who have charge of the music at the First Church at Allegheny, have been granted an extended leave of absence by the church. Prof. and Mrs. Fillmore will go to New York City about the first week in June, where Bro. Fillmore will pursue a course of studies in music. Bro. Fillmore has had charge of the music at Allegheny about five years and has built up one of the largest, most efficient and most faithful voluntary chorus choirs in this part of the state.

—The annual convention of the churches of the Sedalia district was held at Warrensburg, Mo., May 13 15. The attendance was good and the program ably carried out. G. A. Hoffmann delivered an address on "Home Missions." H. A. Denton says that "the night addresses of W. F. Richardson and J. H. Hardin were worth crossing the state to hear." Special attention will be given to county meetings during the coming year, as through this means the state work is brought into most vital contact with the masses of the people. C. C. Hill, of California, was elected president and J. H. Allen, of Bunceton, secretary.

Catarrh

The cause exists in the blood, in what causes inflammation of the mucous membrane.

It is therefore impossible to cure the disease by local applications.

It is positively dangerous to neglect it, because it always affects the stomach and deranges the general health, and is likely to develop into consumption

Many have been radically and permanently cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses the blood and has a peculiar alterative and tonic effect. R. Long, California Junction, Iowa, writes: "I had catarrh three years, lost my appetite and could not sleep. My head pained me and I felt bad all over. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and now have a good appetite, sleep well, and have no symptoms of catarrh."

—O. D. Maple writes that C. E. Cannon, now of Chariton, Ia., preached at Cameron, Ill., May 19, while on a visit in Illinois.

—All persons who expect to attend the Missouri Sunday-school Convention in Sedalia, program of which will be found elsewhere in this paper, should send their names in advance to H. B. Shain, Sedalia, Mo., chairman of Assignment Committee. By so doing you will greatly assist the Sedalia brethren in preparing for your entertainment and will possibly save yourself some inconvenience.

—The baccalaureate services of Christian College, Columbia, were held in the Christian Church on Lord's day evening. The splendid auditorium including the lecture room was crowded to its utmost capacity. The young ladies of Christian College were all in white, and the graduating class of thirty-one had white robes and white mortar boards. The spectacle was inspiring. The music was of a high order. The institution excels in its musical training, both vocal and instrumental. A musical entertainment given on Saturday evening was the work of artists of which any institution might feel proud. At the close of the baccalaureate services with the exception of the last piece of music, one of the officers of the church announced that at a meeting of the board of elders on that afternoon, it was voted to give their pastor, C. H. Winders, a vacation of two or three months as he might require, to visit Europe in company with Dr. Moore, who sails next week. This was the sixth anniversary of Bro. Winders' pastorate of the church. He asked the consent of the church to this arrangement and it was unanimously given. This graceful act was gracefully acknowledged by Bro. W. who sails from Boston June 5, on his first trip to the Old World.

—E. L. Poston will deliver the Decoration Day address for the G. A. R., at Cozad, Neb.

—The offering for home missions shows a falling off of $551.59 for the last week. We hope that we shall not have to record any more losses in our missionary collections. They should be larger every week than for the corresponding week of last year.

—The Children's Day offering should be sent promptly to F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, O. Send by bank draft, post office order, express order or registered letter. Be careful to give the local name of the school when different from the post office.

—The Western Passenger Association has granted a rate of one fare for the round trip for all points within its territory to our National Convention at Minneapolis, Oct. 10-17, and the same concession will doubtless be granted by the Central Passenger Association. The Minneapolis brethren are exhibiting great zeal and enterprise in their preparations and will make the convention a success.

—We are requested by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman to announce the Winona Bible Conference to be held at Winona Lake, Ind., Aug. 17-27. The grounds are opened July 1 and the summer school will hold its session July 1 to August 17. Many distinguished men will be in attendance at the conference, including Rev. George T. Purvis, Rev. John McNeill, of Scotland, Rev. James M. Buckley and John Willis Baer. Board is cheap and special railroad rates may be secured. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may wish to attend.

—In connection with its commencement exercises June 9-13, Western Reserve College will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary. An address will be delivered by Prof. McGiffert and the baccalaureate sermon will be preached by the president, Charles F. Thwing. The anniversary address will be by Rev. Josiah Strong. That the institution is prosperous and growing is evident from the fact that, in connection with the celebration, ground will be broken for a new building, two corner stones will be laid and a laboratory will be formally opened.

—The American Institute of Sacred Literature has inaugurated a general movement looking to the observance of an interdenominational Bible Study Sunday on Sept. 15, 1901. It is desired to secure at least 2,000 signatures of ministers who will promise to preach on this day a sermon on the subject of Bible study and it is hoped that many will be moved also to organize Bible study classes in their churches. The Sunday-school, as at present conducted, is not satisfactorily exercising the whole teaching function of the church and such efforts as this to awaken a deeper interest in Bible study should receive the fullest encouragement. Those who are interested in this announcement of Bible Study Sunday should send for further information to the American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago.

—The annual boat excursion for the benefit of the Christian Benevolent Association occurs Friday, June 7. The splendid side-wheel steamer, City of Providence, has been engaged for the occasion and will leave North Market Street at 8:30 A. M., foot of Olive Street, 9:30 A. M., and Krauss Street, South St. Louis, 10:30 A. M., for Montesano Park. Tickets sell for 25c for adults and 10c for children under 15 years of age. Dinner will be served on board the boat for 25c. The object of this excursion is to assist the benevolent institutions under the care of the Benevolent Association and to afford an opportunity for social enjoyment and acquaintanceship among the members of our various churches and Sunday-schools in the city. It is hoped that those of our members in the city who can do so will avail themselves of this opportunity for a day's outing and social enjoyment.

—The convention of the Sixth Missionary District of Illinois will be held at Danville, June 18-20. Among the subjects for addresses we note the following: "What are We here for?" J. I. Gunn. "The work of the District Evangelist," R. L. Brown. "City Evangelization," W. B. Taylor. "The Elect Lady," J. C. Coggins. "The Heroism of Humble Service," Edwin Curry. "What an Independent Evangelist can do," E. M. Norton. "Eureka College," Prof. Silas Jones. "Our Young People and Citizenship," H. M. Barnett. "Christ and the Working Man," Fred Jones. "Relation of Church to Social and Civic Reform," F. W. Burnham.

—The religious work of the Pan-American Exposition, as already announced, will center in "Tent Evangelist." A tent 70 feet by 128 feet, with a seating capacity of 1,400, has been secured and will be placed on a lot on the corner of Soldiers' Place and Lincoln Parkway, a prominent and convenient location. A vesper service will be held daily at 7:45, the hour between daylight sight-seeing and the evening illumination. At these services there will be such speakers as Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, Dr. Francis E. Clark, Rev. Josiah Strong, Dr. Gunsaulus, Edward Everett Hale, President John Henry Barrows, Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. Talmage. On Sunday a four o'clock service will be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The opening and dedication of the tent will take place on Sunday, June 2. In addition to these services, the tent will furnish a place of meeting for many religious organizations and gatherings.

Summer Bible-school at Hopkinsville, Ky.

We have received a circular from H. D. Smith, chairman of committee of arrangements, announcing the opening of a new summer Bible-school at Hopkinsville, Ky., to begin June 16, and continue until June 28, a period of thirteen days. The school will be held in the buildings of the South Kentucky College. Entertainment will be furnished at the college at the nominal price of $3 per week. The following extract from the circular gives the program, and other features of interest:

The school offers a really great program. Rev. J. B. Briney, of Missouri, is principal and instructor in Christian Evidences. He will deliver thirteen lectures in the thirteen days. Rev. A. McLean is lecturer on missions. He will deliver six lectures. Rev. Chas. A. Young will lecture six times. He calls his lectures Book Studies. They present briefly but clearly and with power the great teachings of certain books of the Bible. Prof. Young will also preach to a great mass-meeting on "The Divine Christ." Rev. W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, will give three lectures on as many periods of Church History. Rev. J. L. Hill, of Madisonville, will lecture five times on Homiletics. A most entertaining and profitable feature of the program will be a series of conferences on Sunday-school and Endeavor work, the prayer-meeting and other practical problems. These conferences are being arranged and will be presided over by Rev. J. W. Mitchell, the pastor at Earlington. Other lecturers and subjects are as follows: Rev. J. W. Ligon, "Crises in Christianity," and "Struggles for Liberty;" Rev. W. H. Ligon, "The Why, What and How of Christian Union;" Rev. J. C. Read, "The Liquor Problem;" Rev. J. F. Story, "The Gospel of Christ the Power of God;" Revs. J. W. Gant and W. E. Mobley, "Romans."

No charge will be made for tuition. The management believe that they are quite safe in depending upon the voluntary contributions of those who attend the school for its support. Each attendant will be asked to contribute what he may himself judge to be right.

The South Kentucky Christian Preachers' Meeting originated and is fostering this enterprise. This body of earnest men deserve the gratitude of the people of the Christian churches throughout western Kentucky. Their first term should be made a splendid success by the attendance from all parts of this section of those who have long desired the chance to combine in a short vacation rest and culture. Representatives of all religious bodies, it should be added, will be welcomed to this retreat.

LIFE SAVED BY SWAMP-ROOT.

The Wonderful New Discovery in Medical Science.

Sample Bottle Sent Free by Mail.

Swamp-Root, discovered by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, is wonderfully successful in promptly curing kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Some of the early symptoms of weak kidneys are pain or dull ache in the back, rheumatism, dizziness, headache, nervousness, catarrh of the bladder, gravel or calculi, bloating, sallow complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, suppression of urine, or compelled to pass water often day and night.

The mild and extraordinary effect of the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best.

Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and a pamphlet that tells all about it, including many of the thousands of letters received from sufferers cured, both sent free by mail. Write Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and please mention that you read this generous offer in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The Log of an Inland Cruise.

It was 9:50 P. M., Wednesday, May 8, when the last bell was rung, Captain Shrodes waved his hand and called "Let her go, John," to the pilot, and the fine steamboat City of Memphis backed out from the wharf at the foot of Pine street, St. Louis, and turned her bow down stream. Outside it was wet, chilly and disagreeable, but inside the cabin, ablaze with electric lights, we sat around a parlor stove, cozy and comfortable. The family physician had ordered the writer to get away from the city for at least a short trip, and the latter, with his wife, had elected to make the journey to Riverton, Ala., and return, via the Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee rivers, offered by the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Co.

Shortly after leaving the city we retired for the night to a stateroom as neat, clean and comfortable as any boudoir on shore. Weary from the rush incident to getting away, we slept soundly and did not wake until we were called for breakfast, and found that the clouds had rolled away and the sun was brightly shining.

The steamer left St. Louis lightly laden. At this season of the year the chief freight business of the boat is carrying corn to the South. This cargo of corn was collected at several points between St. Louis and Chester, Ill. Two days after leaving St. Louis we had made only one hundred and fifty miles, but the boat was laden with several thousand sacks of shelled corn, carried aboard on the shoulders of stalwart negroes. Some of the scenery along this portion of the Mississippi is very fine—especially between Grand Tower and Cape Girardeau At Ste. Genevieve, Chester, Belgium, Grand Tower, Cape Girardeau and Thebes we made brief stops, and at midnight Friday night arrived at Cairo, where we left the Mississippi and turned into the Ohio.

When we awoke Saturday morning we found the boat just making the landing at Paducah, Ky., the lively city at the confluence of the Ohio and Tennessee rivers. The stop there was of brief duration. Hitching onto a coal barge, whose cargo was transferred to our boiler deck as we went along, the City of Memphis again turned southward into the Tennessee.

The Tennessee river is a beautiful stream. Its scenery charms the tourist; at certain seasons the hunter and fisherman find good sport in, upon and near it, and it is an ideal stream for steamboating. In the Mississippi the channel is forever shifting and the pilot is always on the anxious seat. Week before last he took the boat safely over a certain crossing, with ten feet of water under her keel, but that does not signify that he can take her through the same place this week. Perhaps he can; perhaps he can't. That is why the lead is going so frequently in certain parts of the Mississippi and the passenger who wakens at midnight hears a sonorous negro voice intoning—"Ma-a-ark twain . . . Quarter less twain. . . . Ni-i ine feet. . . . Eight-and a half," etc. There is little of this in the Tennessee, save at very low water. The channel is always in the same place and can be depended upon.

But in one respect the Tennessee is treacherous. We marvelled that we saw no towns. The boat would make a landing and passengers and freight be put off, yet there would be nothing in sight but a rough freight warehouse. We found that all the towns lie back from the river from one to four miles. The reason for this is that the river rises very rapidly, without warning. The farmer dare not leave cattle near the river, for it is liable to rise so rapidly that he cannot get them to high ground. Therefore both towns and farms lie back from the stream, and the steamboat passenger sees very few evidences of civilization.

Saturday afternoon we stopped for a moment at Fort Henry, 90 miles from Paducah. On February 6, 1862, this fort surrendered to Gen. Grant. Fort Donelson, which was taken a few days later (Feb. 16) lies 12 miles away. The embankments of Fort Henry may still be plainly seen.

Early Sunday morning we reached Johnsonville, Tenn., and remained there all day, unloading corn into the railroad elevator. Capt. James Koger, superintendent of the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Co., was on board, and he kindly constituted himself our guide and explained to us the destruction of the Union ware-houses and gun-boats, which happened here in 1864. At the time of the occurrence, the eastern bank of the river was lined with ware-houses containing stores for Sherman's army, and on the river lay twenty-four gun-boats. Gen. Forrest slipped up on the western bank, got his artillery in position and early in the morning opened fire, burning the ware-houses and sinking the gun-boats. To-day, thirty-seven years later, there may be plainly seen the evidences of the great fire, and at low water the wrecks of the sunken boats are visible.

Long ago, before there was any Johnsonville, the Indians made this point a great camping-place. Capt. Koger is an authority on Indians and he showed us many evidences of their sojourn there. We found a number of flint knives, arrow-heads, etc., broken bits of pottery, and also the collar bone of some "big Injun," deceased. We are under many obligations to Capt. Koger for his kindness to us. We tried to find a church in Johnsonville, but there were no services on the Sunday we were there.

Sunday evening, having discharged about 4,000 sacks of corn, we left Johnsonville and proceeded still southward. Monday morning we passed Crump's Landing, where Gen. Lew Wallace was camped just before Shiloh, and came to Pittsburg Landing. Here is the battlefield of Shiloh, the scene of a great fight on April 6 and 7, 1862. The steamer waited while we went ashore and visited the beautiful national cemetery which the government has established here and where are buried about 4,000 Union soldiers. It is a place of much natural beauty, lying on a high bluff overlooking the river and under the direction of the custodian, Mr. John W. Shaw, much is being added. Roads and walks, trees, plants and shrubs, expert landscape gardening, etc., are making this one of the most beautiful of the national cemeteries.

Monday afternoon, after passing Iuka, Miss, the scene of another battle, we reached Riverton, Ala., where the boat discharges the remainder of her freight and turns homeward. Riverton is only a small village. The only thing of interest there—besides the exotic whiskers of the railroad agent (we beg his pardon, for he is a most courteous gentleman,) which are visible for three miles on a dark night* and make the electric searchlight on the steamboat look like a cheap tallow candle—is the massive stone work forming the locks and entrance to what will some day be a canal, eight miles long, around the rapids which make the navigation of the Tennessee above Riverton dangerous save at high water.

Just after dark, Monday evening, we left Riverton, and, after a stop at Waterloo, on the other side of the river, turned northward and started for St. Louis At Waterloo, Swallow Bluff and other points the boat paused to take on her cargo of lumber for St. Louis. Paducah was reached Wednesday afternoon, and we spent an hour seeing the town. The "Elks' Carnival and Street Fair" was in progress and the city was full of visitors. St.

GIRLS AT SCHOOL

While they are accumulating knowledge on the profound sciences, are often so ignorant of their own natures that they allow local disease to fasten on them to the ruin of the general health. Backache, headache, nervousness, point to a disordered or diseased local condition which should have prompt attention.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription may be relied upon as a perfect regulator. It stops enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"Your letter just received," writes Miss Rose Kilfether, of 43 West Sharpnack St., Germantown, Philadelphia, Penna. "Words fail to express how thankful I am to you for your advice. I must confess that for the length of time I have been using your medicine I have found it to be the most wonderful and best remedy for female trouble that I ever have tried. Sorry I did not know of your 'Favorite Prescription' years ago."

TWO RACKS TO TEXAS

Effective March 10th, 1901, the

FRISCO LINE

Announces the Opening of its

Red River Division

...To...

Denison and Sherman, Texas.

Through Train Service will shortly be established from St. Louis and Kansas City over the Shortest Line to Texas

Louis was reached at 2:30 P. M., Friday, May 17.

Our trip was enlivened by the company of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Tanner, of St. Louis. They were charming young people who had just been married because they loved each other, and didn't care who knew it. They had to stand a great deal of guying and "jollying," but took it all with equanimity and good humor. Theirs was a runaway match—justifiably so. Mr. Tanner is a successful young business man who has won a beautiful bride.

The trip was further enlivened by the presence, on the return journey, of Mr. William Rhea, of Mt. Pleasant, Tenn. Mr. Rhea is a tall, pale young man with a sad, sweet smile, whose mission in life is the dissemination of information for the benefit and enlightenment of his fellow mortals. He is so full of information that it exudes from him like sweet fragrance from the heliotrope. Two ladies from St. Louis were especially favored by him. "This," he confided to them, as the boat approached Belgium Chute, 85 miles south of St. Louis, "is where the Missouri river runs into the Mississippi. That"—pointing to the eastern side of the island—"is the Missouri, and this"—the narrow chute behind the island—"the Mississippi." The ladies accepted this, and, thus encouraged, he continued. He pointed out spots where steamers had sunk, burnt or blown up "and only one nigger out of three hundred and sixteen persons was saved." Or again: "Do you see that tall tree over on the shore? Well, it was under that tree that Gen Grant sat in March, 1861, and planned the battle of Gettysburg." (Grant! Gettysburg! 1861! In Illinois!)

The ladies thanked him for his kindness and assured him that he had added much to the interest and pleasure of their journey, but he insisted that it gave him real satisfaction to be able to help them.

We enjoyed every moment of our trip and shall certainly, if permitted, make the same journey on the same boat next year, if not sooner. We traveled over one thousand miles, visited Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Alabama, journeyed on three great rivers, had nine delightful days and nights, saw much beautiful scenery and many historic spots, gained several pounds in avoirdupois, and the total cost, including transportation, meals and berth, was only $12.00 for each person! The meals were excellent, the service good; everything was scrupulously clean. This trip certainly offers more for the money than any other we ever heard of.

The officers of the City of Memphis—Captain Shrodes, Mate Cox, Pilots Stout and Street, Clerks Baker, Strassner and Potter and Steward Profater, left nothing undone to make us have a good time, and are all thorough gentlemen. Mr. Baker was our guide and escort at Shiloh. This article is no "ad" for the St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Co. Our tickets were otherwise paid for. But we feel that in this trip we have found a good thing, which we take pleasure in unreservedly recommending to all who read these lines.

WHAT WE STAND FOR

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

The Ohio Convention.

The forty-ninth annual convention of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society is a matter of history. It is history not to be ashamed of. The women made a good record the past year. They offered $12.409.33 unto the Lord. Of this $10.449.90 was for the national board and $1,959.43 for state work. This is a decrease over the previous year. But that was expected, as there was a special gift of $5,000 the year before. The past ten years the Ohio women have paid $94.425 03 for extending the Master's kingdom. Sixty-four auxiliaries were on the roll of honor. That means they have averaged 60 cents per member for state work. The average per member throughout the state was $2.33.

On the program Miss Frost and Miss Grabiel brought thrilling messages of India's need and opportunity. Thos. Pinkerton maintained the Pinkerton standard on "Motives in Missions." Mrs. Helen E. Moses gave a magnificent address on "Are We Able?" Ohio Disciples always welcome her back home. The official roll for the coming year is: President, Mrs. Atwater, of Cleveland; vice-president, Mrs. S. H. Bartlett; corresponding secretary, Mary A. Lyons; treasurer, Mrs. McMillen; superintendent young people's work, Mrs. Russell.

The O. C. M. S. began Tuesday night. Secretary Bartlett submitted the report of the board. Some things in this report are noted: 59 men were employed. There were 7,411 days of service; 2,132 sermons were preached; 630 people were converted and 509 otherwise enrolled; 49 churches were assisted and five new ones organized; three new Sunday-schools were organized and 30 conventions held; the 75,000 Buckeye Disciples gave for all missions last year, $70,668 15. Of this F. M. Rains receipted for $28,803 90; Benj. L. Smith banked $5,364.71; G. W. Muckley claimed $7,736.04; Ministerial Relief got $1,010.30; the C. W. B. M., $12,409.33, while for Ohio missions, $15,344 17. The stake set for the past year was $15,000; 99 churches raised their apportionment for Ohio missions. We have now entered upon the jubilee year in our Ohio work. The Jubilee Convention goes to Columbus. The inscription upon the banner for this year reads, "2,000 in attendance at Columbus in 1902; 10,000 conversions in the state; $25,000 for Ohio missions and $100,000 for all missions this year."

The attendance at this gathering was about 560 from outside of Akron. The spirit and fellowship were delightful and inspiring.

Notes.

Justin N. Green will preside over the Jubilee Convention next year.

S. H. Bartlett was re-elected corresponding secretary, of course.

I. J. Cahill answered all questions about the great Dayton meeting very patiently.

The new church at Lexington was dedicated May 19. Secretary Bartlett was master of ceremonies; $1,090 was raised, which will pay all bills. This work is only 10 months old. There are 150 members. It is already self-sustaining.

G. F. Crites will do evangelistic work for the state board in southern Ohio, beginning at once. The first point will be Belleville.

Bro. Myers, of Mt. Victory, sees victory in the near future. Fifteen hundred have been raised for a house. The Chillicothe Mission has bought a $1,400 lot and will build this summer. The extension board has granted a loan.

F. L. Lowe has resigned at Rutland and taken the work at Athens.

J. Cronenberger will assume the responsibility for the good behavior of the church at Ashland, June 16.

J. M. Van Horn, as usual, made a good speech. It was his last meeting with his Ohio brethren. We are loth to give him up

It was a delight to see and hear J. Z. Tyler again. Bro. Tyler says if God gives him strength to preach again he will have a message he has never before possessed.

R. W. Abberly, of Columbus, Central, goes June 8, for a two months' visit to his old home in England. Geo. Musson, of Indiana, will supply the Central Church during June. The church grants Bro. A. this trip.

H. L. Willett's devotional studies of the five chapterless books of the Bible were interesting, instructive and helpful.

A. M. Harvuot took the place of B. L. Smith on the program and spoke for American missions.

G. L. Wharton was sick and not able to be at the convention. On Wednesday night Bro. Willett took his place on the program and gave a eulogy on the Bible which we dare say was never surpassed before an Ohio audience. For solidity, beauty and completeness this address was perfect.

H. R. Cooley has resigned at Cedar Avenue, Cleveland, and taken a place in the cabinet of Mayor Thos. L. Johnston as director of charities. The church is looking for a new pastor

C. W. Huffer presided with dignity and grace.

L. G. Batman so pleased the convention with his address on "Church Finance" that they asked for its publication.

W. R. Lloyd, recently from Kentucky, was welcomed into the Ohio fellowship.

Among the men of gray hairs but young hearts were Robert Moffett, Frank Green, Abram Teachout, Alanson Wilcox, John Encell, Lathrop Cooley, Dr. S. M. Cook and W. S. Dickinson.

All were delighted to hear Dr. Susie Rijnhart and glad to know that her new book on Thibet is now out. Send $1.50 to the Christian Publishing Co., and get a copy. All that needs to be said about the foreign mission address is that Rains made it.

J R. Ewers, of Bowling Green, is the new superintendent of Christian Endeavor work. He also made the Endeavor address.

"What a fine lot of young preachers!" was the exclamation heard on every hand.

J. A. Lord was ready with his note book.

W. W. Sniff reminded the convention of the fourth congress to be held in Cleveland next March.

The hospitality of the Akron people was faultless. The writer was handsomely homed with Bro. Pflenger, who is the largest manufacturer of fishing tackle in the United States. He generously gave me a bass outfit that I hope to test before this is in print.

This was the largest and best convention of the Ohio society.

J. C. B. Stivers has ceased to be pastor at Elyria and is preaching at Wellington.

The Sunday-school of the High street church had up a large banner, "Welcome from the largest Bible-school among the Disciples of Christ in Ohio. Average attendance last month 655."

The state board will foster the new West Side church in Columbus.

Four mission points, Newark, Lexington, Modest and Orwell become self sustaining this year.

A resolution to name an advisory committee of five to help pastorless churches and churchless pastors was laid on the table for one year because a few saw a pope in the far distance.

Jay Egbert, of Buffalo, was a visitor and will likely soon locate in Ohio.

Space forbids further reflections and the train is near the point where this must be mailed, yet the half cannot be told. Jessie Brown Pounds wrote the Ohio song and the convention sang and resang it to the tune, "Throw Out the Life Line." Here it is:

Help Save Ohio.

Help save Ohio, the mother of men!
Patriot heroes her freemen have been;
Knowing the truth that will truly make free,
Heroes for Jesus her children shall be.

CHORUS:

Help save Ohio! Help save Ohio!
Dare not to linger or stay!
Help save Ohio! Help save Ohio!
Souls are in peril to-day!

Help save Ohio, the homeland we love;
Help save Ohio, your sonship to prove;
Land where our fathers have striven and died,
Help save Ohio, the home of our pride.

Help save Ohio, for God and the right;
Save her—the nations look toward her for light;
Let heaven's banner be o'er her unfurled!
Help save Ohio to help save the world!

Columbus, O.

San Antonio, Tex.

The object of my letter to the several Christian churches is to extend my evangelical work among the Mexican race, and to ask of them a noble help in my strenuous efforts to raise it to a higher religious life.

With the means I have on hand it is the hardest work a minister can undertake to increase the number of his followers and assist them in their new faith. The Board of Home Missions gives me a salary of twenty-five dollars per month, of which I have to pay ten dollars for the rent of the house in which it is difficult to seat the fifty members of my congregation. Many of them remain out of doors during the services. With the fifteen dollars remaining I have to assist my family of fourteen members. It is utterly impossible to answer the several calls I have to establish missions in different parts of the state.

With a little help from the many Christian churches of Texas I hope to build a church that would place me on a level with the other Mexican churches of San Antonio, and would command the respect of my new converts. It would also be possible for me to answer the calls and open new missions in the state with benefit for my race and glory for the church. You know better than I do that a church with a capacity for my actual congregation and those to be added is better than a room which has not the character of a permanent and established church.

With a little help from each church of our communion, as I said before, I hope to establish a church of our faith that in a short time will be able to keep me independent of your sacrifice. In the interest of our cause and for the love and glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, I beg of you, my dear brethren, to take into consideration this petition of your humble brother and see with what amount of money you can assist me for this noble purpose without sacrifice to your congregations.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

QUEEN ESTHER

By M. M. DAVIS. A charming little volume by one of the most popular preachers and pastors in our brotherhood. Taking the story of Esther as given in the Scriptures, he skillfully enlarges, supplying detail and incident, until he makes a romance of absorbing interest. The book is beautifully printed and bound, is illustrated and contains 132 pages. The price is 75 cents.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
....St. Louis, Mo....

The Christian Colony.

The Christian colony idea has worked to perfection. The honest poor from all over the United States and Canada are securing homes. About 300 families have been settled on homes of their own. The father has been made a better father, a better husband, a better Christian and a better citizen. Nothing affects a man's heart quicker than material help if he is in poverty.

I was once invited to teach the Bible-class in the great Bethel Sunday-school in Cincinnati. At the conclusion of the lesson I asked: "Do you wish to say anything on the subject or ask any questions?" One gentleman quickly lifted his hand and said: "I'd like to know how to get a home for my family in the Christian colony."

That question to me was the most impressive asked during that lesson session. His question illustrated the deep want of humanity. How can a man be influenced to become a Christian when he is naked, cold and hungry and in reality homeless, and his family in want? I advocate the system of practical Christianity, help the man in a material way, then you can influence him to become a Christian. A Christian's life should be an illustration of his teaching. As Christ, he must live among the common people. They learned how much he loved them by the service he rendered. If we render no service we fail in our mission.

Like Christ, many times a Christian is alone in his missions of mercy. I have been alone to a very large extent in my attempt to evangelize Ontario by colonization. I have asked for preachers, they came; some failed, others remained by the work. Christians, poor in this world's goods, came; many of them remained, and many of them have beautiful homes of their own. I have had brethren to arrive and stand before me and say, "Bro. Burriss, I have a wife and five children in Illinois. I could only make $20 per month, had a house to rent, family to feed, and other expenses. I cannot live; I am utterly without money, but am willing to work." Out of my own pocket I give that man a little money, then I send the wife a little money to keep her from starving, then in two days this brother at a cost of fifty cents owns 160 acres of land and is at work at good wages. Within eighteen months he has his family with him on his own farm, in his own house, with a cow, chickens and other comforts of life, all paid for. To help a man thus is true Christianity. I pray to do a larger work, while at the same time establishing the church in this great mission field.

R. A. BURRISS.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

In connection with our state convention program we are to have Bible studies by Burris A. Jenkins, of Buffalo, New York, in the mornings and by our own C. A. Young in the afternoons, and it will be worth your while to come prepared to take the outline studies home with you.

Milan is to be represented at the Sedalia convention by Alfred Munyon and one of the busiest lawyers in Missouri, but as school superintendent Bro. Bingham says he cannot afford to miss such an opportunity to better himself for his work, and that is the way hundreds should consider it, and if the ministers will do as did Bro. Munyon many other busy people will be there.

One of the best school reports has come from Maryville, and we are hoping that a goodly number of them will be distributed at Sedalia, as well as reports from other of our good schools. By this means others learn what to do and how to do it, so bring your reports to Sedalia, but in the meantime fill out the blanks sent your school immediately and send them in.

J. E. Davis took the work at Princeton Jan. 1, and the development that has followed demonstrates the wisdom of selecting the best, and the meeting of the apportionment in full for the first time in a good while shows you that the minister has very much to do with the giving of the church and school. Watch it. The average attendance of the school in three months has gone from 40 to 90.

At Ridgeway over $1,000 has been paid on the church debt, leaving only $300, and then another one of our good and efficient congregations will be clear of debt, and R. G. Sears will see somewhat of the fruition of his work and the co-operation of good and faithful men and women of God. A new baptistry was also going in, while the brethren were prompt in their apportionment to our work, for another pastor leads and the brethren walk in the way, thanks to him and them.

To be appreciated the church at Bethany must be seen, especially the class rooms, so arranged as to be separate or a part of the auditorium. Toward the house $11,000 has been paid in one year, leaving only $350, and that is provided. The school membership has increased its average attendance more than 300 per cent., all under the efficient leadership of Pastor F. J. Stinson. Enrollment now 225, the best in the history of the church.

Granger has one of the best audience rooms in northeast Missouri, and will soon have it entirely free of debt, all due to the faithful and energetic work of A. J. Williams, one of the south Missouri boys.

Memphis, J. M. Jayne and Granville Snell just simply head one off by remitting in full. Suppose the cause was never in better condition in Memphis than now, while J. M. Jayne is reaching out to all parts of the county, helping to build at Granger, then at Gorin, and now offers $50 toward a new house in the northwest part of the county. What a power such men are for good.

H. F. DAVIS.

Missouri Mission Notes.

During the last few weeks there has been quite a number of church rallies. The First Church in Kansas City, Marshall, Slater, California and Louisiana, and next Lord's day comes the one at Monroe City. All these are held in the interests of mission work, not foreign missions, nor home missions, nor state missions, but purely and simply missions. The one at the First Church in Kansas City will net not less than $1,400, which is a great victory. It was the privilege of the secretary to be present at Marshall, Slater and California. In Marshall Bro. Wharton rallied the mission forces in great shape, and the result was fully up to his expectations. In Slater, R. L. Wilson, the pastor, was putting in his best endeavors, and was assured of a great success which of course came to him because he and the church were working and praying in the same direction. On last Lord's day and the evening before it was my privilege to be with Bro. C. C. Hill at California. He had begun the rally for missions, preaching himself on Sunday night. Then Bro. B. F. Hill on Monday night, J. P. Pinkerton on Tuesday night, Mrs. J. L Moore on Wednesday night, Claude E. Hill on Thursday night, G. A. Hoffmann on Friday night, so when I came on Saturday little remained to be done except to put the crown on the splendid work that had been done. Bro. Hill said he would not cry if he got $50, he would be satisfied if he got $80, and he would be exuberantly happy if he got $100, and when at the close of the services he counted up the returns and found that they had $150, he was the happiest man in the whole town. In fact, the entire church rejoiced in the splendid contribution for mission work. It was far beyond anything this church had done before, and when we add to this sum the $25 they have already given to state Bible-school work, it was indeed a manifestation of the deepest interest in mission work. Great credit certainly belongs to Bro. Hill for all this. He has been leading his people to see the larger interests of the church in a new light, and they have been very willing that he should lead them. So, when a good leader and faithful followers come together there is no possibility of failure. It certainly was a great victory. More and more every year is the mission rally idea taking hold of our churches. So far, my observation has led me to believe that it is a splendid way to enlarge the knowledge of the people concerning all our mission interests, thus deepening their interest in all these great enterprises, and as a matter of necessity, their liberality thereto. A rally conducted right is a splendid thing. A rally misconducted will be a failure and so will any plan.

The convention of the Sedalia district met this week at Warrensburg. For several years this convention has not been a great success in point of attendance. This year, however, it was 50 per cent. better than it was last year in this regard, and the program was full of interest from start to finish, the leading addresses being delivered by W. F. Richardson and J. H. Hardin, the praise of which was on every tongue. The report of the year, as made by Bro. Blalock, the secretary and evangelist, was that one meeting had been held resulting in the reorganization of the church at Malta Bend. This certainly was a wise expenditure of the small amount of means that had come into the treasury, but outside of this nothing had been done. The treasurer reported an indebtedness of $200, and like the man in the parable, he had "nothing wherewith to pay." There was some talk during the convention of abandoning the organization, but Bro. Wharton, the president, advised against it, and his counsel prevailed.

I wish to ask the preachers in the state a very heart-searching question. There are many churches in the state that have not as yet done anything whatever for state work. I want to ask you my brethren, have you done all in your power to get your church to do all that it could for this work? If not, will you not at once, or as soon as opportunity affords, present this urgent matter before the congregation? I pray you by all the needs of our work, and they are great and many, by the destitute fields that are crying for our assistance, do not neglect this but present it at once.

ARKANSAS.

Ft. Smith, May 20.—Your readers have already been advised of the results of our meeting here, directed by Martin and Easton. The meeting continued for eight weeks, and 163 persons came forward. About 125 were candidates for baptism. S. M. Martin's methods and preaching never were better adapted to any community than to this city. Prof. Easton's chorus work was a great help. Our cause has now entered upon a new phase of its history in this place. We are unable now to care for our members in our present house. At the beginning of the present year lots were purchased for a new building, and this enterprise will now be vigorously prosecuted. Our new converts are readily finding themselves at home in our church life. Our old members have been aroused and a new conception has dawned upon them of duty and opportunity. Since the meeting closed 13 have been added, all but one by confession. Our membership is now about 450.—E. T. EDMONDS.

COLORADO.

Colorado City.—We have had five additions here in the last two Sundays and the church is growing in every way.—FLOURNOY PAYNE.

ILLINOIS.

Bloomington, May 22.—Good audience Sunday evening. Two additions, making 12 added for the last five services.—JOHN D. AUSTIN, Christian mission.

Effingham, May 20.—Bro. H. Y. Kellar has been seriously ill for the last four weeks. He is a little better at this writing. Bro. Beckelhymer, our 7th district evangelist, occupied the pulpit here Monday night and preached a rousing sermon, even with a broken arm; yet he works uncomplainingly. —A. A. HIBNER.

INDIANA.

Decatur, May 20.—Two added at my appointment at Decatur, Ind., yesterday. They have recently remodeled the church within.—AUSTIN HUNTER, Chicago University.

Shoals.—Have closed my work at Fairfield, Howard Co., Ind., and at Buck Creek Chapel Ch., and have removed to Shoals, Ind. Have taken charge of the church here for full time. Began my work on May 19. All lines of work in fairly good working condition. Will observe Children's Day and organize the Juniors at once.—A. W. GEHRES.

Thorntown, May 24.—In a three weeks' meeting at the Englewood Church, Indianapolis, there were 18 accessions. I assisted the last two weeks; Bro. S. W. Brown, pastor.—LILLIAN PEARL PERRIN, singing evangelist.

IOWA.

Albia, May 20.—Indebtedness on our new church, $4,000, all provided and a handsome surplus. Eight additions while Bro. Carpenter remained.—R. H. INGRAM.

Bedford.—My fourth year will soon close here and while I have received a call for the fifth year it is not my intention to remain. This a splendid field for a good man and I would like to see a good preacher and pastor installed by the time I leave. Ten added at our regular services the last three Lord's days, making over 200 during my four years' work. Last evening I delivered the baccalaureate on "Higher Views of Life" to 1,300 people in our new church.—J. WILL WALTERS.

Des Moines, May 20.—I recently held a series of meetings at Nelson, Neb., which resulted in 11 additions to the church, the liquidation of a debt of nearly $2,000 and the dedication of an excellent new house of worship. My next meeting is with Leslie Wolfe at Lewisville, Minnesota, beginning May 25. —SIMPSON ELY.

KANSAS.

Kingman, May 21.—Twenty-three to date. Interest growing.

KENTUCKY.

Bardwell.—Bro. R. O. Rogers, our pastor, has just closed a six weeks' meeting. Eighty-five additions, nine from the Baptists, one from the C. P. Church; fifty-two baptisms. Bro. Rogers has been with us since last October two Lord's days in each month. Already we see the good results of his untiring energy and patience.—ANNICE R. DAVIS.

Frankfort, May 21.—My brother, Lloyd Darsie, of Paris, Ky., recently held us a brief meeting of two weeks, with 33 accessions, nearly all of them by confession. The meeting did us all great good spiritually and our community will long remember the compact, forceful and winning sermons of the preacher and will always welcome him when he returns.—GEORGE DARSIE.

MISSOURI.

Albany, May 20.—I have just returned from Oxford, Mo., where I spent last Sunday, May 19. It was my pleasure to baptize three married persons and receive them into the Oxford congregation.—C. E. POMEROY.

Cameron, May 21.—Two additions May 19 and two May 12.—S. J. WHITE.

Elsberry, May 24.—E. J. Lampton has been with the church at Linn Knoll for 17 days. His work was, as it always is, of the highest order. All churches that need toning up, write the board to send Bro. Lampton. Additions: 4 by letter, one reclaimed and two by confession and baptism.—W. W. RUMSEY.

Memphis, May 26.—Four additions recently at Memphis. Our church adjourned services to-day to attend the dedication of a house of worship for our people in Garin, of this county. A. J. Williams is the pastor there.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Richland, May 23.—My work at Richland is moving off nicely. I took two confessions and one by statement at Linn Creek last Sunday. I will go there once a month this year. Hope to finish their house soon. I will preach at Stoutland on the first Sunday in June, have dinner on the ground and baptizing in afternoon.—J. R. BLUNT.

St. Louis.—Three accessions at the Ellendale church, L. B. Coggins, pastor. One addition at Fourth Church, E. T. McFarland, pastor.

Savannah, May 27.—One valuable addition yesterday from the Presbyterians. One wedding since last report.—A. R. HUNT.

MONTANA.

Kalispell, May 20.—Forty two additions to date in our meeting.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT.

NEBRASKA.

Gering, May 21.—The meeting here of three weeks closed Sunday night. The audiences were good all the time and the last night the court house where we held the meetings would not accommodate all who came. Twenty-one was added, 16 by confession and baptism, two reclaimed and three by relation and three were from the Methodists, Episcopalians and Baptists. We begin at Chadron Thursday night.—R. A. GIVENS.

Tekamah, May 21.—We dedicated the beautiful new church here yesterday; value $2,000; raised $1,400, the amount necessary to clear them from debt. Prof. Reeves from Cotner University and Pastor Hollingsworth from Craig were present and assisted us in many ways. A. G. Smith is the pastor. There are some splendid brethren here who have made and are making great sacrifices. Twenty-two additions in all.—C. C. ATWOOD AND WIFE.

Ulysses.—A. L. Ogden, Bible-school evangelist, spent the 12th at Geneva doing business for the board, and arranged a meeting to be held there in June. He is now near Ord in a meeting. J. S. Beem closed his meeting at Miller after two weeks, having 23 additions. The church was reorganized with 33 members. He is now at Burwell in a meeting; expects to hold a tent meeting soon after the Burwell meeting. Atwood closed at Tekamah on the 19th, but remained over for

Have You Got Rheumatism?

You Can Be Cured; FREE.

A Scientific Discovery Which Will Revolutionize the Treatments of Rheumatism.

It is now possible to be cured of any form of rheumatism without having your stomach turned up-side down or being half choked to death and made to vomit, and every sufferer from rheumatism should welcome this new and marvelous discovery with open arms and give it an honest trial. John A. Smith, Milwaukee, Wis., while apparently hopelessly sick with rheumatism, hit upon a combination of drugs and is generous enough to send it free to every sufferer who writes at once. It is a home treatment and will not keep you from your work.

As you know if you've tried them, every so-called rheumatic remedy on the market to-day, except this genuine cure, will cause you violent stomach pains and vomiting, and some of them are so dangerous they will cause heart trouble. And the worst of it is they never cure. When a person has rheumatism the constitution is so run down that he should be very careful what he puts into his stomach.

It therefore gives me pleasure to present a remedy that will cure every form and variety of rheumatism without one single unpleasant feeling. That remedy is

"GLORIA TONIC."

Before I decided to tell the world about the discovery of "Gloria Tonic," I had it tried on hospital and sanitarium patients with perfect success. But some people never will believe anything until they know it from experience, so the best and quickest way is for you to write me that you want to be cured, and I will send you a trial box of "Gloria Tonic" free of cost. No matter what your form of rheumatism is—acute, chronic, muscular, inflammatory, deformant, sciatic, neuralgic, gout, lumbago, etc., "Gloria Tonic" will surely cure you. Do not mind if other remedies have failed you, nor mind if doctors say you are incurable. Mind no one, but write me to-day sure. "Gloria Tonic" will stop those aches and pains, those inflammations and deformities, and cure you so that life will again be worth living. This offer is not for curiosity seekers, but is made to rheumatics only. To them I will send "Gloria Tonic" free.

Never before has a remedy been so highly endorsed as "Gloria Tonic." Among the eminent people who recommend its properties and say it positively will cure rheumatism is

DR. QUINTERO, of the University of Venezuela, whose endorsement of Gloria Tonic bears the official seal of the United States Consulate.

THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT of London, England, prior to sending it into that country, made a thorough investigation of its ingredients with the result that it is admitted without any restriction; thus it cannot contain poisons or worthless drugs.

A MEDICAL JOURNAL writes: Gloria Tonic possesses all the qualities desired by Dr. Haig to alter the uric acid and thus create a new epoch in the practice of medicine; hence Gloria Tonic should receive recognition from the medical profession and health journals throughout the United States.

If you are a sufferer, send your name to-day, and by return mail you will receive a trial box of "Gloria Tonic," and also the most elaborate book ever gotten up on the subject of Rheumatism, absolutely free. It will tell you all about your case. You get "Gloria Tonic" and this wonderful book at the same time, both free; so let me hear from you at once, and soon you will be cured. Address, JOHN A. the 26th; 22 additions and the house dedicated. A. W. Henry begins a meeting again at Wakefield on the 26th. They were interrupted in the winter by smallpox. Smallpox has closed the churches at Hebron temporarily, and Bro. Schell was at Wymore over Lord's day the 19th. The convention of No. 3 at Fremont was well attended and was very excellent all through. The preachers were nearly all present, besides several from without. Notable among them was the movement to send the different preachers to the unoccupied places in the district, with a view to ascertaining what can be done to start the work in them. Places were listed, assigned to the men nearest, and the canvass is to be reported within a month. S. T. Martin was elected president, Howard Cramblett, corresponding secretary for the ensuing year, and the next convention will be held at south Omaha. No. 3 stands well in the lead in the matter of payments on apportionments this year, and it will be a lively district that can overtake them before the close of the year, June 30. Not only do they lead in the amount given, but in the proportion of those giving.—W. A. BALDWIN.

OHIO.

Brilliant, May 23.—We have in our Lord's day school three members of one family who for years have been regular in their attendance. Alton Bruney, age 19, has been present every Lord's day for nine years; Oliver Bruney, age 14, every Lord's day for five years; Nellie Bruney, age 12, every Lord's day for three years. The prizes given by the school have been in the Bruney family all these years. This certainly is a remarkable record.—WILLIAM STIFF.

TEXAS.

Amarillo, May 20.—Three confessions and two by letter last two Lord's days.—VOLNEY JOHNSON.

Lockhart, May 15.—One addition by confession and baptism at our Sunday service last Sunday.—J. J. CRAMER.

San Antonio, May 20.—Evangelists Wilson and Huston closed their work with us May 15; 122 were received into the church during the six weeks of their work. Of these 29 were by letter or statement. Two were from the Roman Catholics, four from the Baptists, five from the Methodists and one from the Episcopalians; 89 were baptisms, four could not be baptized owing to parental opposition after confession was made; 66 of these were between the ages of 9 and 16, and more than two-thirds of the entire number are from the Sunday-school. The religious community was stirred and that not by mere sentimentality, but by the same character of preaching that carried conviction and conversion on Pentecost. This can be counted the greatest victory any single force of our faith has won in this state. There have been larger ingatherings in two or three instances, perhaps, but in the face of terrific odds, in a city desperately and notoriously wicked, with Catholicism rampant and the record of years of terrible struggle, with the morale reduced to nothing, the gospel sword wielded by these valiant captians won the greatest victory ever won in Texas.—GEO. The Angel's Gift.

An angel stood by a cradle-side
Where lay a child in the flush of sleeping,
And softly the watchful angel sighed,
"What gift shall I give to this young life's keeping?

"The gift of gold? It will drag him down,
Perchance, to the world and its lower level.
The gift of pleasure? A soulless clown
Is he who knows but the feast and revel.

"The gift of fame? It is passing bright,
As over the pathway in youth it flashes,
But the flame dies out ere the hush of night,
And leaves but a handful of whitening ashes.

"Ah, child!"—and the angel smiling spoke,
"That thou mayest taste of the joy of living,
One single blessing I dare invoke:
God grant thou shalt cherish THE GIFT OF GIVING!"

"Exactly Square."

"It's a good place to load up when you once git to it," said the homespun station-agent, "but 'tain't every driver that knows how to set his wagon. Never knew but one man that could back his team up to that platform without swearin'."

"Likely his horse had got used to it!" muttered the travelling pedler. He was wondering if the man meant to be impertinent. Evidently he had overheard him letting out profane epithets and cursing his patient beast.

"Wal, I dunno," said the station-agent, "George Dean had fourteen horses, and sometimes he come with one team and sometimes with another. Never knew him to swear at 'em."

The pedler was cross. In the course of his business as a seller of small wares he had driven to this little country railway-station to take in a consignment of goods. He was a self-righteous man, who prided himself on being always "exactly square"; and the peculiar remarks of this blunt depot-master irritated him. The man had a good deal more to say about George Dean as he helped load the boxes into the wagon. "He was the squarest man I ever did business with," he concluded.

"Well, what's the matter with him now?" asked the pedler, finally. "Has he backslid? I notice that you always speak of him in the past tense."

"He's dead," said the man. "Died a year ago. But there won't anybody round here forgit him very soon."

The pedler was glad to escape. But when he drove away there was one more man who couldn't forget George Dean, the young market farmer who "never swore." Had he known that another sermon from the same Christian text lay on his road he would have gone another way. Religion and religious subjects were matters which he usually avoided.

As dark came on, he stopped at a large and well-kept country homestead, and secured the privilege of putting up for the night. As Providence would have it, the place was the home of the late George Dean, and he was the guest of George Dean's parents.

The vexation of discovering where he was changed presently into something like awe. What singular fate had sent him there? He could not prevent the bereaved mother from talking about her son; and when the hired team drivers chimed in with their hearty testimony he had to listen; how good the young man had been to his parents; how scrupulous in his duties to his fellow men; how loyal to the laws of God; how kind to his dumb animals.

"He never would drive his team horses to church," said his mother. "He bought Townie for light carriage work. The others always rested over Sunday."

The uneasy guest carried all this to bed with him and lay awake. What a difference between "exactly square" as he regarded it, and exactly square as George Dean had considered it! And he had heard enough to explain why. He caught himself envying a man he had never seen. Then the envy turned to admiration and self-reproach.

"You couldn't ha' put up here if it hadn't been for George," said one of the hired men the next morning, as he harnessed the pedler's horse. "He built that addition o' purpose to 'commodate travellers."

It was years before Wightman, the pedler, in his circuits through New England, stopped again at his Berkshire county lodging-place. He was not a self-righteous man now. A higher rule of life than his own had become his law, and the travelling trader was known as "the pedler evangelist."

During a long stage journey the driver remarked to Abraham Lincoln—not knowing his passenger, and finding that he would not drink, smoke, chew or swear—"I've a pretty poor opinion o' folks that haven't got any small vices. I always suspect they make it up in big ones."

Others have repeated that bit of cheap sophistry. The truth is that the lives which really rebuke wickedness and shame conceit are always pure in the "minor morals."

Self-Support at College.

We hear much of the increasing expensiveness of college education and the luxury of college life, but there is less said about the fact that, even in the most expensive and aristocratic colleges, many students earn their way during the whole course. Though the average expenditure of the college student is probably greater now than ever before, the opportunities for self-support are also greater and more students are taking advantage of them. In the Century for June, a college number, Alice K. Fallows writes on this subject. She says:

Any one who visits a certain little meat-shop in a side street of Boston on Saturday night, when the rush of trade is greatest, will find there an extra clerk, distinguished from his fellow-clerks only by an unusually intelligent face. Like them, he wears no coat, and he manages his long white apron as easily as they. His smile and quick repartee make him popular with the waiting throng, and he saws through the bone of a porter-house steak, wraps up the meat, and hands it to its owner as quickly and deftly as a professional. If the customer will go to a dingy grocery-store a little farther down the same street, he will find another man backed up against a kerosene-barrel, patiently rehearsing the price of eggs, butter, and soda to a bulky matron of the middle class, keeping his temper when she informs him that all these commodities are two cents cheaper at a rival store, and even smiling a cheerful good-by when the virago slips four cents' worth of codfish into her basket as the result of twenty minutes' haggling, and squeezes through the door.

If the same customer happens to be in Harvard Square the following Monday, at the end of a collegiate hour, he will probably feel like the victim of a modern fairy-tale, when he recognizes in two students, swinging across the yard with note-books in their hands, the butcher and the grocer of Saturday night.

In the modern development of undergraduate self-support, such metamorphoses from student to workman and back again are so common that a stranger within half a day's distance of any one of the well-known colleges for men is likely to meet with a similiar experience. The students themselves take these transformations as a matter of course, but the conventional visitor in a large college town may be permitted a start of surprise when he learns that the tactful person at an evening party, who looked after the comfort of the guests effectively and unobtrusively, and who set the social wheels in motion skilfully when they threatened to run down, was in reality a student, earning a dollar or more an evening for his services. It is rather disconcerting also for one with carefully regulated social ideas to discover in the class orator at commencement the night clerk of his hotel. But a nation which allows one of its sons to work his way from canal-boy to president could not, if it wished, escape a reflection of democratic ideals even in its most aristocratic educational institutions.

The opportunities for self-support vary in the different colleges, according to their size and location. Occupations practicable for students in a small town are soon exhausted. For this reason the self-supporting student in Princeton, Williams, Dartmouth, Amherst, Leland Stanford, Jr., and some other colleges must make the best commercial use possible of the college public, and not rely too greatly on the limited supply of outside work. But the man earning his way at the Chicago University, Columbia, Yale, or Harvard has a whole city full of possibilities to choose from, if the college body itself proves unremunerative. When the prospective student of one of these universities consults the list of undergraduate industries from the safe vantage of his own home, indeed, he feels as bewildered as a woman before samples of all the dressgoods in a store. His choice at first seems unlimited. But only a few encounters with the actual difficulties of earning his living serve to reverse his ideas of his own importance, and to make him thankful to do the first profitable thing his hands find to do.

The freshman, particularly, discovers before him a very hard row to hoe. Lack of capital, ignorance of the college public, its supplies, and its needs, a scarcity of friends and acquaintance—all these things he must contend against. Upper-classmen may be choosers, but freshmen, like beggars, must be content with what they can get. They may be among the fortunate ones whose high grades are to be rewarded by scholarships later on. But this vague possibility will not keep the wolf from the freshman's door-mat in the meantime, and he will have to bestir himself or go hungry. Fear of hunger is a strong motive, and it drives hard bargains with its victims; but an expedient that would be a tragedy in the life of an older intellectual man becomes a pastime to the student who looks on it as a temporary measure, and he shovels off sidewalks blithely, and cleans furnaces to a song.

A Legal Complication.

To the Indian all beasts are free as food except buffalo—this animal king he must not slay. But with the killing instinct, that has come down through long generations of living by the hunt, strong upon him, he realizes not the full value of this law, and evades it when he can.

The present year a half-breed killed three buffalo on the Athabasca. A policeman stationed at Grand Rapids found this out and arrested him.

They had to wait until a magistrate turned up to try the case. A Hudson's Bay factor arrived, going down the river with his trading boats. Every factor is a magistrate, but in this case there were complicated contingencies. The half-breed was the only pilot who could take his boats through the rapids; if the factor fined him for killing the buffalo and consficated the hides, the breed pilot would most surely sulk and clear out. This was a serious problem. But if he tried the case the buffalo skins would be his by right of perquisite.

In the morning the boats had gone down through the rapids; there was no magistrate to try the case; also there was no culprit, for the breed, who was at large under summons, had gone with the factor. Later, when the Hudson's Bay man returned, a scrip commissioner, who was also a magistrate, showed him three large, black, curly-haired buffalo robes, worth $100 apiece.

"Yes, I tried the case," said the commissioner, "and paid the breed's fine, which was only fifty dollars."

The factor sighed. He was a victim to his duty; but the commissioner would have to smuggle the robes out, for though he might keep them in his possession in the territory, the law would not allow him to export them.—Saturday Evening Post.

Expensive Ugliness.

By tradition rather than necessity, says Charles M. Skinner in the Saturday Evening Post, the modern factory is a paragon of ugliness. The owner appears to think that he has fulfilled his duty to his employees if he has provided running water and fire escapes. It is not so greatly to his discredit that he does no more, because he has accepted custom in such matters, and if, now and then, he hears of improvements in other mills or in the way of running them, he dismisses the subject as the whim of sentimentalists, as of no practical consequence, and as a probable drag on business. Experience has proved this view to be a wrong one. The best protection against labor troubles is interest in the laborer. This interest need not and should not take the form of condescension and charity, which are demeaning and humiliating to their object, but should be a practical service which is no more called in question than is the workman's right to air, water and protection against danger from the explosion of chemicals or the escape of noxious vapors.

We see the beginning of a change in the work that has been done, in a noted instance, in a factory in Dayton, O., as well as in a hundred other shops in this country that have followed the same methods more or less closely; in the model houses built for mechanics near the great gun works of Krupp in Germany; in the improvements in and about the mills and shops of a maker of cocoa in England, of a maker of pickles in Pennsylvania, and of a maker of silk in Connecticut; and in no instance has the employer repented his interest or generosity. For it is not generosity—it is investment. By stimulating the interest and loyalty of his working people the employer increases the output of his shop and betters its quality.

The things to be done need not involve great labor or expense. To keep the floors and windows clean does not appear to be a difficult undertaking; yet in a majority of factories in this country the floors are covered with oil and dirt, and the windows are so grimy as to make a sort of twilight, which is not only trying to the eyes but is depressing to health and spirits; and a dispirited man never works as does one who is cheerful. Soap and sunshine, therefore, are prime agents in the creation of comfort and content. But it is possible to do more than this. In one of the factories in Manchester the waste steam, which ordinarily passes into the air, is used to heat a greenhouse, and the flowers started there are taken to the mill, every weaver having his or her own window-box or pot of plants, while choicer blossoms from the conservatory are sent to employees who are ill at home. In a Massachusetts factory the waste steam warms a pond and supports a fine growth of water lilies, as well as the noble Victoria Regina. In certain cases the owners of shops have trained ivy, woodbine, wistaria, honeysuckle and morning glory over the otherwise bare and unattractive fronts of their buildings, and have even so concealed the lower parts of unsightly telegraph poles and fences.

Reading-rooms, smoking-rooms, rest-rooms, the cost-price restaurants and other benefits have added to the comfort and satisfaction of employees, and thereby to their activity and efficiency. The old-fashioned overseer pooh-poohs the idea of allowing any of his people to sit or lie down for five minutes if they are ill or tired, but a brief rest often puts heart into a man and enables him to finish his task. In such case, it is economy to let him have it. It is sometimes argued that pleasant surroundings detract from the attention that should be given to work—as if a person ever worked the worse for being clean and warm, and having plenty of air and light! This is the objection made by the sort of men who paint their factory windows to prevent their people from losing time by looking into the street. The fact is, that many persons are so irritated by these marks of distrust that the very object of them is defeated. The workmen are constantly, if unconsciously, casting about to see into the street that has been forbidden to them, and the dull walls reflect only their indifference, or hate.

There is yet another reason for concessions to the mill hands, and it is based on the present public interest in all schemes of betterment. The destruction of city slums, the increase of kindergartens, the establishment of free lectures, the appearance of the university settlement and of such institutions as Hull House, in Chicago, the substitution in reformatory cases of the indeterminate sentence for fixed terms of imprisonment, the legislation that enforces safety in mines and sweat shops, are tokens of the widening of a Christian spirit, and the improvement of factories is but in line with these reforms.

NOT HEREDITARY

In the main, consumption is not hereditary; it is infectious.

Low vital force is hereditary; which gives consumption its chance. An infection starts it.

Between the two, the crop is a big one: about one-sixth of the human race.

By Ira Billman.

We form within, the mould of all we see
Without. The midnight sky a star-bright rhyme
Reveals to him, who first from earthly slime,
In crystal fountains of immensity
His thought has bathed. Thus immemorial tree
And mount, whose shadows trail sublime
The landscape, like eternity through time,
Show vaster heights within the soul to me.

O spirit! with such giant, awful powers
To push the sky back in the deeps of space
And hang it there outspread, as jeweled lace
About the shoulders of my fair, sweet hours;
Keep pure, be great, so that thy greatness may Reflect infinity upon life's way.

Cinders and Tears.

Fanny and I were hurrying through the dusty streets. She was carrying a bundle of laundry; I was taking a bundle of copy to the editor.

Suddenly I stopped short in the wind, blinded by a flying cinder that had struck full against the eyeball and then tucked tucked itself away under the lid. The pain was intense. Instinctively my hand went up, but it was arrested on the way and firmly held.

"Please, Miss Hester, just let it be a minute."

"But it hurts—awfully! Maybe I can turn the lid and get it out," I cried, trying to unclasp her fingers.

"No, you can't. Of course it hurts, I know. But just stand here a minute and keep your eye shut—the tears are coming. Be patient, Miss Hester; just a minute now, and it will be out."

And she was right. After a brief space of intense pain, tears flowed, and with them the cinder flowed out. We gathered up our bundles and went on.

"A simple remedy, Fanny. I never did that before."

"And you 'most always have trouble, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed," calling to mind several occasions when "something in my eye" had caused me much misery and inconvenience.

"Mother taught me that ever since I was little. She used to hold my hands until I was able to control them for myself. It counts for more things than eyes, too."

"What things?" I asked, willing enough to draw out my friend, whose homely, practical illustrations had been of service to me before.

"Oh, hurts and things. I don't suppose you get many of them, miss; but any one who works as I do gets many little cuts. People don't mean to be unkind. But there are mean things—sharp words and cross looks—like cinders, flying about 'in the air,' people say, and now and then I catch them, through my eyes and ears, into my heart."

"And then what do you do?"

"'Rub my eyes with my elbows,' you know. Keep my hands away from the hurt. It is easier to get angry when people find fault or snub you just because they don't know any better. If I'd let you rub that cinder in, Miss Hester, you might be blind still. So mother taught me to be patient, to shut my eyes, stand still, keep my hands down, let the tears come, and then—why it's all over, you know."—Michigan Advocate.

The Man Who Killed the "Pork Bill."

Former United States Senator Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, who finished his senatorial term a few weeks ago by spectacularly killing the $50,000,000 River and Harbor bill, and who has since been appointed by President McKinley as head of the St. Louis World's Fair Commission, is still only forty-six years old, but has had a varied career.

He was born in Ohio, received a common school education in Illinois, and gradually worked his way still farther westward till he reached Montana, acting as farmer, railroad man, school teacher and politician in turn. Although from such a distant and sparsely-settled part of the northwest, he was chosen before he was forty years old to be chairman of the republican national committee. He had already been delegate from the territory of Montana to Congress, and when the territory became a state he was made its first representative at Washington.

An incident of his service in the House of Representatives illustrates his aggressive nature. It was in the discussion of the McKinley tariff bill in 1890, when various industrial interests were striving with might and main to secure benefits through duties on the importation of raw materials into this country.

Coming from a mining state Mr. Carter was very anxious to secure all the protection he could for his constituents, and he proposed a duty on lead ores imported from Canada and Mexico. The suggestion did not meet with sufficient demonstrations of approval to satisfy the westerner, who began a speech in support of his claims for Montana.

His breezy style and rich humor caught the House and set every one laughing. Hardly stopping for breath he rushed on with his appeal, and—strange to say—the House began to listen closely as well as laugh.

Finally Mr. Carter turned to his chair, in the semi-concealment of which, under the broad-brimmed white hat which was a part of his picturesque make-up, were two large cyclindrical rolls of paper. Grasping these he swept up the main aisle, talking all the way, to the semi-circular area in front of the speaker's desk.

All eyes were on him now. Every one was on the qui vive for the climax of the eloquent westerner's speech. Taking in each arm one of the huge petitions—for such they were—and approaching the first aisle on the Democratic side, he gave a mighty swing to his right arm and sent the great paper roll twisting and unwrapping itself down the aisle, while he held on to the free end. Turning as quickly to the other side of the chamber he gave a left-arm swing that likewise astonished the Republicans regarding the number of workers who had signed the petitions.

"There you are!" exclaimed Mr. Carter. "Thirty thousand men call for this legislation!" It is hardly necessary to add that he secured the protective duties desired.

PETE.

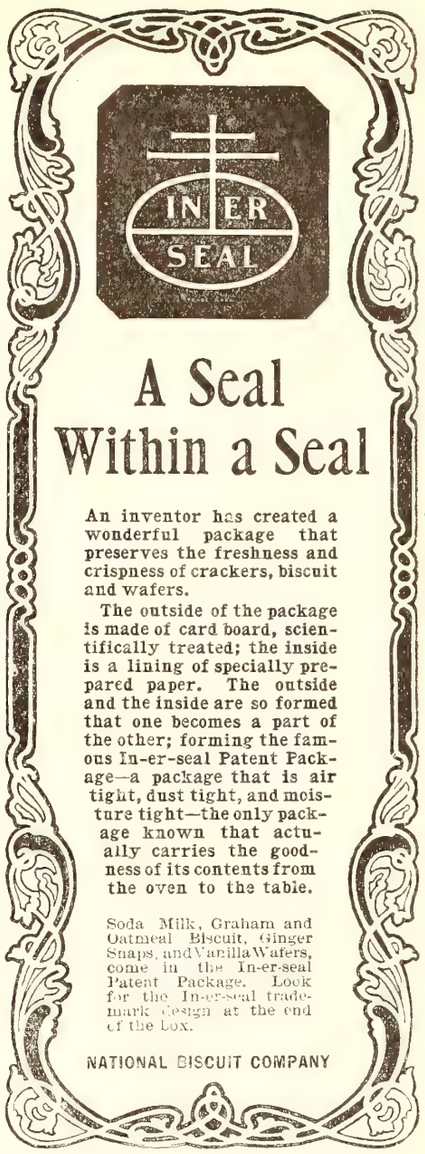
"No, Nap," said Mr. Gudger, "no; neither will Mr. Brown nor Mrs. Morris give you another hundred." "Oh, won't they!" cried the tramp; "Well, I just guess they will. I guess Mrs. Morris will. If she refuses I'll tell her secret to the town." "No you won't, Nap," said Mr. Gudger calmly. "I say I will, and if you don't lemme loose, I'll tell it right now, and you'll see what a secret it is!" "We're not going to let you loose, Nap," said Mr. Gudger; "are we, Mr. Brown?"

"Certainly not," said Edgar.

Nap wiggled wrathfully in the spring wagon, but he could not get up. "Look ahere, gents, you don't know who I am. I'm Mrs. Morris' brother, that's who I am. Now, you take these handcuffs off of me and apologize as befits you." "Oh, no," said Mr. Gudger, "you're not her brother, and we're not ready to apologize yet; are we, Mr. Brown?"



"Well," said Nap, "I am not exactly to say her brother, but I'm her brother-in-law, her husband's brother; at least his half-brother; that's who I am. And I'm uncle to Pete and Madge and Jennie. That's what I am; uncle! And Mrs. Morris is my sister Maude—that's what I call her. And I'm her brother Nap. And I'm the girls' uncle Nap. I'm a gent in hard circumstances, that's what I am. Now you know who I am, and that's just part of the secret." "We don't believe this part," said Mr. Gudger, "do we, Mr. Brown?" "Not a word of it," said Edgar, "it's ridiculous."

"You just listen, then," said Nap. "Sister Maude (that's Mrs. Morris)—" "You call her that again," said Edgar, "and I'll throw a third bucket of water over you." "Well, gents, Mrs. Morris, her husband's name before he died was Jack. And he was my half-brother, older'n me, and so it come about and in the course of events it was, that he got to be my guardeen, him being twenty-one, I not more'n fifteen. I'm free to confess I was a wild un; I couldn't be made to go to school—you may 'ave noticed that my language at times shows a need of patching. But I was as good-hearted a boy as ever lived, yes, gents. All I needed was to be drove and made to take my school learning. Payrents both dead, and guardeen a mere boy as we have seen. Jack never liked me. He wasn't but a half-brother, and that half was spilte with jealousy and dislike of me. I took naturally to business. My doting was to be working, early and late, yes, gents. I was that industrious, it makes me tired, now, and want to sit down to rest, just recollecting how industrious I was. Well, my pore ma had left me a snug sum an' it was a thousand dollars for to set me up in a business. I didn't keer which just so it was business; work; industry; that was me. Now, what does this here half-brother and guardeen of mine do but take that there thousand dollars that he palpably had no manner of right to, and squander it hisself on hisself. He done that; Jack Morris; Mrs. Morris' husband. Why did he do it? Well he had gone into a little speculation, and he was about floored and he thought he could save hisself and git out alive. But he lost my thousand and all he had, and there we was, us two boys without cent. He got it hushed up in court, somehow, so they didn't send him to the pen such as he should have been sent. Then what did we do? Gents, my sperrit was broke. As for Jack, he hired out as a day-laborer, and delved and toiled and saved and scraped and scrooged and sweated, and got on his legs again, and riz in the world, and married sister Mau—I mean Mrs. Morris. But me, I had, as I mentioned, no sperrit. I just sickened at the thought of work. Where was the inducement? I was a gentleman; so I just drifted and went on the road, and travelled without paying for my transfers, and never soiled my hands with menial labor, gents. I was a broken tree, a fallen tower. And my brother Jack done it! And sister—Mrs. Morris knows Jack ruined my life a-committing that crime of squandering my thousand; and that's why she dassn't refuse me a pittance now when I come humbly to her door a-begging for a crust; her a-sitting up in state in a house of her own; me, a tramp, a nobody, a castaway! She won't call me 'Brother Nap,' nor do her girls know I am their lovin' uncle; they never heerd of poor Nap as was their father's brother."

There was an ominous silence, and then Edgar said: "After her husband became prosperous, why didn't you go to him and demand your money with interest?" "Because I stood on my dignity; and besides I had fallen so low I didn't keer for nothing but to be left alone. I got to love my low haunts, my evil companions. But now I am of a mind to live a respectable life, and be the gentleman I am. Asides, I lost track of Jack, and just come onto the fambly by accident." "I guess that's the real reason," said Mr. Gudger. "Well, Jack he moved away, and I did lose track of him," confessed Nap, "or I'd made it hot for him, yes, gents! And you kin go and ast Mrs. Morris if ev'ry livin' word of this ain't so. She knows it all from Jack. She knows his sin and his wronging of his defenseless half-brother; and I give you lieve to ast her, more I invites you to ast her. She dassn't deny a syllable."

"Nap," said Edgar gravely, "your earnestness and fearlessness convince me that you have spoken the truth." "I thanks you, sir," said Nap, "and you are a gentleman same's me." "But," said Edgar, "from what you have said, it was no fault of this widow, and you must not disturb her with what cannot be helped." "If she is a widow, Mr. Brown, she's a widow on my thousand dollars. I only ask for a hundred, because I'm square; but I'm going to have as much of my rights as I demands. I don't ast for all my rights, but such rights and so many of 'um as I does ast for, I 'low to git." "Now, Nap," spoke up Mr. Gudger, "we've listened to you, and you'll listen to us. You'll not demand a cent of Mrs. Morris. In fact, you'll leave this country tonight, if we conclude to let you leave it, and if you come back, you'll come back to the halter. I suppose you understand this language?" "I understand," said Nap with dignity, "that halter is language for horses, and not gentlemen." "Yes, Nap—horses and murderers," said Mr. Gudger. "Nap, I'm a detective. Mr. Brown has employed me to trace you down. Now this is what we know about you." Mr. Gudger cleared his throat and continued with evident relish.

The following is inserted by special request of the subscription manager, who says he knows some cases to which it might apply:

A subscriber to a certain paper died and left fourteen years of subcriptions unpaid. The editor appeared at the grave as the lid was being screwed down for the last time and put in a linen duster, a thermometer, a palm leaf fan and a recipe for making ice. Editors, as a rule, are not prosperous, but they are kindhearted and considerate.

Two shopmen hired bicycles lately, and took a spin into the country. When they were perhaps ten miles out they decided to have a race. One of them got far ahead of the other, and in dashing around a turn, ran into a pile of stones. The wheels were demolished, and the rider found himself lying among the spokes. An old woman who happened to be passing was met by the second rider. "My good woman," said he, "have you seen a young man riding a bicycle on ahead?" "No," said the woman, "but I saw a young man up the road who was sitting on the ground mending umbrellas."

Uplifting Power of Christ.*

TEXT:—And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself.—John 12:32.

The uplifting power of Christ is the power of sacrifice. For the very next verse explains the text as a reference to the manner of his death. No force in the world is comparable to it. He who touched a far away and insignificant part of the world but briefly in his three years' ministry, and died in ignominy, and rose again, is the greatest moral energy in the throbbing, expanding life of this twentieth century.

Christ Made Known.

"When ye have lifted up the Son of Man, then shall ye know that I am he" (John 8:28). He walked in comparative disguise. All men wondered of him, as they had concerning John the Baptist. Apparently there was little about him by which he could be identified as the Messiah, save to those who possessed unusual clearness of vision and strength of faith. Yet there were times when his works flashed forth the secret of his power, and even the most stubborn ought to have been convinced. But the genius of Christ was awaiting its full disclosure. That could come only when all things were fulfilled; when finally they had "lifted up the Son of Man," then they should know; for it was by the revelation of his power he was to be recognized. And what a testimony the crucifixion is to his divinity! The veiled skies, the trembling earth, the rent rocks, the opened graves, and the heroism of the silent Sufferer, wrung from the lips of the heathen soldier the exclamation, "Truly this was a Son of God!" and sent the mob back to the city beating their breasts.

And from that day to this, Christ is made known by heroic sacrifice. Suffering is the sign manual of his presence.

*Prayer-meeting Topic for June 5.

A Savior, Not a Judge.

"For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world should be saved through him" (John 3:17). It was in need enough of judgment, and worthy of condemnation. For ages men had done despite to the Spirit of love. And yet in the midst of rebellion and desperate transgression, there comes the angel chorus of "Peace on earth, good will to men," instead of thunderbolts of wrath. The functions of a judge and of a savior are vastly different. The judge ascertains the guilt or innocence of the accused, and passes sentence. The savior clears the accused of guilt, and sets him free. In this we see the uplifting energy of Christ. A sentence of condemnation would have depressed still further the saddened, wicked world; but the tender sympathy, the inquiring, searching love of the Son of Man awoke the angels of penitence and hope, and lifted the world out of despair.

A noble Christian woman went to a low resort to try to rescue a poor girl. She was met at the door by one of the ferocious and desperate bullies that guard such places. She was alone, and not altogether unafraid, but taking her well-filled purse from her pocket, she suddenly placed it in his hands and said, "I do not like to take my purse about here; will you please keep it for me until I return?" The man was speechless with amazement, and the tears sprang to his eyes. In the very vestibule of hell he was found and wholly trusted by a lady! He proved worthy of that confidence. Oh, for fewer judges, more saviors!

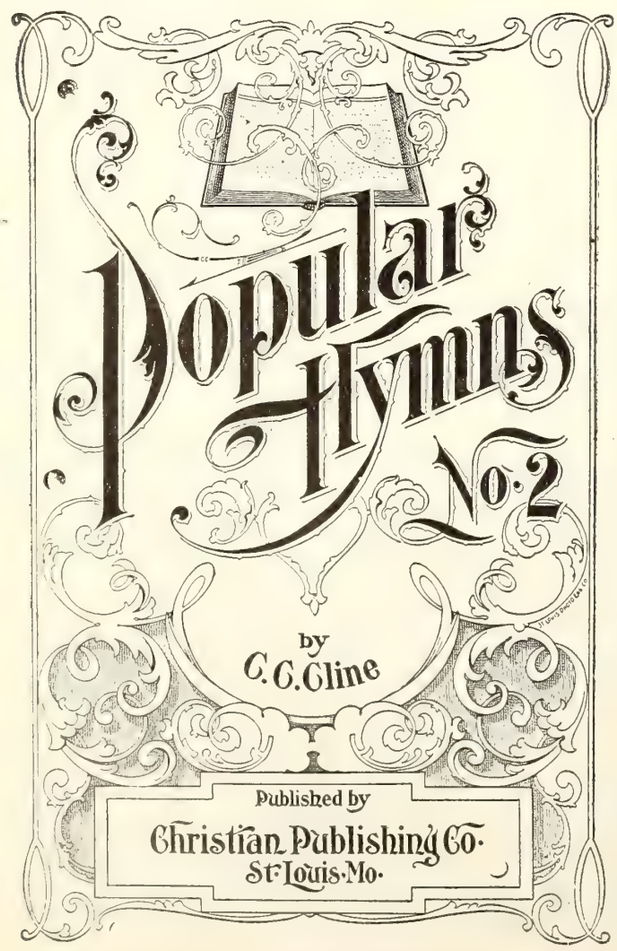
Low, But Not Lost.

The world is yet in need of this uplifting energy. Our homes are not all filled with it, and those that have it are not altogether blessed by it. Business is in far too many cases still conducted on the plane of pure selfishness. The ethics of competition are not the ethics of the gospel. Governments are incarnations of force. Ideals are low; conduct is low; the world swings slowly along through its March. Our own hearts are comparatively cold and icy. But there has been an immeasurable uplift, proving that the world is salvable. When God, inspired by His own infinite love, gave His only begotten Son, He did not take up a hopeless task. It is His world, not the devil's. And He is gradually lifting it up out of the shadow of sin into the light of life. Age after age scores new triumphs. Each generation leaves far behind some vice, some collective or individual sin.

"The world is rolling freedom's way,
And ripening with its sorrow;
Take heart! who bears the Cross to day,
Shall wear the Crown to-morrow!"

Shall we not see to it that as followers of Christ we make our lives instruments for the exercise of His uplifting power?

Prayer.



We praise Thee, O God, for Thy gift of love; for the forgiving grace of Thy Son our Redeemer, and for His mediatorial reign. We thank Thee for the nobler manners, purer laws, higher ideals which He has brought into the world; and we pray for the rapid extension of His influence in our own hearts and homes, in our own land and all lands, till the world shall be full of His glory. Amen.

Jesus Appears to Paul.*

After the death, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ, and the establishment of the Christian Church on Pentecost, no event of history is so fraught with interest to the cause of Christianity as is that of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. Though the gospel was first to be preached to the Jews, the sequel showed that the nation generally was unwilling to receive it, and that the larger triumphs of the truth were to be realized among the Gentile nations of the earth. Among the original apostles there seems to have been none with the mighty grasp of intellect, the broad spirit of catholicity, needed to comprehend fully the universal scope of the gospel, and to lead the company of chosen ambassadors out from their Jewish prejudices into the clearer understanding of their saving mission to the whole human race. Saul of Tarsus was just such a natural leader, and the Head of the Church laid hold of him for that purpose.

Saul, whom we know best by his later name, Paul, was a famous advocate of the strictest school of Judaic interpretation and life. He was, as he himself says, "a Pharisee of the Pharisees," a member of "the strictest sect of our religion." His thorough knowledge of and zeal for the law had brought him honors from his people. If not a member of the Sanhedrin, the highest Jewish council, as seems probable, he was at least a trusted servant of that body, to whom had been committed the work of stamping out the heresy of the "sect of the Nazarenes." He was an approving witness of the killing of Stephen, and it was his delight to arrest men and women who were suspected of faith in Christ, and try to force from them a denial of their Master and to punish the faithful with imprisonment and death. It was due to him, in part at least, that the death of Stephen was followed by a bitter persecution of the Christians in Jerusalem, which resulted in the flight of most of them from the city. He "ravaged the church," we are told, the word used being that which describes the ruthless uprooting of the vineyard by the tusks of the wild boar.

This Jewish inquisitor, whose cruel pursuit of the innocent reminds us of the infamous career of the Duke of Alva, the Catholic persecutor of the Protestant Netherlands, was not satisfied with driving the followers of the Nazarene from Judea. "Being exceedingly mad against them" he "persecuted them even unto strange cities." Securing from the high priest and Sanhedrin at Jerusalem letters to the rulers of the synagogue in Damascus, he started for that ancient and important city to arrest and bring back to Jerusalem any Christian refugees that might have sought shelter there. Several days were consumed in the journey, and the impatience of Saul to reach the city is suggested by the fact that his company was on the road at noonday the last day of the journey instead of resting in some shady spot, as was then and is still the custom of travelers under the hot Syrian sky. They were nearing the strong walls of Damascus and he hurried forward to reach their shelter as soon as possible.

Suddenly the whole company stood still, arrested by the bursting of a great light upon their eyes, which blinded and terrified them. Even the blazing mid day sun seemed to lose its brightness in the glory of the supernal world that shone about them. They fell to the earth and on their ears fell a sound which but one of them could distinguish. Into the soul of the proud persecutor there entered the majestic voice of the Divine Visitor who thus had robed himself in light, and he heard the words, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the goads." These last words seem to me to prove that Saul had been fighting against some unwelcome thoughts, which pressed upon him in his contact with the disciples of Jesus. It is difficult to see how such a man could behold the patient and cheerful sufferings of those who believed in Jesus without receiving some impression of the possible truth of his claims. By many it has been confidently asserted that the beginning of Saul's conversion dated from the death of Stephen, and that the prayer of the martyr cast into the soul of his persecutor a seed of truth which had begun to germinate. Augustine declared that the church owed Paul to the prayer of Stephen. However this may be, it is certain that the first words of Jesus struck dismay to the soul of Saul. Recognizing the voice as not of earth, and beholding a glorious form above him he cried out, "Who art thou, Lord?" The voice replied, "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest!" Ah! Saul, the blows you struck the saints in Jerusalem were felt by the Lord in heaven. You have not been fighting against men, but God. A sudden conviction of the folly and sin of his whole course of opposition broke upon him and his spirit was crushed into complete submission and abject repentance. "What shall I do, Lord?" is his humble question, in which he voices the language of the truly believing and penitent soul for all time. The proof of every professed conversion is to be found in such an entire submission to Jesus.

But the Savior has committed to men the ministry of grace in the gospel, and he will not himself declare the terms of pardon to any man. Saul is therefore bidden to go into the city, where he shall be told his further duty. Led by the hand, blind and helpless, he who had thought to enter the streets of Damascus as a proud and relentless punisher of the disciples of Jesus, now humbly came seeking peace and pardon in his name. A humble disciple, named Ananias, is bidden to go to the house of one Judas, in the street called Straight, and instruct the penitent in his duty. With amazement he hears that this man, whose coming to Damascus had been heralded as a dread visitation of wrath upon the followers of Jesus, had seen the face of the Lord and heard his voice, and that he was a chosen vessel to bear his grace unto the Gentiles. Gladly did he come to the fasting, praying Saul and minister graciously to his broken and contrite spirit. "Brother Saul, receive thy sight," is his sweet and kindly salutation. The blind eyes were at once opened and the Apostle to the Gentiles again heard the story of his commission as a witness of the Christ to all lands. Then he is commanded to be baptized, in accordance with the command of the Lord Jesus, and his soul is filled with the sweet assurance of his forgiveness and acceptance with God. The mighty tide of his influence is turned into the channel of righteousness and a new era begins for the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 9.

How to Enter Christ's Family.

(Matt. 12:46-50).

It is a very thrilling moment in Shakespeare's Henry V, when, before the battle of Agincourt, the gallant young king harangues his ragged and weary troops. Read the passage and see how he fires them by declaring that it is St. Crispin's day, and whoever fights with him that day and for him sheds blood, shall be forever called a brother to the king!

Brother of a king! How much that means in a country where monarchs are revered. To be of the same household with majesty; to be of royal blood; to partake of royal prerogatives! This is great honor.

Not one of us but may belong to the royal family of the greatest of kings. Not one of us but may, without shedding blood at Agincourt, become a brother of the king. How? By "doing the will of my father who is in heaven."

That will, first and foremost of all, is the allying of ourselves with his cause. No man can hope to be considered a brother of the king who does not come close to him and enlist under his banner. Are you trying to be a Christian and yet live away from the church? It is impossible to be one of Christ's and not let it be known

Are you trying to live a Christian and yet carry your church letter in your pocket or in your trunk? It is sometimes more difficult to convert a hardened letter carrier (not postman!) than it is to make a new convert out and out. One might almost say: "There is joy in the presence of the angels over one letter carrier that repenteth more than over ninety and nine new converts."

After letting the world know where one stands, it is not necessary to stand! We must do the will: we must be faithful over the few things; we must take heed lest we fall; we must be of the same kind as Christ, if we are to be his kin; we must be gentle and strong, kind and resolute, loving and courageous, harmless and shrewd. All these qualities shall come in greater or less measure to one who desires to do the will of the Father.

It is not brotherhood by blood which brings us into the family with Christ. It is brotherhood by obedience. How hard a lesson it is to learn to obey. Particularly does this seem hard for us independent Americans. Obey! Obey! and then shall ye be brothers of the king.

Nor is it a blind obedience, unreasoning, to which we are called. It is an eminently reasonable faith which is ours, a reasonable service.

It may not be a complete obedience, either. We may be slow and stumbling and halting. But the essential thing, after all, is the will to do his will. Here lies the real secret of our kinship with Christ. It is in the aspiration. With the poetic expression of this truth, by Ansor E. Cheaten, one of the members of my church, I close this article.

TWO JUDGES.

Man, his quick, impulsive judgments giving,
Trusts alone his narrow sense of sight;
He doth judge my loving by my living—
Is the judgment right?

Thou, O Christ! my every act art proving
By a test no human eye can see;
Thou dost judge my living by my loving—
I am safe with Thee.

5 BOOKS for $1.00

The following works are paper-bound booklets. Each is a valuable treatise on the subject to which it is devoted—concise and dealing with the fundamental facts rather than microscopic detail. The price of each work singly is 25 cents. We will send the five books, postpaid, for One Dollar.

Christian Science Dissected. By A. D. Sector. This work, issued last summer, has already had a very large sale. It is bright, breezy, clear and convincing—just the thing to put into the hands of one who is inclining toward "Christian Science."

Sabbath or Lord's Day. By D. R. Dungan. Is it the First Day or the Seventh Day of the week that Christians should observe as a day of rest and worship? This book answers the question conclusively.

Facts About China. By W. Remfry Hunt. The author has lived in Central China for many years. His book is full of facts about Chinese customs, language, government, religions, commerce, geography, etc.

The Liquor Traffic. By S. W. Crutcher. Mr. Crutcher has spent years in fighting this traffic, and in this book tells of his experiences with manufacturers and dealers of whisky in the church and out.

The Lord's Supper. By N. J. Aylesworth. This work is a defense of and custom of observing the Lord's Supper every Sunday. It is an able, convincing argument.

WARNING.—If you wait until you can go to the postoffice and buy a money order, you may never send for these books. Just send a one-dollar bill; it is safe, convenient, and saves you five cents.

[Obituaries of not more than 100 words are inserted free. For longer notices, one cent for each word in excess of 100. Please send money with notice.]

BRITTIN.

Nancy D. Mallory was born near Riverton, Ill., Sept. 17, 1836. She was married to Henry Brittin Dec. 9, 1856. To this union were born eight children, seven sons and one daughter. She departed this life May 17, 1901. A large audience gathered at the Church of Christ to pay their last tribute of respect to their departed sister. Sister Brittin was a silent power for good. The strength of her faith gave power to her character, which was a rich legacy to seven of her children who live to mourn their loss. J. LEMMON.

Athens, Ill.

CARPENTER.

William Shannon Carpenter was born in Guernsey Co., O., Feb. 14, 1839. He fell asleep in Jesus at his home near West Prairie, April 3, 1901, at the age of 62 years. In 1861 he came to Linn Co., Iowa. He enlisted in Co. A, Iowa Infantry, and served till the close of the war. He was married, Nov. 28, 1867, to Miss Nancy Jordan. To this union was born one son who, with his mother, survives him. In June, 1868, he united with the church at Lafayette, being baptized by the lamented John Martindale. He was a man of sterling worth, prompt and vigorous in all he undertook to do, upright in his walk, and zealous for the cause of truth and righteousness. He was a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for thirty-two years. J. M. CROCKER.

JOHNSON.

Flora H. Rome was born in Cameron, Ill., Oct. 6, 1858. About 25 years ago she was married to Geo. Johnson. To them were born six children, of whom five are living—the oldest about 25, the youngest a girl of 12. Mrs. Johnson spent the most of her life in Cameron and Monmouth, and died at the latter place May 19, 1901. Funeral services in the Christian Church, Cameron, Ill., conducted by the pastor. O. D. MAPLE.

ROTH.

John Roth was born in Loit Kirkby, district of Schlesing, Germany, March 22, 1861, and died at his home in Greene, Ia., May 14, 1901, of pneumonia. Bro. Roth was a member of the Christian Church, and was at the time of his death chairman of the official board. He was one of our faithful ones, of whom we can say, "to know him was but to love him." He leaves a wife and an infant son and a whole community of sorrowing friends.

G. A. HESS, pastor.

Greene, Ia.

STEVENSON.

John Dinsmoor Stevenson was born in Meigs Co., Ohio, July 11, 1825, and died in Alma, Neb., May 12, 1901. He obeyed the gospel when he was 18 years old, and at once became an earnest worker in the church. The largest portion of his Christian life he served as an elder in the different congregations where he lived. My acquaintance with him began a quarter of a century ago. At that time he lived in Lee county, Iowa, and had his membership in the Lost Creek congregation and was one of its elders. In 1882 or '83 I held a series of meetings for the Lost Creek congregation, which resulted in 21 accessions to the church, four of whom were his children. In 1884 Bro. Stevenson moved to Hardan Co., Neb., and settled first on a farm; afterward in Alma the county seat. He soon made a move for a church in Alma, and became one of its elders and remained such to the day of his death. He was a fine singer, loved to sing, and loved the church above everything else in the world. He was laid away on May 15, a very large procession following his remains to the cemetery. Such a life as his is well worthy of our best imitation. C. P. EVANS.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

By A. B. JONES.

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

SHEM A STORY OF THE CAPTIVITY

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This is the latest work issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Company. The author is already known as a writer of rare power. His books, "King Saul," "In the Days of Jehu," and "The Fear and Dread of Kings" have been favorably received, and have won him an enviable reputation, which will be greatly enhanced by this new volume.

"Shem" is a story which, in plot and sustained interest, ranks with the best modern fiction. It deals with an interesting period of Biblical history—the days of King Zedekiah and the Babylonian invasion, throwing a flood of light on the relation between the Jews and Egypt on the one hand, and the Babylonian Empire on the other. The old story of human love triumphing over obstacles is told in a way to hold the reader's interest to the end.

"Shem" is a volume of 299 pages, neatly printed and bound. Price, FIFTY CTS.

A BOOK WORTH $10,000

Are you keen for a bargain? If you had an opportnnity to purchase something for the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value, would you close with the offer? We think you would. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE? a new volume by W. J. RUSSELL, is easily worth $10,000 in cold cash to anyone who will faithfully study it and follow its instructions. You can buy the book, however, for $1.00, which is the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value. The scope of the book is clearly shown by the chapter titles, which are as follows:

I. What is Your Life?
II. The Value of Time.
III. The Body and Good Health.
IV. Intellectual and Moral Culture.
V. Character Building.
VI. Value and Power of Enthusiasm.
VII. Business Life.
VIII. Christian Citizenship.
IX. Casting Shadows in Life.
X. Words That are Golden.
XI. Good Books and Good Reading.
XII. How Shall We Amuse Ourselves?
XIII. Love, Courtship, Marriage.
XIV. What is a Christian?
XV. Life's Great Guide-Book.
XVI. What Think Ye of Christ?
XVII. Golden Steps Heavenward.

In all the 316 pages of this book there is not a dull line. The author is a master of choice English. He has made frequent use of story, incident and illustration. The most striking feature of the book, after its practical common-sense, is its readableness. Begin a chapter, and you will finish it; read the chapter, and you will read the book.

The volume is one of the handsomest ever issued by us. It is most tastefully bound in cloth, stamped in gilt, contains seventeen chapters and 316 pages, and the price is One Dollar, postpaid.

Book Notes.

The preacher who has not in his library those two splendid companion volumes, The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century and The Old Faith Restated, is seriously handicapping himself and his work. These two books, the one treating of the beginnings, development, progress and triumph of our great cause, and the other of the great fundamental truths and doctrines of Christianity as apprehended and taught by representative men of the Disciples of Christ, are, beyond all question, the two most important volumes in the distinctive literature of our brotherhood. There are, of course, many other books that the preacher and the intelligent Disciple should possess, but whatever other books he may or may not have, he should certainly have these two. The Old Faith Restated was issued a decade ago, and has had a large sale. It is a handsome, large volume, the joint work of seventeen of the greatest men in our ranks. Price, $2. The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century has just been issued from the press but is already becoming deservedly popular. We are proud that we have had the honor of publishing two such books. The latter is a book of 514 pages, cloth bound. Price, $2.

Sometimes a patron will write us something like this: "You ask me to pay $1.25 for ——, when I can go into a department store in any large city, and buy one of Dickens' novels, or Ouida's, or George Eliot's, with more pages and as well bound, for fifty cents. Why is it that we must pay so much more for religious books than for fiction?" Sometimes the writer may go farther, and insinuate that we are making mighty profits, and dogmatically assert that there is no reason, save avarice, why we should not sell one of our publications as cheaply as the department store sells Byron's poems. But there is a reason. For example, some publishing house issues an edition, let us say, of Byron's poems. One hundred thousand copies are printed and distributed through the country to be placed on sale, at fifty cents per copy. The book is not copyrighted, and no royalty has to be paid the author. The books are sold to people who carry them away when purchased, and no postage is required. So large an edition being printed, the cost of each copy is brought very low. The department store can afford to sell books at a profit of two or three cents per copy On the other hand, when we publish a new book, we pay a royalty to the author, or else buy his manuscript outright. Our business is practically all done through the mails, and whenever we sell a copy of the new book, we have to pay ten, fifteen or twenty cents postage on it. The sale of religious books, and especially those of a denominational character, is comparatively limited, and instead of issuing a hundred thousand copies, we issue one thousand, or, more frequently five hundred, and thus the cost of production, per copy, is much higher. Moreover, the selling of books being our main business, and not a side issue, as with the dry-goods store, or department store, we must sell at a fair profit, in order to pay expenses. And again, while the fifty cent book may seem to be as well bound as our $1.25 book, the probability is that it is very cheaply and poorly bound, and will fall apart after a little handling. We sell books just as cheaply as we can. Doubtless in the future, as our people become more of a book-buying people, prices will decrease, because more copies of each volume published will be sold. Take, for example, such a book as "Our First Congress," which we issued some time ago; price $1. At that price it is a question whether the book ever will pay for itself. But if we could have reasonably anticipated a sale of five thousand copies, we would have been glad to put the price at fifty cents, or possibly a trifle less.

MORAL: Let those who desire to see our books sell cheaply labor to get more of our people interested in the reading of religious books!

The third quarter of the year is near enough at hand for the Sunday-schools to prepare their orders or supplies for that quarter. The growth in the circulation of our series of supplies has been marvellous. From a small beginning, a few years ago, their circulation has increased, until at the present time our supplies go into over two-thirds of all the Sunday-schools in our brotherhood. This fact is, in itself, incontrovertible evidence of their substantial superiority over any other series. We have never made cheapness the primary consideration. Our first thought has ever been: How good a series can we produce? After that we have considered the question: Now how cheaply can we offer these supplies? The man who starts out to buy a horse, or a coat, or a gun, and seeks only for the cheapest article, is certain to throw away his money. The school that seeks the cheapest supplies, regardless of quality, may save a dollar or two, in the course of a year, but it makes a poor bargain.

Every sister who is interested in the work of the C. W. B. M. should procure a copy of Leaves from Mission Fields, by N. M. Ragland. This delightful volume by one of our most gifted and consecrated writers, is a memorial to some of the heroic souls who have laid down their lives that the gospel might be preached to those who sit in darkness. Not only is it a memorial to the dead, but an inspiration to the living. The book is one of the finest, mechanically, that we have ever produced, in printing, binding and illustration. The price is $1.

Twenty-five cents is all that it will cost you to secure a copy of Christian Science Dissected—the sharpest and most effectual expose of the insane and infamous doctrines of Mrs. Eddy and her followers that has ever been published. We offered the Christian Scientists, through their Publication Committee, to incorporate in this book, at our expense, their reply to the statements and arguments of the author, but this offer was declined. We also offered to correct any misstatements or misquotations which this committee might point out, but the offer had no results. Therefore, it is to be assumed that the book is correct. It is certainly fair, for it quotes freely from Mrs. Eddy and her chiefest lieutenants, and condemns them in their own language. The author of this work began his investigation of Christian Science with the belief that Mrs. Eddy was honest, but misguided, but before he had gone far he was forced to a different conclusion, and the correctness of this conclusion he demonstrates beyond dispute. The book will be sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price, twenty-five cents.

Special Catalogue No. 31 contains a great number of book offers that will surprise you. Of course you intend to purchase a few books to read during the summer, and by consulting this little catalogue, you may save yourself several dollars. It is not alone religious works that are ofiered in this special price-list, but biography, travel, adventure, fiction, poetry, etc., etc. There is something in it for everyone. It will be gladly sent free, on request. Our General Catalogue of one hundred pages, containing complete list of our publications, and profusely illustrated, will also be sent free to those who desire it.

THERE are doctrinal statements, which puzzle and bewilder, which are in reality excrescences on the faith and must be cast away by the natural and healthy action of the system. There are doctrinal statements, which once were true and did vast good and yet were only temporary aspects of the truth. There are men living by them still, as men are still seeing the light of the stars extinguished in the heavens long ago. The time will come when these temporary statements will disappear, and when their light goes out it will be of all importance that they recognize the sun by whose light these accidental and temporary points of its exhibition have been shining. This sun of all truth is the person of Christ. The characteristic of our modern Christianity, which correlates it with all apostolic times, is the substitution of loyalty to a person in place of belief in doctrines as the essence and test of Christian life. This is the simplicity and unity by which the Gospel can become effective. These are the ideas of Christianity which are in conflict to-day,—one magnifying doctrine whose great sin is heresy; the other magnifying obedience. The superiority of this method, whose essence is the personal relationship with Christ, lies in this—that it offers "the highest picture of the combination of stability with progress while the intellectual conception is always sacrificing stability to progress or progress to stability."

Alexander Campbell's Theology

By W. E. GARRISON. This book is a scientific statement according to the historical method of the religious and philosophical influences which molded the theological teaching of Mr. Campbell. Here are some extracts from reviews:

J. J. HALEY: "This book marks the beginning of a new epoch in our literature. . . . . I heartily commend it to the perusal of thoughtful men and women."

F. D. POWER: "A distinct and noteworthy contribution to our literature. It is a clear and comprehensive statement of a very important theme."

ERI B. HULBERT: "Readers whose desire it is to understand the theology which Mr. Campbell elaborated will find in this treatise exactly the information they are seeking."

Our Trade With Spain. It is gratifying to note that commercial relations between Spain and the United States, which were seriously disturbed by the war, seem to have been fully restored. It is not improbable that our exports to that country in the fiscal year 1901 will be greater with a single exception than in any preceding year. According to a statement from official sources we learn that exports from the United States to Spain in the nine months ending with March, 1901, were valued at $11,879,349, against $10,081,920 in the corresponding months of last year and $7,091,043 in the corresponding period of the fiscal year 1899. The figures for the year up to this time indicate that the total exports from the United States to Spain in the fiscal year 1901 will be about $16,000,000, while in 1891 the exports to Spain were $14,619,335, in 1880 $14,657,884, and in 1883, the one year in which the fifteen million dollar line was exceeded, $16,931,287. On the import side the figures of the present fiscal year are largely in excess of those of 1899, though slightly less than those of 1900, which were the largest since 1891. The annual imports from Spain into the United States since 1891 have ranged from $3,500,000 to $6,000,000, averaging about $4,500,000, while for the present fiscal year they seem likely to exceed $5,000,000. In the fiscal year 1899, which felt the full effect of the war between the two countries, the exports from the United States to Spain were $9,077,807; in 1900, they rose to $13,399,680, and in the present fiscal year will closely approximate $16,000,000.

The South Carolina Situation We have already mentioned the fact of the resignation of the two South Carolina senators who propose to fight it out in a political campaign during the summer and appeal to the people. Gov. McSweeney, however, takes a different view of the situation and after having duly considered the matter and taken time to feel the public pulse, he has notified the senators that he does not accept their resignations and asks them to recall the same. The reasons he assigns for this course are that the state needs a rest from political excitement and that as a campaign is fixed a year hence, it seems most undesirable to plunge the state into a political ferment during the present year. He reminds them that the office they hold is a very high one not to be lightly laid down and thinks they might have acted hastily in the excitement of the moment. Senator McLaurin has indicated his willingness to withdraw his resignation in a letter, but at this writing Senator Tillman has not withdrawn his resignation. Senator Tillman has written the governor insisting on his resignation being accepted. What the outcome of the matter will be is not yet clear. The governor has intimated, however, that if the resignations are not withdrawn he will accept same and appoint their successors. If the governor adheres to this purpose it will likely result in the withdrawal of both resignations. The situation in South Carolina, as indeed throughout the south, is one that requires calm reflection and investigation, we should think, rather than a heated political contest.

Allies Leaving Pekin. At last, the indemnity question having been agreed upon between China and the ministers of the allied powers, it is reported that the troops are evacuating Pekin, excepting the usual legation guard. It has been a long story, fraught with many delays, and the world will not be sorry that there are signs of its coming to a close. The American troops left some time ago and now the others are following our example. The Emperor and Dowager Empress are said to be arranging their plans to return to Pekin. The really critical stage of the situation as concerns China has now been reached. Will the government be able to maintain order throughout the empire and put down the frequent uprisings of mobs in the various provinces? This is the problem that now confronts China. If she can do this all will be well. If she should fail her failure would be the signal for the return of troops from the allied powers of Europe. This would mean a protracted stay of these troops with an additional indemnity for China to pay or the partitioning of China among the European nations, so long talked of. The latter result is perhaps the most probable. China's future, therefore, is now in her own hands, and it behooves her to summons all her power to establish law, enforce justice and maintain order if she would maintain her territorial integrity and assume her place among the nations of the earth.

Passports to Filipinos. Two Filipinos appeared at the American Embassy in London and applied for passports as American citizens. This raised a new question which Ambassador Choate referred to Washington. Secretary Hay cabled back authorizing him to issue passports to the Filipinos "as residents of the Philippine Islands, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States." This settles an important point in reference to the status of the people of the Philippines, Porto Rico and Guam. They are entitled to the protection of an American passport, and that means that this government will protect their rights in all lands whithersoever they may travel. This is a substantial gain to the people of these islands and will help them to realize at once some of the substantial benefits of being under the flag of the United States. The decision indicates further what has been obvious enough from the beginning, that this government has no desire or purpose to shirk the responsibility of protecting the people of these islands in all the rights of their person and property. Whatever may or may not be true as to the constitution extending itself over these islands by virtue of their cession to the United States, there can be no question but that the spirit of the constitution and of our American institutions as respects the common rights of man must go wherever our flag goes and remain wherever it remains, insuring justice and liberty to all who take shelter under its ample folds.

Britain Warned. For some time the papers have been full of accounts indicating the alarm which exists in Great Britain and other European countries concerning the growth of American trade in Europe. Recently Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India, has added considerably to the excitement on this subject by very bluntly telling the nation why American goods are being purchased in increasing quantities in Europe, namely, that they are "better and cheaper than British goods." The English papers in commenting upon this remarkable statement do not deny its truthfulness, but on the contrary accept the warning as timely and proceed to point out the reason. They generally agree in holding the trades unions responsible for this state of things. A London newspaper is quoted as saying "we affirm our conviction that to the ignorance and tyranny of trades unions the decline of our manufacturing supremacy is primarily due and we have no hesitation in saying that the methods employed by trades unionists to-day are thoroughly unscrupulous and dishonest." It is said that this sort of language in the conservative English press is quite unusual and that it indicates the beginning of "a campaign of reform, regeneration and rejuvenation which it behooves America to take note of." The particular way in which the methods of the trades unions work against the manufacturing interests of England is indicated in a statement from the London Globe which declares that in this commercial conflict "unless the methods of trade unionism, as understood and practiced in this country, are modified, the Americans will beat us out of the field. It cannot be otherwise so long as the leaders of working men persist in thinking that the way to increase the profits of labor is by restricting the output and protecting the lazy and inefficient, and hampering the freedom alike of the employers and those employed by selfish, antiquated rules. A capable, energetic, industrious workman is, in effect, discouraged, and his superior abilities secure but little advantage for him over the skulker." The Globe contrasts trade unionism in that country with the same thing as it exists in the United States to the credit of the latter, saying that "its aims and methods are utterly different from those favored by mouthing demagogues of a John Burns-Keir Hardie type." "American trade societies," it adds, "desire the keeping of the wage rate, but they have the sense to see that this can best be accomplished by insuring that the higher the skill and the greater the industry of the individual worker, the larger is the reward which he obtains." We are not prepared to say that trade unionism in this country always and everywhere deserves this compliment, but it is probably fair to say that such is its general aim and spirit.

An Extra Session. An interesting problem has been raised by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Porto Rico. It was held in that decision that duties collected on goods after the island came into the possession of the United States and before the Foraker act were not constitutional or legal and must be returned. This naturally raises the question as to the status of the Philippines in reference to duties. The question is, whether the Spooner act, which conferred upon the President the authority to organize civil government in the Philippines, carried with it the right to fix a tariff on goods shipped from the United States into the Philippines and on those shipped from the Philippines into the United States. The cabinet has had the matter under consideration and the question has been referred to Attorney-General Knox, who, it is said, has expressed the opinion that the President does not possess the power under the Spooner amendment to the army appropriation bill to fix the tariff. This has raised the question of the necessity of an extra session of Congress to deal with the matter. It is said that the President is considering very carefully the situation and will only call an extra session as a last resort. Senators and Representatives are scattered over the United States and Europe and an extra session will play havoc with their summer plans. The President is naturally anxious to throw the responsibility on Congress where it really belongs, but it is not improbable that some way will be found by which an extra session may be avoided and the rights of all parties conserved. A decision of the Supreme Court in reference to the Philippines, which has been postponed, would serve also to clear up the question, but this is not likely to come before the autumn.

A False Prophet. Among the modern frauds which have imposed themselves upon society in the name of religion, none perhaps has set forth more preposterous claims or made greater demands upon the credulity of the public than what is known as "Zion" with John Alexander Dowie as its head and founder. There are indications that this particular fad is coming to a head by reaching such a colossal height of mendacity as to kill itself. In the presence of a large audience in the auditorium at Chicago on last Lord's day evening, he is reported to have said: "I am Elijah, the prophet, who appeared first as Elijah himself, second as John the Baptist, and who now comes in me, the restorer of all things. Elijah was a prophet, John was a preacher, but I combine in myself the attributes of prophet, priest and ruler over men. Gaze on me, then; I say it fearlessly. Make the most of it, you wretches in religious garb. I am he that is the living physical and spiritual embodiment of Elijah, and my commission on earth a third time has been prophesied by Malachi, by God himself, by his Son Jesus, by Peter, and 3,000 years ago by Moses. All who believe me to be in very truth all of this will stand up," and over three thousand persons rose to their feet and greeted the declaration with cheers and handclapping. This, according to the special dispatch in the daily press, was the culmination of a frenzied speech in which he defied everybody and everything not in Zion. He told the people that he did not take counsel of them in his methods of government; that he had come to "proclaim theocracy pure and simple, a government of God, by God and for God," and that he would "never rest until all other forms of government have been driven from the earth." Democracy he denounced to be a failure and the government of the people, by the people and for the people as "mere twaddle." "Listen," he added, "to the first message of the prophet. You must pay your tithes and offerings into the store-house of God. Accursed be ye if ye would seek to rob his house of its fulness by not obeying this his will sent through Elijah." Mr. Dowie has never neglected the "tithes and offerings" and he has taken especial pains to see that these were under his own control. That such a man with such blasphemous pretensions can obtain a following at this late period is a sorrowful commentary on the degree of civilization attained by the masses of the people.

The Platt Amendment. The administration has notified the Cuban Constitutional Convention, through Gen. Wood, that its action in accepting the Platt Amendment with certain explanations injected by the Cubans, will not answer the purpose. The fact that the delegates who visited Washington and consulted with Secretary Root and others concerning the meaning of the several particulars of the aforesaid amendment should have supposed that these explanations might be made a part of the official document, indicates their lack of understanding of the fundamental principles of our government. Otherwise they would have known that no explanation of the Secretary of War, or of Mr. Platt, or of the President himself can modify or change an act of Congress. What influence this action of the administration will have upon the Convention is not yet known. The conservative party who favored the adoption of the amendment had great difficulty in passing it even with these explanations attached, and only succeeded in carrying it by one majority. This raises a doubt as to whether the Convention will be able to pass the amendment at all with these explanations expunged. It is probable, however, that the more these representatives of the Cuban people think over the import of the various provisions of this amendment the more they will see their perfect reasonableness, and that they are more in the interest of Cuba than of the United States. Especially when they come to understand that this government is not trifling with them, and that the troops will remain in the island until the amendment is accepted, will they feel disposed to accept the conditions imposed in this amendment. It is not strange, perhaps, that these newly emancipated people should be very jealous of their national rights and very ambitious to walk alone. But a more sober wisdom and a little experience will teach them the value of having such a friend as the United States to look to for guidance and protection.

Corn is King. George H. Phillips, the corn king, has contributed an article to the Saturday Evening Post which shows that he has given a great deal of study to his favorite cereal. It will be gratifying to the farmers to learn that according to Mr. Phillips, who backs up his statement by abundant statistics, the price of corn will never go down again in this country to what it has been in the past, and that it is not likely that it will ever go below 40 cents per bushel. This statement is based on two facts: First, that practically all the area suitable for the growth of corn in this country is under cultivation; second, there has been but little variation in the last few years in the amount of corn produced. There are about 83,000,000 acres devoted to corn in the United States. It is a certain fact that there has been a great increase in the consumption of corn both in this country and in Europe. Many of the foods made from cereals have corn for their basis and this has vastly increased the consumption in this country. The people of Europe are just beginning to understand the possibilities of corn as a food. The Paris Exposition did much to enlighten the people of Europe on this subject. As this is likely to increase the demand from abroad it is altogether probable that Mr. Phillips is right in predicting a better price for corn in the future. The value of the corn crop in this country is more than twice that of the wheat crop and more than all other cereals combined. No other country in the world can cope with the United States in the production of this great cereal.

Oil Discovery. The discovery of petroleum at Beaumont, Texas, proves to be something more than a seven-day wonder. The area of the oil field is being constantly increased by the sinking of new wells, and capital is pouring into that state to develop its hidden wealth. It is not improbable that the whole state will be profoundly affected in its industrial life by the discovery of this hitherto unknown source of wealth. It is likely to result in the development of other resources of that wonderful state, whose undeveloped wealth exceeds, perhaps, the most sanguine expectation of its own citizens. Already steps have been taken for developing mineral deposits in western Texas, and for the utilization of the timber which is contiguous to the oil fields. In many other parts of the country companies have been formed to sink wells in the hope of striking oil or some other kind of hidden wealth. The Texas gushers have had the effect of quickening the imagination of the people generally as to the possibilities which lie beneath the surface of the earth, and the result will likely be the discovery of oil or mineral or coal or gas in various parts of the country, and so adding to the sources of our national wealth.

An Undenominational Journal.

The conviction is spreading among the more intelligent class of Christians that a religious journal to accomplish the best results should be undenominational in character. We believe this to be true, and yet we think there is likely to be some confusion of thought as to what constitutes denominationalism in a religious paper. It is our purpose in this article to state what we conceive to be some of the essential features of an undenominational paper.

We have an increasing appreciation of the value of what is known as secular journalism. It is well-nigh impossible to exaggerate the influence of an able weekly or daily journal, devoted to the discussion of the living topics of the times as well as to a faithful report of the world's news. We have always felt, however, that if we had capital at our command and should embark in the enterprise of publishing a daily journal, we would make it strictly non-partisan. There is, however, the same liability to misapprehension here as there is in the field of undenominational journalism. By a non-partisan paper we do not mean a paper that takes no side of any great question before the country, and aims to make itself acceptable to all parties by maintaining a neutral tint and not committing itself on any question of public policy. On the contrary we mean a paper that deals with every political question on its merits and without regard to what any political party may say or think concerning it. It would be "independent in all things and neutral in nothing." Its attitude would be condemned and approved alternately by every partisan journal in christendom, but far more condemned than approved by the mere partisan journalists, who would not appreciate its point of view. We do not see how any great journal can wear the collar of any party and render the highest service to the country.

The ideal religious journal is also non-partisan or undenominational. It does not follow, however, that it would be largely patronized by members of all denominations. Its very advocacy of those principles which make for unity may be and is an offense to those ardent sectaries whose chief end and aim is to build up their ecclesiastical party. At this age of the world, however, a religious journal breathing the spirit of catholicity would naturally find a constituency among the broader-minded people of various religious bodies.

Nor does it follow that a religious paper to be undenominational must be non-committal even upon those questions which divide christendom. It must express itself freely but charitably on every question that affects the welfare of men and the glory of God. There have been certain papers and Sunday-school series which have posed as undenominational by maintaining a sort of colorless character or neutral position on all those questions about which religious peoples differ. They skip the hard places in biblical exegesis and deal in "glittering generalities." This is not the type of undenominational paper which we would commend. Many of these have the appearance of being non-partisan for "revenue only," rather than for truth's sake.

What, then, should be the character of a religious journal which has a right to be known as undenominational?

1. Its object should be the building up of the kingdom of God, and not of any particular sect or denomination. It should not limit its view of the religious world to the interest of any one denomination, but should seek to take in the whole church of God on earth. It should give its readers an intelligent idea of what is being thought and done in all the religious bodies of christendom.

2. It should have a message for the times. If it is truly catholic in spirit, as it must be, it must plead for a closer union among the people of God and indicate, according to whatever light it may have, the way in which this unity may be realized. It must stand for a united rather than for a divided church. It must utter its convictions clearly, though courteously, of course, on all the questions which have to do with the well-being of the church universal. Any cowardly shrinking from the utterance of truth which needs to be declared, for the sake of popularity, would be unworthy of a religious journal standing for the truth and the truth alone. It must depend for its constituency upon those who believe the message which it declares and who are in harmony with the object it is seeking to accomplish, rather than upon party fealty.

3. It must be broad enough in spirit to recognize the Christian character and work of all who are seeking to follow Christ and to do his will; otherwise it has no plea for Christian union that the world will care to hear. It must be tall enough to see what is going on in the religious folds about it and to recognize and report the same to its readers. It is a poor compliment which a religious paper pays to its constituency when it supposes them to be indifferent to all the religious movements of the times except those with which they are directly connected. It has been the curse of denominationalism that it has kept the various religious bodies in ignorance of the real spirit, aim and work of other disciples of Christ who follow not with them.

It will be recognized by all who have any practical acquaintance with the difficulties confronting religious journalism that it is not an easy matter to realize such an ideal. Lack of capital, of space, of a sufficient constituency, are some of the obstacles that stand in the way of its realization. Manifestly such a religious journal must be a growth, to be fully reached when the times are ripe for it. It is not without its dangers as well as its difficulties. There is danger, as we have already intimated, of mistaking neutrality for catholicity, and so minimizing the message with a view to making it unobjectionable. But we believe that a wise, persistent course along the line indicated above, turning neither to the right nor to the left, but striving simply to declare Christ's message to the world, is bound to win, in the long run, a constituency of free spirits who love truth more than party and Christ more than creed.

Unity in Public Worship.

It will be admitted by all devout minds that the purpose of each part of the public worship in a Christian assembly is to bring Christ to men—to hold him before the thought, the feeling and the will of those present, so as to excite true worship in them and to lead them to more Christ-like living. If this be so we have in that fact the unifying element in our public worship. It is the failure to recognize this truth, or to understand its significance, that produces that discord, that sense of unfitness, which we often feel at the close of a public service.

The application of the truth above stated could hardly fail to produce that unity of feeling and thought so essential to effective worship. It would answer such questions as these:

In what spirit and with what demeanor should a congregation assemble for public worship, whose supreme aim is to bring Christ to the needy souls who thus gather? What should be the character of the songs to be sung and the manner of the singing and the singers? How should the minister pray, and with what previous preparation, who desires to bring Christ to waiting hearts? In what manner and spirit should the communion service be observed in order that it may best subserve the end for which it was instituted? In what spirit and with what previous preparation should believers partake of the emblems consecrated to the sacred purpose of conveying Christ to men? What should be the character of the sermon and of the man behind the sermon, in order that Christ may be brought to bear on the minds and hearts of the people? What part should a congregation take in a public service that is to bring Christ to men in such a way as to elevate and save them?

Any average congregation can be depended on to answer the above questions with reasonable correctness if it seriously undertakes to do so and feels the necessity of having every feature of the public worship serve the end we have mentioned. The chief trouble is there is too little thought given to this subject, and the real end of coming together for public worship is lost sight of too frequently in the midst of so many subordinate aims and ends. It is this fact that leads us to call attention to the real end of public worship and to the unifying effect of holding it constantly in mind.

A Great Educational Gift.

This is the day of the College and the University. Everything is tending to largeness in solving the educational problem. In harmony with this tendency the gifts of the last few years for educational purposes have never been precedented in the history of the world. Within the past five years, not less than $150,000,000 have been contributed to the endowment and equipment of Colleges and Universities. This vast sum will probably be augmented by still larger bequests during the next decade; and if this forecast should be justified then surely the twentieth century will prove to be a red letter period in the history of education.

However, it is not a very encouraging fact that, so far, very little, comparatively speaking, has been given to western colleges and universities. This is not what the logic of facts ought to lead to. The great west is a coming empire. It must continually increase, even if the east does not decrease. The center of power and influence of the United States must necessarily rapidly gravitate towards the Mississippi valley. We must, therefore, have, in the near future, some great educational institutions west of the Mississippi river which will equal, if not surpass, all others of the kind to be found anywhere in all the country.

This is also the age of woman's opportunity. Never before in the history of the world has she had such a chance to become an influential factor in all the affairs of human life. Herein is her responsibility, and to meet this responsibility she must be educated, and this education must be somewhat commensurate with the demands of the age.

Looking at these two facts, viz: the day of the college and the day of woman's opportunity, Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, co-principals of Christian College, located at Columbia, Mo., have taken a step which practically assures to the great west at least one college for women of the type indicated by all the signs of the times.

It will be remembered that two years ago the trustees of Christian College made over the property to Mrs. Moore and Mrs. St. Clair, in fee simple, on condition that they would erect new buildings, etc., etc. These buildings have been completed, and the past year has been the most successful in the history of the college. These two women, out of their own private resources, have expended or provided about $75,000 in improvements, making the whole property worth, in round numbers, not less than $100,000. They have now re-deeded this splendid property back to the trustees to be held in trust by them for educational purposes, for all time.

This generous gift on the part of these two consecrated women was announced by C. H. Winders, president of the board of trustees, at the commencement exercises, held May 29. It was, at the same time, announced that plans were in course of development by which it was hoped a much needed new chapel will be added, during the coming collegiate year, to the well-appointed and handsome buildings already on the grounds. For this purpose a scholarship of $5,000 has been promised and it is believed the balance of the money required—$200,000—will soon be raised in scholarships. When this chapel is finished the accommodations and equipments will be among the best in the United States for the education of young women.

Such generosity on the part of two of our Christian women, and such utter consecration to the work of Christian education, ought to inaugurate a new era among us as respects liberality to the cause of Christian education. Neither Mr. Carnegie nor any other donor to any of the institutions of learning, so far as we know, has made a gift to education that can be compared with this in generosity. These men have given out of immense fortunes, sums which though large within themselves, are after all but a small part of the great fortunes of their donors. But these women who, by their energy and wise management, have created a property worth $100,000, including the campus, that was turned over to them and into which they have put all their resources, donate it all back to trustees to be held in trust by them for Christian educatian forever. All honor to their heroism, their liberality, their consecration to the cause of educated womanhood! They have erected for themselves a monument that will endure when the gilded mausoleums of the rich shall have crumbled to dust, and when the very names they were intended to commemorate shall have perished from the memory of man. If the example which they have set before us shall be contagious the cause of education among us will make vast strides forward within the next decade and the cause we love will be far better equipped with trained men and women to carry it forward to permanent victory.

Notes and Comments.

We call special attention to the appeal elsewhere from J. T. Boone, minister of the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla. The disaster has been overwhelming. The need is great. The appeal is urgent. If brotherhood means anything it ought to show itself in a crisis like this. Help your stricken brethren. Reach out a hand to them to help them up out of the ashes of their desolation. Let us bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. Brother Boone and his congregation have manifested the spirit of Christ and the spirit of unity in all this trying ordeal and they deserve not only the sympathy but the material aid of their brethren everywhere in erecting such a building as they had planned for and as will meet the demands of our cause in that city for a generation to come. Any contribution sent either through B. L. Smith, secretary A. C. M. S., Cincinnati, or directly to Brother Boone will be reported and credited to the general board. Promptness in extending aid is of the greatest importance as will be seen from the appeal itself.

Is it not often a lack of faith in the power of truth or a cowardly mistrust of the people that causes preachers to withhold from their congregations truths which they steadfastly believe in their own hearts? It is not unfrequent that you hear some preacher say, "I believe that is true, but it would not be safe to say so publicly." Is it not safe to tell the truth? Is it really safe to withhold the truth from the people? In making a plea for candor on the part of preachers, Phillips Brooks once said: "A large acquaintance with clerical life has led me to think that almost any company of clergymen gathering together and talking freely to one another will express opinions which would greatly surprise and at the same time relieve the congregations who ordinarily listen to these ministers." A preacher can stand almost anything better than a well-grounded suspicion of insincerity. Above all things let us seek to be honest with God, honest with our own souls, and honest with the people to whom we minister.

There is, of course, the necessity of adapting our teaching to the needs of the people. Jesus recognized this truth when He said to His disciples, "I have many things to tell you but ye are not yet able to bear them." It is one thing, however, to adapt our teaching to the needs of the people, giving them to understand that there are other truths to follow in due time, and a very different thing to make the impression that we hold opinions which we have long since surrendered as untrue, because we fear that our hearers, who are often ahead of us in their religious views, could not stand the truth which we rejoice in as a private possession. Perfunctoriness and professionalism are the most dangerous as they are the most common evils which threaten the ministry. Every capable minister should teach his congregation that Christianity rests upon certain fundamental facts and truths, and that its safety, or the safety of the church, is not endangered by any changes in theological views, such as have been constantly going on since the birth of Christianity.

The recent divorce gained by Prof. Herron's wife, on the ground of his desertion, has been followed by his marriage to Miss Rand, daughter of the lady who has been his chief patron and benefactress for several years. It was generally believed at the time that the divorce had for its real reason the desire to marry Miss Rand and this suspicion has been confirmed by the marriage. The officiating minister on the occasion had little to do, as it was decided to dispense with the usual form of ceremony as Prof. Herron holds a peculiar view in reference to the marriage institution. Thus the whole case—the non-support of his wife and children followed by his divorce, and this by marriage to one whose wealth he had profited by, together with the manner of the marriage—has served to place Prof. Herron out of the ranks of honored and influential reformers. It is with profound regret that many of his friends have witnessed his moral downfall while claiming to be the prophet of a better era. The incident furnishes a timely warning to all social reformers to keep within the lines of Christian faith, of sound biblical interpretation and of Christian morality. This world can well afford to dispense with any reformation that proposes to dispense with the teaching of Christ on the fundamental truths relating to the family and to society.

The relation between doctrine and life is very close. It is in this fact that the importance of sound teaching lies. Doctrine by itself, abstractly considered, is of no great consequence, but as a means to an end it is of exceeding great value. When the lives of church members are frivolous and worldly, when the attendance at prayer-meeting is small and fluctuating, when the meetings on Lord's day are irregularly attended and there is lack of spirituality and devotion in the worship, the preacher ought to take it as evidence that there is something wrong in his preaching. A church whose pulpit does not abound in preaching that probes to the center, in food for the spiritual life, is likely to have a membership spiritually lean and inefficient. What a church is doing or is not doing is the true standard of measuring the value of what the preacher is preaching from his pulpit. The life is the commentary on the sermon. The church is the sermon illustrated. This is only true, of course, where the preacher remains long enough at one place to influence the life of the church. No church ever makes any great progress with a rapid succession of preachers, as there can be no continuity of teaching in such a congregation. We can never correct the life of the pew except as we improve the teaching of the pulpit.

Editor's Easy Chair.

If we had a special friend residing on some other planet who was planning to visit our part of the earth, and we were anxious that he should have a good opinion of this round clod upon which we live, we should probably want him to visit us in the month of June. At no other season of the year, perhaps, does this part of our terrestrial ball present a fairer appearance than in the glorious month upon which we have now entered. "Then, if ever, come perfect days." We cannot imagine that even angelic eyes, accustomed as they must be to look upon supernal glories and splendors which mortals have never seen, could be displeased with the June roses, whose fragrance fills the air at this season, or with all the beauty of flower and foliage, of sunlight and shadow, of stream and forest and lake, fanned by soft breezes and canopied by the over-arching sky. Any visitor from another sphere who should not enter into hearty appreciation of all this would certainly not commend to us his own country nor the kind of beings who inhabit it. Heaven may have something more beautiful than anything which June presents on earth; but if so the human mind hath not conceived of it, neither hath it entered into the heart of man. We have an idea that the earth is about the best place in the universe for human beings like we are in the present stage of our development. When we shall reach a higher stage of intellectual and moral perfection, no doubt there will be other spheres, scenes and associations better adapted to us than these here, and into those we shall be transplanted. The gardener grows a certain plant or flower in one place until it reaches a certain stage of development and then transplants it into a larger and better place where it will have opportunity to reach the highest perfection of which it is capable. So we think our heavenly Father deals with His children.

Any view of life which looks upon human beings as we see them here, even at their best, as anything more than fragmentary, is inadequate. Man's whole environment on earth suggests limitations. He was never intended to reach his highest and best estate in this present world. Life is too short and has too many drawbacks to admit of such complete development as will fulfill God's intention or satisfy the aspirations of our own heart. The wisest and the greatest men of earth have been most conscious of their imperfections and of the incompleteness of their lives. No one at his best feels that he has reached the highest point of attainment of which he is capable. There are always suggestions and intimations of something higher and better for him than he has ever yet realized. It would be difficult if not impossible to vindicate the wisdom of creating such a being as man and placing him here in a world like this, with its discipline of temptation, trial, adversity, defeat, sorrow and suffering, if this brief earth-life is all there is of man. There are desires, aspirations, longings after the ideal and the perfect, which have no fulfillment here. Why these, if there is nothing beyond? It cannot be. Our lives have their beginnings here but their complete fulfllment awaits other and better conditions, where, in duration unmarked by setting suns or waning moons, they may attain that perfection for which they were designed, and for which we sigh. Meanwhile let us press on toward the goal, making the most of the life that now is as the best possible preparation for the life that is to be.

The minister on Sunday was speaking of the burning bush as one of the sacred places in the life of Moses, and he said that every true and earnest life has its sacred places. This is no doubt true. That was a sacred place in the life of Jacob when, as a young man, fleeing from his father's house and sleeping with a stone for a pillow at Bethel, he saw a vision of a ladder reaching from earth to heaven with angels ascending and descending. He always understood that God was there and his life received an impetus there which it felt ever afterwards. Again on his return from the house of Laban many years afterwards he wrestled with the angel at the ford of Jabbok. That too was a sacred place, and from that time he was called Israel because he had prevailed with God. No doubt Jacob cherished the memory of these sacred places and often spoke of them to his sons down to the end of his long life. Saul on his way to Damascus, John in the Isle of Patmos, Nathaniel under the fig tree, are other familiar illustrations of these sacred scenes and places in Bible history. Nathaniel's case is an illustration of the fact that the Lord sometimes looks upon us in our thoughtful moments when we are not conscious that we are the objects of special divine attention. Nathaniel was probably in one of those thoughtful moods that sometimes come over one in which he was trying to look at his life in its relation to God, in order to ascertain if he were fulfilling the measure of his obligations. Perhaps his thoughts were engaged with this wonderful Galilean Prophet of whom he may have heard something, and he was wondering whether God had indeed sent a fresh message into the world and if so what it was. In any event Christ said to him when he came to him, "Before Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee." There was something in this remark that made Nathaniel exclaim, "Thou art the Son of God; Thou art King of Israel."

Is there a reader of the Easy Chair who cannot remember some point in his life when God seemed especially near? Can we not all recall some sacred places along the way we have come in which we seemed to be conscious of God's nearness and to have reached a clearer vision of some truth or duty? It may have been when some sin had aroused our conscience and made us pause and think. It may have been when some special kindness from parents or friends, or some gracious providence, awakened gratitude in our heart, and we were led to think of duty and of destiny. It may have been at the death-bed of a father or mother that we were led to look at life in a different way from which we had been accustomed to look at it, and there came new purposes and higher aspirations into our hearts. Or, if not before, certainly at the time of our conversion, when we resolved in our hearts to cleave to Christ, and to be His follower forever, there was then a sacred place to which we look back even yet with tenderest memory. We cannot have too many of these sacred places in our lives. If we could arrange to have more time for meditation and self-examination in which to ponder the meaning of life and its incidents, no doubt there would be more of these sacred places, as we journey on our pilgrim way. Is it not possible to live in such relation to God that each day will bring its sacred experiences until all places and all times become sacred?

Questions and Answers.

Referring to a question asked and answered in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Bro. H. N. Allen complains that part of the question, and the one it seems upon which he relied especially as indicating his position, was omitted. The question was condensed, as we often are compelled to do, by omitting such parts as seem to us unnecessary to the main issue. The part omitted in Bro. Allen's question was that which related to the division of sentiment among Christian people as to the meaning of the phrase, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," as set forth in the article of John Augustus Williams. The point of the question, as we understand it, is, if we are not certain about the meaning of so plain a statement as that quoted above, what is there upon which we can rely? To this we reply that we are well satisfied in our mind as to the meaning of that biblical phrase. We suppose Bro. Williams is quite well satisfied in his mind as to what it means. He simply stated a fact which we all must recognize and acknowledge, that the religious world does differ in its interpretation of this passage. That is only saying that we have no infallible law of interpretation by which we can secure infallibly the meaning of Holy Scripture. We must rely on our own judgment, on such laws of interpretation as we can find, on such help as we can get from every source, and reach our conclusion and act upon it. The point which Brother Williams had in view was, that even granting an infallible book, we have no infallible interpreter, or infallible rules of interpretation, which is, of course, true. It by no means follows, however, as our honest and earnest querist seems to think, that everything is involved in uncertainty. On the contrary, the way of life and salvation is pointed out so clearly in the Bible that no one need err therein, who honestly desires to know and obey the truth. It is strange—this longing for something infallible that will dispense with the use of our reason and with the necessity of research and investigation. It is this desire that has carried thousands into the bosom of the Roman Catholic Church. Others, rejecting the Roman Church, seek for infallibility somewhere else. But there is no infallibility offered to us except the infallible Christ who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." It is the glory of the Bible that it reveals to us this infallible Teacher and omnipotent Savior of men. To know Him, to trust Him, to follow Him—this is eternal life. The fact that men may differ about the meaning of this or that saying of the Master does not mean that there is nothing certain, but only that we are fallible in our judgments and our methods of interpretation. But he that serves Christ according to the best light that he can get, the same, we doubt not, will be accepted of Him.

The Exposition of all America

By BURRIS A. JENKINS.

It was the day of formal opening. It was the twentieth of May. The whole city of Buffalo, with its four hundred thousands, went streaming toward the wide birch-lined avenue where the parade was to pass. Up from the slums crawled long lines of Poles and Italians; out from their cottage homes streamed thousands of workmen's families; along the shaded asphaltum echoed the hoofs of handsome carriage horses or hummed the wheels of the automobiles. All stores were closed, all business stopped. Buffalo tried herself on that great first day. Thousands upon thousands of happy, prosperous Americans blackened thickly the sidewalks and lawns, and even half the causeway, on the line of march.

They come! The bands sound in the distance! The dull boom of the drums comes faintly. Then the regiments swing by, the same regiments, the fighting 65th and the 74th, that marched away not so many months ago to fight for the honor of Pan-America against oppressors.

"There's Teddy!" The shout echoes along the way. Hats are waved, handkerchiefs flutter, yes and hearts; even women's voices are raised in gentle cries as the Vice-President appears. He stands in the open carriage, where President Milburn, of the exposition, is seated smiling. Colonel Roosevelt bows and smiles from side to side with that smile that all the caricaturing of the funny press cannot rid him of. He is the same Teddy, who was our governor, who was also our rough rider, and of whom most New Yorkers say: "Teddy, with all thy faults we love thee still."

Then follows a long stream of carriages —will they never pass?—bearing the swarthy faced visitors from Spanish Americas, fair-haired Canadians, and the great delegation from St. Louis representing the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, President Francis at their head; there are the senators and representatives from Albany; there are the mayor and city fathers of Buffalo; and—

"Where is Mark Hanna?" The question keeps coming up; voices whisper it all around you. And there is Mark! There is no checked suit with dollar marks all over it; but there is the well-known face—with dollar marks on it? Quien sabe? (We must be Spanish to-day, to our limited ability.)

There are the Mexican troops, picturesque to the last extreme, infantry with mausers, and cavalry with cutlass and sombrero; dark, lowering fellows from the ranch and the plaza. Then there come all sorts of queer Honduras, Brazilian, Chilian, Patagonian—I am not sure about Patagonia!—Cuban, Porto Rican fellows and the rest. There are toreadors for the bull-fights, guitarists for the soft serenade, senoritas with black veils and fans and—eyes, such eyes, for the moonlight tete-a-tete. Is this the United States? sober Buffalo? Or are we under the Tropic of Capricorn?

Now for the Indians. Such a gathering of the tribes has, I am sure, never been seen in America. The Senecas are there —our own Senecas from the reservation just out of Buffalo. The Sioux are there, horrible fellows. The Iowas, the Tuscararas, the Apaches, little devils! the Blackfeet, the Pawnees, the Cherokees, and the names of all the rest are fluttering upon the little flags at the head of each delegation. Director-general Buchanan has fulfilled his word that this should be the most widely representative of any council of the nations that America has ever seen. Feathers, scalps, human scalps, fur of otter and mink and beaver, crest of turkey and eagle, paint, paint, paint—all are there. The bison shows his appropriate head, the bear his claws. Scars are plentiful on the memorable Indian faces, scars of actual rebellion against—against extinction! Squaws ride stolidly astride, and here and there a beautiful half-breed, with fringed deer-skin skirts, smiles into our faces.

Then follow all the features of the midway. There are the pretty Japanese women in the jinrikshas, pulled by pretty Japanese fellows in green tights; the jugglers and the umbrellas, the bamboo poles and the flags of all nations from whom secrets of civilization have been learned by fair Japan. There is the royal car of Cleopatra, drawn by a score of dusky Lydian slaves, Cleopatra who has, they say, pocketed 500 dollars for showing herself this day to public gaze. Pity but a part of the five hundred should have been spent for clothing. There comes the animal show, and all the little children cry out at the zebras, at the undulating camels, at the chubby little baby elephants, at the lean tiger and his leaner showman. And so it winds on. What matters the rest? You can see it all on the midway.

At noon the procession reached the great entrance. It is rare that a parade moves on time and arrives on time, but this did to the dot. President Milburn does things in that way. And that gateway to the park just at the end of the avenue of elms is, to my mind, the finest approach to an exposition ground I have ever seen. To most such shows you come through a line of shanties, restaurants, booths and hucksters' wagons, and indeed, to the Pan-American you come through such sordid ways to some of the other entrances. But not so to the imposing great gate. The park way, which, in other times, is our boulevard lined with greenery, is at this point divided by the wall of the grounds. A large part of the park itself, full of birches, beeches, elms and flowering shrubs, is, for the time being, made over into the Pan-American. There will be no lack of shade and flower and foliage on these grounds. Your eyes will not ache at unrelieved and dazzling white. The great pillars of the gate way reach their heads up into the trees which "Are caught and cuff'd by the breeze."

On these two pillars are engraved the list of countries participating; two long lines, alphabetically arranged, the United States modestly taking a low station.

Inside the grounds in the great music hall the formal opening of the exposition took place. Suffocation-full it was. There was band music, there was shirt-sleeve diplomacy in the speeches of Colonel Roosevelt and Senator Lodge who seemed to defy the old world to competition with United America; who declared that the United States would lend a hand to every struggling American nation, and who looked forward with optimism to the great future. Then the huge Orpheus Club, a German Choral Society, arose and sang to the leadership of their own orchestra, such music as gave a foretaste of what will come in June when the Saengerfest takes place, when thousands of German singers, in the greatest armory in the world, that of the 74th, will join in song. Indeed, when the song was done, Senator Hanna whispered in awestruck fashion: "That is sublime! That is sublime!" There is hope for men who respond to music. Then there were poems by local poets—Messrs. Rogers and Almy.

After the formal exercises, upwards of 100,000 people streamed into the midway, took to the gondolas and the launches on the great park lake—a lake not made for the occasion—plenty of water in Buffalo and all about—or ate their lunches in the courts or byways of the grounds.

At night came the illumination. It was such a sight as should command a separate article. It is enough now to say that when about eight o'clock the twilight had gone and the red streak to the westward over Niagara river had died away, a mysterious little switch somewhere was turned, the entire Spanish city from end to end flashed into a dazzling dream of light. Every dome was chained with incandescence. Every turret was set with yellow stars. And as for the great electric tower, nearly four hundred feet of galvanic fire, a solid obelisk of mysterious light pointed up into the dark sky. It is from outside the gates that the best idea of this wonderful illuminated whole can be obtained. From any high window in Buffalo one can see the city of fire on the northern horizon. That whole side of the dome of night is reddened by the glare. And upon one who is just outside the grounds, the effect is startling, breathless, uplifting. One aged Disciple who was there declared he wanted our soprano near him to sing "The Holy City."

Buffalo realizes the greatness of the work that has been done here in the past year. This exposition is, as one of the poets of the day phrased it, a tribute to King Toil. It is an achievement of which the city and the state are proud, and to which they point saying, "Come and see."

A Brooklyn paper says:

The exposition loses nothing by comparison with the expositions of Chicago and Paris. It vindicates Buffalo's claim to be one of the great cities of the world and shows what can be done when brains, industry, energy and public spirit unite.

The New York Sun says:

Buffalo has reason to be proud of herself. She will find her reward in the multitudes that will come to see her spectacle. She will have to hump herself to feed and lodge them all; but she will do it and do it well.

Buffalo has no fear but she can take care of her guests. Our Disciples have no fear but they can entertain their brethren. It is to open homes she invites all comers. The pride of the city is aroused, and she is not ashamed of what she has to show, even besides the exposition, Niagara river and Lake Erie.

The Eastern Conference.

By S. T. Willis.

The third annual conference of the Disciples of Christ in the middle Atlantic states at Plymouth, Pa., May 21-23, was, all in all, perhaps the best one yet held. The delegates were warmly welcomed by Pastor C. W. Harvey and the Plymouth church and royally entertained in their hospitable homes. The program was an interesting one throughout, and though a few changes were made, they all seemed to be for the improvement and not a detraction. Those who stayed away are to be pitied for what they lost—their loss was greater than that sustained by the conference on account of their absence. The convention sermon by Bro. Rutledge, of Philadelphia, was inspiring as the address of welcome by Bro. Harvey was cordial. President Dr. Montgomery was detained on account of sickness, but his message was read to the convention. The writer is corresponding secretary and presented a report which showed the good work of the past year. The new church at Newark, N. J., was organized and pushed forward largely on account of the existence of the conference. It was through the intercession of the conference officials that aid was secured from the American Christian Missionary Society and the Church Extension Board. The Plymouth conference expressed a desire for more hearty support of and co-operation with the American Christian Missionary Society. Among the addresses, Bro. R. W. Clymer, of Scranton, gave us one on "Our Forces, Men, Money and Doctrine," which was thought-provoking in character; the incomparable A. McLean favored us with two addresses, "The Perpetual Increase of Christ's Kingdom," reassuring and strong, and an account of his circuit of the globe, which was both instructive and highly entertaining. Bro. McLean's presence in the conference was a rich blessing to us all. E. R. Edwards, of Syracuse, presented a suggestive discussion of "The Place of Emphasis in Present-day Preaching," and conducted a helpful symposium on the same. R. A. Smith, of Philadelphia, conducted the Y. P. S. C. E. session with enthusiasm and dispatch, and Bro. J. D. Dabney, of Dumore (Scranton), presented a pointed paper on the "Sunday-school Evangelization of the Cities," and conducted a question-box on Sunday-school work. Bro. R. P. Shepherd, of Newark, N. J., delivered a forcible address on "The Present Situation and Our Plea for Unity." The writer gave an address on "The Religious Condition of the East." Among others taking part in the discussion were John L. Keevil, E. E. Manley, M. C. Tiers, H. C. Frick, J. P. Zimmeran, M. E. Genge, H. C. Webber and others whose names I do not at this moment recall. The executive committee was located at Philadelphia, with Dr. E. E. Montgomery, chairman; S. T. Willis, corresponding secretary. The other members of the committee are G. P. Rutledge, R. G. Frank and Peter Ainslie. The officers of the next convention are George P. Rutledge, chairman; B. A. Abbott, vice-chairman, and E. L. Kelland recording secretary. The place of the next conference was fixed at Troy, N. Y. The conference decided to raise about $700 to assist the Newark church in making its first payment to the Church Extension Board, and recommended that the executive committee apportion the churches in order to raise all necessary funds.

But perhaps the most far reaching effects of the conference will be found in the Atlantic Christian Building League, the establishment of which was provided for at the Plymouth convention. Steps were taken toward the formation of this league at the suggestion of Mr. E. L. Kelland, who had discussed the matter previously with the corresponding secretary and was appointed to bring the matter up at the conference. The convention authorized the formation of the league with Robert Christie as chairman, E. L. Kelland secretary, Clarence Hershey treasurer, and S. T. Willis, B. D. Denham, John L. Keevil and M. E. Harlan as members of the board of managers. The purpose of the league is to help new congregations to secure church homes. Each person becoming a member of the league promises to pay $1 toward each new church recommended by the officers of the league. Help will not be granted to old congregations building new and expensive houses of worship, but the intention is to assist new mission points to secure places in which to worship, when they are unable to bear their own burdens. It is hoped that at least 2,500 persons will be found to become subscribers to the pledge of the Building League and thereby $2,500 may be secured toward each new church building of the Disciples of Christ in the Atlantic states of this conference territory. This would do much toward solving the problem of planting new churches in the east. If any one reading these lines desires to become a member of the Atlantic Building League, they may do so by writing Mr. E. L. Kelland, 35 Mechanic Street, Newark, N. J. The outlook for the conference work is brighter than ever before, and it is the purpose of the management to push its interests to the front with all possible energy.

The territory in which it proposes to operate is a large one. Almost one-third of the population of the United States is here; the wealth is around us in great abundance; the people are willing to hear the simple gospel. They will accept it. Twenty-six of the one hundred largest cities in the United States are around us here in the east, and each one without a church of the Disciples of Christ. It certainly is time that we were preaching the gospel to these cities also. Let all the Disciples of the east co-operate in extending the cause of Christ our blessed Lord in their midst, and the Most High will prosper their efforts in his name.

The Christian Soldier

By CHARLES E. ROBINSON.

Late of Co. I, 20th Kan. V. S. V.

Forasmuch as the soldier is used in many passages of Scripture as a type of the Christian, and people who have never served in the army do not well understand the analogies that exist between the modern soldier and the follower of Christ, it seemed good to me, having served as a warrior both for my country and my Savior, to set in order a few illustrations wherein the resemblance between the two is made clear.

The man who becomes a soldier from patriotic motives must love his country so well that he is willing to leave his friends, his relatives and his family, and take up the duties and hardships of war. Jesus saith unto them who would be his followers: "If any man cometh unto me and hateth not his own father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he can not be my disciple," and "Whosoever doth not bear his own cross and come after me, can not be my disciple."

When a civilian enlists in the army he loses his personal liberty. He is separated at once from the places and the people with whom he has been familiar. He is arrayed in new garments unlike those to which he has been accustomed. His companions are new; his occupation is new and his manner of living is entirely different from what it has been. How similar to this is the change experienced by every sinner who enlists in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature; the old things are passed away; behold they are become new." (2 Cor. 5:17. Revised Version.)

A solemn obligation is taken by every man who enlists in the army. He solemnly swears, not only that he will support the Constitution of the United States, but also that he will faithfully obey every officer that is placed over him. Henceforth he is not his own, but belongs to the government which he serves. He can no longer do his own will or act according to his own judgment, if it conflicts with the wishes of his commander. To him, disobedience is perjury. Moreover he is obliged to treat his officers with great respect, and at all times when the occasion demands, he must acknowledge their superior standing and authority by a salute. The Bible is full of the obligations which we owe to our divine sovereign, and his commands made known to us through inspired officers are to be explicitly obeyed.

"Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man" (Eccl. 12:13).

"Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct thy paths" (Prov. 3:5, 6).

The soldier receives from his country, not everything which he desires, but everything which is necessary for his welfare. For nothing does he need to be anxious. His medicine, his arms, his shelter, his clothing and his food are all bountifully supplied and his wages are paid besides.

In a similar way does our heavenly Father provide for those who love and trust him.

"Be not therefore anxious, saying, what shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek; for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:31-33).

"The young lions do lack and suffer hunger, but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing" (Ps. 34:10).

Many good lessons for Christian workers may be learned from the experience of the soldier. He seldom gets sick or disaffected when pursuing the enemy. There is exercise and interest and excitement in that, but when he lies in camp or barracks he is subject to all the temptations and diseases known. He becomes restless and sickly and discontented simply because he is idle. Are Christian soldiers not like him in this respect?

With every regiment there is a band of music. It takes a prominent part in all important ceremonies; plays at guard-mount and dress parade and leads the column of troops in all reviews. It frequently gives a concert in the evening, and by its continued playing of national and patriotic airs, it greatly affects the zeal and enthusiasm of the soldiers.

We naturally supposed that when the fighting began the band would be right with the firing-line, playing with all its might and filling with patriotic ardor the very air that we breathed. But never a strain did we hear. The battle began with no other music than the sound of the guns and their missiles; and no other encouragement than our own sense of duty and the words and presence of our officers. The band were helping to care for the wounded and bringing ammunition from the rear.

Now the services of the church are, to the Christian, what the band of music is to the soldier. They inspire him with love and enthusiasm for the cause of Christ. When he hears the hymn of praise, the earnest prayer and the soul-stirring sermon, he is ready to say with Paul: "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." But the test of his steadfastness does not come while this encouragement is ringing in his ears. He is far from his adversary when he feels so strong in the Lord. It is in the hour of despondency, or weakness, or evil surroundings that the enemy of souls is sure to be on hand. But the captain of salvation is ever present with his soldiers, and obeying his commands, they never lose a battle.

When the army is lying in trenches, each company at night sends out a guard in advance of its position. They go about three hundred yards toward the enemy and there get under cover, if necessary making a small redoubt. Two men watch while the others sleep. In silence they sit and listen and look in every direction. A treacherous foe is somewhere in front and an army is sleeping in the rear. The penalty for falling asleep on duty is death, and yet it is hard to keep awake. Everything is so quiet. There are other sentinels at some distance to right and left. It is hard to realize continually that danger is present. It is hard to keep in mind the fact that the sentinel is responsible not only for himself but also for the safety of others.

How many who profess to be Christians are drowsy or sound asleep in positions of similar responsibility. "For none of us liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself" (Rom. 14:7).

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

The world moves. A knowledge of this fact is important, even to preachers. Forty years ago the Disciples of Christ were delivering discourses and writing articles for the papers on the time and place of the beginning of the Church of Christ. They affirmed that the church began in Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after the ascension and coronation of the Messiah. This position was controverted. The time and place of the beginning of Christ's church was a subject of debate less than forty years ago. Sermons on the time of the setting up of the kingdom, on the birthday of the church and the conditions of admission, were common a third of a century ago. The world, on this question, as on almost every other, has moved. See the current comments on the Sunday-school lesson for May 26—"The Holy Spirit Given"—the second chapter of the book of Acts.

The Rev. Dr. A. E. Dunning, editor of The Congregationalist, in The Sunday-school Times, as an illustration, speaks, in his notes on this Scripture, of "the birthday of the church," of "the Beginning of the Christian Church;" and Professor Frank K. Sanders, Ph. D., in the same paper, speaks of "The Inauguration of the Messianic Era of the Spirit." Dr. Dunning also speaks of "The Founding of the Church" in his comments on the lesson for the last Lord's day in May. And he says to teachers, "Show how much we need the baptism of the Holy Spirit, how it is promised to all who will repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." Here "the gift of the Holy Spirit" is confounded with the baptism in the Holy Spirit—but let that pass. There is evident a great advance over the former teaching and the old style of speech. As another illustration of progress in the same direction, a better understanding of the second chapter of Acts, the Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D., in "Peloubet's Select Notes," on the Sunday-school lessons, speaks of "the beginning of the new dispensation" and of "the birth of the Christian Church." Dr. Peloubet also suggests that instead of a study of the first eleven verses of the second chapter of Acts the entire chapter should be studied, i. e., the Holy Spirit given and the immediate result—the conversion of three thousand persons. "We have here," he says, "the picture of the First Christian Church."

Even the secular papers have learned the lesson that our fathers with such diligence endeavored to teach. The Denver Republican, in its issue of May 26, says: "To-day is Pentecost Sunday, the birthday of the Christian Church."

Let these illustrations suffice. The position here set forth is no longer a matter of debate. Do not spend time either in preaching or in teaching on the day of the beginning of the Church of Christ. It began in Jerusalem on the first Pentecost after our Lord's return to heaven. Assume this as an indisputable fact and proceed.

At that time and in that place, how did men become members of the church? Those who gave instruction on this subject were guided by the Holy Spirit. Not Simon Peter, with the eleven, but the Holy Spirit required those who would enter this fellowship to repent of their sins and recognize Jesus as Lord by being baptized. But is there anything in this for us? The directions here given are for all people and for all time. Hear these words: "To you is the promise and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call unto him." This brings the call to repentance, the command to be baptized and the promises of remission and the gift of the Holy Spirit, down to date.

"See what the Disciples have done!" I am not so certain that this is the place in which to utter this exclamation. Neither Dr. Dunning, nor Professor Sanders, nor the venerable Peloubet, nor The Sunday-school Times, knows much about the Disciples and their teaching. It is more probable that the persons named never heard of the discussion referred to. They live and have always lived in the east and the debate as to the time and place of the beginning of the church took place in the middle west. It is pretty certain that they never so much as heard of it. Who, or what, then, produced the change if not the Disciples and their teaching? What produced the change? A study of the book.

This is one of the good results of the uniform system of lesson study in our Sunday-schools. But it is only one of many excellent results. It is barely possible that the International Sunday-school lessons have had their day and will be superseded by a superior system; but let us as we bid adieu to the system, if to it we must say good-bye, recognize the fact that it was an enormous advance beyond the previous no-system system. To enumerate in full the indisputably good results of the present system of Bible study in our Sunday-schools would fill a small sized volume. If it must go let us say, as it departs, that it was a step in the progress of the church and has been to countless millions an unspeakable blessing.

And do you not think that it is better to attribute the change above mentioned to the word than to the influence of any single body of men? All that can be desired in the way of intelligence concerning the Christian religion will come, if the people can be persuaded to study, for themselves, the inspired word. Is not this true?

I do not, therefore, disparage the Disciples and their influence in what is here written. I merely honor the word.

I am writing of progress. One word more. The United Presbyterian Church has 918 ministers, 911 congregations and 115,901 communicants in the United States. It is one of the smallest of the dozen or more Presbyterian bodies in this country. The General Assembly met recently in Des Moines. See what they are doing in preaching the gospel to the whole creation. The board of foreign missions received last year $162,727. It is proposed to spend during the next twelve months $65,000 in India, $70,000 in Egypt and $5,000 in the Soudan. The receipts of the board of freedman's missions last year were more than $55,000. The Woman's Missionary Society received more than $37,000. The aggregate missionary contribution of the little United Presbyterian Church was $255,719. In this fact I rejoice. This is, to me at least, good news. Paul, you remember, was glad when, in his day, the Christ was preached "whether in pretense or in truth." Ought we not much rather to rejoice when, in our time, to the East Indians and the Egyptians and the Soudanese, the Christ is made known, even if with the preaching of the Christ there is a bit of lame and out-of-date theology?

But here is a mystery. The United Presbyterians, like all others of the great Presbyterian family, subscribe to the doctrines formulated by the Westminster Assembly of divines about the middle of the seventeenth century. They profess to believe—and do you doubt their sincerity?—that the number of the elect cannot be increased, nor can it be diminished. By all that they can do in India, Egypt and the Soudan the number of the elect will not be increased. On the other hand, if they do nothing no one of the elect will fail of eternal life. Then why give money? Why work?

Here is another mystery equally great. There are those who profess to believe that salvation is conditional, that it is possible to increase the number of the elect by the preaching of the gospel, but who give nothing to the cause of missions. Verily, this too is a great mystery.

What Most Interests Me Now

By J. S. LAMAR

XIII. The Doctrine of God our Savior.

While I cannot in brief space set forth the teaching of Christ with any detail, I shall seek to summarize its more prominent lessons under the following heads:

1. God in his relation to man.
2. The way of man's approach to God.
3. The nature of God's kingdom.

1. Men could never have understood the oracle, "God is love," if it had come to them only in words. Their imagination could not have compassed its breadth and length and depth and height. It would have semed far away, intangible, unreal. Christ taught it in word and in deed. He brought it home to the heart. It was embodied in his person; it was manifested in his character; it was illustrated in his life; it was glorified in his death. He displayed its tender compassion, its long-suffering forbearance, its pity and forgiveness; but he exhibited also a love that hated the false life, the hollow lips, the hypocritical mask, the idolatry of self. This divine love showed righteous indignation and anger to the base and the viperous, but an outstretched hand and a gracious welcome to the poor in spirit, the humble, the meek, the penitent, the honest and the sincere. In numberless ways he speedily flooded the world with this new and heavenly light. In seeing that it was a Father's love, men felt that they could draw nigh to him. It gave them a new faith, new hope, new courage, new aspiration. God was close by, he was propitious, he was accessible, he could be freely approached. His heart could be read in their own fatherly feelings, in their own brotherly sympathies, in all that was truest and noblest and tenderest within them. His face could be seen in the smiling beauty of the landscape, in the radiant sweetness of home, in neighborly intercourse, in innocent pleasure—in all of life's varied states and conditions. Everywhere he had been brought near, not as a dreadful Power and a harsh Ruler, giving minute precepts and imposing heavy burdens, but as a gracious Friend, a ready Helper, a loving Father, a forgiving and almighty Savior. This in substance was the first great lesson taught—taught in words, but exemplified also in the life and character and work of the Teacher.

Never had it been so taught before. No man, however genuinely pious, however truly inspired, could have taught it. Never man spake like this man. It was only the Son that knew the Father—only the Son, therefore, that could reveal him. Only God in man could reveal God to man.

2. In order for man to draw nigh to God he must also know himself, and especially what constitutes distinctively his true manhood—manhood as it was created and meant to be rather than what humanity had come to suppose it to be. The prevailing notion had sprung from below—from the animal and carnal part of the nature — and was radically false. The pampering of fleshly lust and passion, the devotion to worldly ambition and the aggrandizement of self—all these, in God's sight, were degrading, they were not manly, they were prompted and fostered by the beastly part of us. It is the higher nature that distinguishes man from brute and that gives him the image and likeness of God. Hence the teaching of Christ on this subject was in direct contrast with that of all the world. The true man is he who, realizing his degradation and failure, feels poor in spirit, is distressed by his short-comings, is meek and lowly in heart, hungers and thirsts after righteousness, is merciful to his neighbor, and who by renouncing the world and subjecting the flesh to the spirit becomes pure in heart, and thus sees God. By the expansion and illustration of these cardinal elements of a true humanity men were taught to know themselves, to realize their possibilities, to have a higher and worthier motive, a better and higher aim, and to long for a true fellowship with God.

Thus prepared, they could appreciate the way of approach to him. Briefly, they must begin over again, become as little children, rule by serving, become great by renouncing greatness, go up by going down, deny the self to find the better self, and lose the life to obtain everlasting life.

3. In harmony with these amazing lessons and coincident with their practical acceptance comes the kingdom of heaven. This is portrayed without one uncertain or hesitating stroke. No man has ever seen it or anything like it, and yet it is described with perfect confidence and unstinted fullness of detail—its origin, its characteristics, its subjects, its obstacles, its enemies, its growth, its victories, its ultimate glories—all are known and all are revealed. It is a kingdom which is not of this world and which cannot be seen by the eyes of this world. Its subjects are not born of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God—born from above, born anew, born of water and of the Spirit—a kingdom in which the divine principles and truths taught by the Teacher sent from God must dwell in the heart, mold the character, and direct the aspiration and the life of every subject. In this as in all his teaching, so antagonistic to worldly principles, so suppressive of carnal desires, so independent of human support, so confident of the divine, and so perfectly assured of the final result, he demonstrated that he was one with him whose thoughts are high as heaven above ours, and whose ways are absolutely and wholly divine.

It was because the incarnated and personal word was in the beginning with God and was himself God, knowing his eternal purpose and all his thoughts and ways—that he could speak with divine authority and perfect knowledge, revealing God to man and man to himself, while he established and opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

The Bible Alone Sufficient.

By W. T. Moore.

In studying the pioneers and their plea, as represented in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, nothing perhaps more forcibly strikes us than the contention which our pioneers made for the Bible and the Bible alone as a sufficient rule of faith and practice. What was the ground of their faith? Why did they regard the Bible in this light?

Doubtless, they were influenced to make their plea for the Bible and the Bible alone mainly on the ground that human creeds, from a historical point of view, could not be defended. Some of their objections to these creeds may be enumerated as follows:

(1) Human creeds are without any divine sanction and should not, therefore, be made tests of Christian fellowship. Doctrinal statements may be published for public information, just as sermons are preached or essays printed, but all such statements should be limited entirely to the sphere of education and should not have any binding force on the conscience of any one.

(2) Human creeds substitute philosophical speculations as objects of faith for the personal Christ, who is the only object of faith presented in the Scriptures. In this way knowledge is made to usurp the place of faith, and this is directly opposed to the teaching of the divine word. Knowledge is important, but it must occupy its rightful place. It belongs not to faith, but must be added after we have faith.

(3) Human creeds have not brought unity to the church. On the contrary, they have proved to be schismatical in their tendencies, as the history of the church abundantly shows. This fact alone ought to condemn these creeds, even if there were no other objections to them; for anything that hinders the union of God's people cannot be regarded with favor.

(4) No human creed can be perfect, because it is the work of man and must, therefore, bear the impress of his weakness. No man can comprehend the whole scope of human need. Only divine wisdom can meet all the conditions of such a case. Even a number of men can provide for nothing wider than their own narrow circle, and for no other day than that in which they live. This at once limits the usefulness of human creeds to the men who make them.

(5) Human creeds are tyrannical. They limit free investigation. They make progress difficult, and often stand right in the way of the noblest aspirations of the soul. This is a very serious objection. Freedom of thought must be maintained at all hazards. Doubtless, this may sometimes be attended with evil, but there is really no evil commensurate with that which practically destroys all progress.

(6) Human creeds constantly need revision. No human work can stand the test of all time. Some of the religious denominations are just now agitated over the revision question. Such agitation will continue to go on, and in the meantime the salvation of the world will have to wait. We want a creed that is perfect.

(7) There is no need of human creeds. The church already has a creed—a divine creed; consequently it is disrespectful to our heavenly Father and presumptuous on our part to substitute anything for that which divine wisdom has prepared.

This last point was insisted upon with great earnestness by the fathers of the reformation. They made much out of the fact that we cannot improve upon the book which God has himself given us for our guidance in religious matters. They earnestly contended that this book was all sufficient for everything which relates to faith and practice.

Of course they did not mean by this that no other book should be studied, or that no other information should be prized. On the contrary they urged the widest possible scope of reading of all good books; but this reading was held to be subordinate to the great matter of understanding the will of God, and this will, they contended, could not be found anywhere else than in God's word.

To the contention that human creeds are necessary in order to shut out heresy, it was confidently stated that these creeds have been faithfully tried in this respect and have been found to be failures. As a matter of fact they do not shut out heresies at all. The whole history of the church demonstrates that these creeds are hinderances rather than helps to union. Hence the one proposition that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, is the only thing that should be submitted definitely to our faith; and when this proposition is heartily accepted, then all that the Christ says, either in his own words or through his inspired apostles, is binding upon his followers; and nothing else is binding so far as our religious life is concerned.

This view of the matter is both simple and comprehensive. It makes faith personal rather than doctrinal, and specially honors him upon whom the church is built. At the same time it is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace everything needful for the best interests of every human soul. No wonder this plea for the Bible alone and the faith which it reveals became a powerful force in the hands of our pioneer preachers.

Summing up the whole case, the following points were regarded as conclusive in favor of the contention that the word of God is a sufficient rule of faith and practice:

(1) The religion of Christ is a revelation, and as such we are shut up to the book wherein it is revealed for all we know or can know of its faith and practice.

This view of the matter helps very much to simplify the Christian life. Every question relating to that life can be appealed to the one book. Whatever is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," must be found in the "all Scripture" "given by inspiration of God." Hence, "where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where they are silent we are silent" was, when legitimately understood, the logical result of the assumption that the Bible alone is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. This simplicity of the plea, which the Campbells and their co-laborers made, became a strong tower in the maintenance of their cause.

(2) This Bible-alone doctrine appeals strongly to the popular heart. The people felt safe when they were assured that all they needed in order to salvation could be found in the grand old Book. This book was in almost every house and was easily obtainable at a very small price. They could not be sure if their salvation depended upon even human interpretations of the one book if these interpretations had to be expressed in human creeds. It was found that these creeds did not practically settle anything. They had to be interpreted by those who accepted them; and consequently they only confused the public mind and so added to the difficulty of reaching an infallible result. It was claimed by the Campbells that the Bible was more easily understood than the creeds, and though each person had to interpret the Bible for himself with such assistance as he could procure, this was much better than an authoritative interpretation in the form of a human symbol.

In any case the plea for individual interpretation emphasized the importance of personal liberty with respect to the greatest matter which concerns the human race. It was recognized that there were difficulties which must be met in any view of biblical interpretation; but it was claimed that the view which placed the responsibility upon the individual in finding out what his Bible teaches, was of great value in accentuating the importance of Bible study as well as individual liberty.

(3) As a working basis the Bible-alone notion is entitled to very high claims. It has been shown to be eminently practical. As to the question of Christian union it offers the best solution, if indeed it does not offer the only solutiou. "Beware of the man with one book" is doubly emphasized if that one book is the Bible. This one book thoroughly furnishes unto all good works. What else do we need? Certainly nothing so far as the practical Christian life is concerned. Consequently as a working basis the plea which the pioneers of the Disciple movement mad with respect to the all-sufficiency of the Bible has proved to be highly satisfactory wherever it has been thoroughly tested.

It now remains to be seen whether the rising generations will be true to the plea which their fathers so distinctly emphasized. There is no reason to fear. Whatever changes may come it is not probable that human creeds will again become potent factors in the religious life of the world. The trend is all in the opposite direction. We may, therefore, confidently affirm that the battle against human creeds has been fought and won.

The South Kentucky Missionary Convention.

It was a bright, beautiful morning on May 29, as we floated down the broad Ohio from Rockport, Ind., to Owensboro, Ky. The Christian Church here has a good, large building with a membership of over 500. R. H. Crossfield, active, strong and capable, ministers to this congregation. Some one has said that he is like President E. V. Zollars, "a steam engine in boots." He is doing a great work for this church and they highly appreciate it. With such a pastor and such a congregation the convention of the South Kentucky District on May 28-30, was in good hands.

The south Kentucky missionary district is composed of thirty-three counties with a population of over 600,000. It is said that we have 30,000 Disciples in this district and yet in several of these counties our people are quite weak. This was the 27th annual meeting of the brotherhood of the district. When the district was first organized there were less than 8,000 members and now nearly four times as many. The reports show that 74 churches and 140 Bible-schools have been organized. There have been over 9,000 additions and 46 new houses of worship built. The amount raised for this work is near $150,000. This is no small work for a district to do and is much larger than some states are doing with a larger membership. The work for the last year indicated that three churches and 13 Bible-schools were organized, 676 additions to the church and a total of $11,794.94 was raised. To the work of J. W. Gant these splendid results are largely due. He has been in this work for near twenty years. During the coming year Brother E. J. Willis is to be associated with him in this work.

The addresses of the convention were on practical subjects and all were well received. The ladies had one half day of the convention and several excellent addresses were delivered. Among these was the address of Sister Harrison, Lexington, Ky., to the large audience at night. Our brethren in Kentucky have a great field open to them and if they modify some of their methods and remain true to the gospel of Christ our membership and strength would soon double in the state. We met with a number of the south Kentucky preachers and we found them all alive and active in the service of our Lord. Among them were two who belong to old Missouri, H. D. Smith, Hopkinsville, and J. W. Mitchell, Earlington. E. W. Thornton also labors in this part of the state, but he was not at the convention.

JOYS of JUNE

By Olive Thorne Miller
Author of "Nesting Time," Etc.

"The bobolinks sing in the sun-glowing meadows,
The piping of plovers is heard in the leas,
But the cuckoo delights in the cool leafy shadows,
Where the nest and its treasures are rocked by the breeze."
—Thomas Mason Earl.

To one who has the love of birds in the heart these perfect days of June are full of inspiration and delight; so many secrets of bird-life to discover; so many tender home scenes to watch. From the wild-eyed mother sitting on her nest, resolute, though full of terror, to the venturesome infant of a few weeks, calmly making his first excursion into the world, and afraid of nothing—there are so many things to see, so much to learn. The world is full of joy.

In the first part of the month bird life seems a little subdued, for nearly all the home-makers are absorbed in their domestic duties. But singing is in its glory. It may not perhaps have the rapturous quality of courtship, but if it lack the agitation and the ardor of those days, it is full of a serene happiness that is more satisfying, and here and there one shall see the singer patiently waiting on bush or tree for his home duties to open.

After the middle of the month nests begin to brim over with their lively loads, and one may watch the life and training of Young America in nests instead of nurseries. The comfortable theory of the old-time ornithologists that young birds need no education, but come out of the egg fully equipped for life, knowing as much as their grandsires, has long been exploded. It was comfortable because it explained everything so easily, without raising any embarrassing questions about the relation of the lower orders to the human race. Interesting experiments have been made in rearing birds from the egg, to discover how much instruction the young require to fit them for life, and it is now well known that they have their regular training, more or less severe as seems to be necessary. The rosy gull, for example, nesting in communities, has very early to teach her little family to stay at home and not gad about too soon, seeking society, of which it appears that the whole tribe is fond—even in the cradle. Dr. Roberts, who studied a colony of rosy gulls in Minnesota, found that as soon as the nestlings could crawl, they started out, with the social tendencies of their race, to see their neighbors. Their visits were welcome too. They were cordially received, either by a bird still sitting upon her eggs, when she coaxed them to cuddle down beside her, or by a mother already blessed with a large family, who cheerfully received them into her nursery, and readily undertook their support with her own. Some nests were like orphan asylums, swarming with tender younglings. But the deserted mothers did not take their loss quietly. When one found an infant on its travels she snatched it up by the back of the neck, flew up a little, and gave it a toss toward the home it had abandoned. Sometimes several such flings would be necessary to reach the home, and occasionally the Doctor found one whose tender neck was bruised by this rather rude treatment. But what else could she do? Children must be taught!

Not all nestlings begin their schooling so soon as this, for birds living in higher and solitary nests cannot get out so early, and have usually no neighbors to visit. With these, instruction begins—so far as mortals on the ground can discover—with the attempt to fly. I hope one need not say at this late day that bird mothers do not usually, if ever, drive away, push off the nest, or otherwise force their younglings out into the world. The larger number of little folk whom I have seen leave the nest have taken flight while the parents were absent, and those seen when parents were near have been marked by the exhibition of the most tender anxiety, and help whenever it could be given, and the utmost distress if the youngster failed in his attempt and came to the ground.

Stories have several times been told like this, from a lady I know. A mother bird, finding her nestling afraid to try his wings, flew under the twig on which he was crouching, and in some way got him on her back and flew off with him. When at a little distance she suddenly gave a great swoop and actually left her burden in the air, upon which he took to his own wings and came safely down.

All who have watched birds carefully have seen them teach the young to find food, to bathe, to follow, to sing, to fear danger and other things. Birds brought up from the nest by people never learn some of these lessons. For example, birds so reared are not afraid of the human race. I could give many authenticated instances of this. Then they do not know their native tongue, nor understand the calls of their own mother, and do not sing their father's song. A chewink or towhee bunting reared in a house, sang the song of an ortolon confined in the next cage, and refused to learn the song of his family when placed next a singing chewink. A captive young robin learned the song of a mocking-bird, and a young blue-jay did the same.

Not only has the fact of the training of the young been brought to light, but it has been proved that birds are creatures of habit, and live regular lives. In Alaska last summer on the Harriman expedition, Dr. Fisher was interested to observe that although the sun did not set till eleven o'clock at night, the birds paid no attention to the vagaries of that luminary, but went to bed according to custom at eight o'clock, in broad daylight of course. If they were disturbed in their slumbers they appeared half awake and bewildered as they do in the dark.

One may sometimes see a case of discipline, like a droll one seen among the domestic inmates of a yard in Michigan last summer. With the regular poultry was placed a small party of ducks, and a little pond for their use. The head of this family was a personage of dignity who loved quiet, and the usual emotional announcement of a fresh egg was exceedingly offensive to his sensitive ear. When an indiscreet hen became too gushing, he flew at her, caught her by the neck, dragged her—protesting at the top of her lungs—into the pond and ducked her well.

One of the delights of late June is to make the acquaintance of nestlings at home when the mother is absent, speaking to them quietly, moving slowly, and if touching them at all, only with the gentlest touch of a finger. The young usually show no fear and will often answer one's quiet talk. I have held conversation in this way with humming birds in the nest, stroking them with my finger, and have talked with, or to, clear-eyed mourning dove babies, fluffy little blue-jays and others. Very soon after they leave the nest they are taught not to permit such familiarities.

It is most interesting to see the processes of training that are obvious to us, such as to fly compactly in a flock. The wing exercises, for example, of sandpipers, who fly as one bird—as dwellers on the seashore know—showing one moment all silvery breasts flashing in the sun, and the next instant grey backs that blend with the ocean color and make them almost invisible. This wing practice may be seen over the solitary marshes or low lands of which they are fond, and one realizes that perfection of flight is a matter of much practice, and not of instinct.

Strange stories are told of young trained by birds of another species to adopt the habits of the foster-mother, as a bird of vegetarian proclivities reared by a captive bird of prey being taught to eat meat—sorely against his inclination and against all the traditions of his race.

Not much less bumptious and self-assertive than the young of the human species are these young folk of the nest. Like our own juniors they know much more than their elders, and no doubt they feel equally competent to instruct and train their parents in the way they should go. "I don't know how they talked when you were young," said a modern bread-and-butter Miss of tender years, whose mother corrected her grammar, "but now we say 'I done.'" "I don't know how you old folks feel about it," said the manner of a young crow—exactly with the air of the young Miss—"but I'm not a bit afraid of that big creature coming this way." But the whole flock rose as one bird, with shrieks of warning as I appeared, and the young bird was startled into flight with the rest, though I am certain, from his calm and interested manner, that he fully meant to accord me an interview.

I have indicated but few of the special joys of June among the birds, for, as our Nature-Seer, Emerson, has well said:

"Wary Nature knows her own,
. . . . . .
And to her son will treasures more
And more to purpose, freely pour
In one wood walk than learned men
Can find with glass in ten times ten."

Brooklyn, N. Y.

First Twentieth Century Missionary Conventions.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will bear in mind that the next conventions of the Foreign, Home and Women's Missionary Societies are to be held in Minneapolis next October 10-17. There is coming to be a general belief that in some respects this is to be the most important convention in our history. The time, the place, the purpose, all conspire to bring about this grand result. When the Kansas City Convention last year selected Minneapolis, there was some misgiving that perhaps Minneapolis was not sufficiently central to the great body of Disciples. Such fears are rapidly being dispelled.

The banquet given some time ago by the ladies of the Portland Avenue Church of Minneapolis to representatives of the Commercial Club, editors of the daily press, and railway officials and their wives, was prolific of the best results. The Commercial Club has generously provided the Exposition Hall, holding 6,000 persons and capable of being heard in for speakers of even moderate voice. In the building arrangements will also be made for committee and rest rooms, commodious lobbies for visiting and headquarters, and rooms for post office, information bureau, etc. A large restaurant and dining-room immediately adjoins the hall and under the same roof—in fact all the accessories to a large attendance are to be provided.

The daily press of that city is eager to print anything concerning the convention, and especially facts in our history none too well known. The railroads of the Western Passenger territory have united in granting the one fare rate for the round trip. This has never been granted heretofore by this association, and is the greater surprise because of the fact of its denying as favorable a rate to any other convention with one exception this year. These railroads seem to believe that our membership should and can be taken to the northwest in large numbers. Assurances are quite positive that the Central Passenger Association will grant the same rate, and the Minneapolis Transportation Committee are confident that the one fare rate will be made to apply to all parts of the United States and Canada.

Thus far no missionary convention ever started out with brighter hopes of success. The Minneapolis Convention ought to be a large one. That it will be enthusiastic need not be doubted. We start out in the new century with new hopes and new undertakings and consequently with new responsibilities. This convention will not be so much to recount what has been done as to anticipate the great things to be yet done.

The world is coming closer together in everything, even in religion. A united Christianity, based upon our plea for unity, must begin in a stronger degree its march over the world. Every Disciple who can possibly arrange to go should attend the first twentieth century missionary conventions of the Christian churches next October.

All committees arranging excursions or delegations should write Dr. D. O. Thomas, chairman of the Executive Committee, or Mr. Thos. F. Branham, chairman of the Transportation Committee, or Mr. Geo. G. Halbert, secretary and chairman of the Advertising Committee, for any information or co-operation desired.

Harnack on the Resurrection of Christ.

[As of ten asthe resurrection of Christ becomes the theme of general discussion, there are not a few who raise their voices against the doctrine of the bodily resurrection. However, for most of us we still believe that Jesus came from the grave, and that these boasting lines are not true:

"Far hence he lies
In the lone Syrian town,
And on the grave with shining eyes,
The Syrian stars look down."

It is interesting to know what such a man as Prof. Harnack believes on this important question. The following quotation is from his recent book, "What is Christianity?" (Eng. Trans. p. 160 ff.)

This most eminent of German theologians and church historians of the present day is clear and definite in his belief in the resurrection of Jesus, though he places the emphasis upon the different parts of the evidence in a not wholly familiar manner. The physical resurrection alone of Jesus would be of little worth apart from the stupendous spiritual awakening which followed it. The two together he makes the abiding ground of our hope.

"Jesus was proclaimed as 'the Lord' not only because he had died for sinners but because he was the risen and living one. If the resurrection meant nothing but that a deceased body of flesh and blood came to life again, we should make short work of this tradition. But it is not so. The New Testament itself distinguishes between the Easter message of the empty grave and the appearances of Jesus on the one side and the Easter faith on the other. Although the greatest value is attached to that message, we are to hold the Easter faith even in its absence. The story of Thomas is told for the exclusive purpose of impressing upon us that we must hold the Easter faith even without the Easter message: "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed." The disciples on the road to Emmaus were blamed for not believing in the resurrection even though the Easter message had not yet reached them. The Lord is a spirit, says Paul; and this carries with it the certainty of his resurrection.

"The Easter message tells us of that wonderful event in Joseph of Arimathæa's garden, which, however, no eye saw; it tells us of the empty grave into which a few women and disciples looked; of the appearance of the Lord in a transfigured form, so glorified that his own could not immediately recognize him, it soon begins to tell us, too, of what the risen one said and did. The reports became more and more complete and more and more confident. But the Easter faith is the conviction that the crucified one gained a victory over death; that God is just and powerful; that he who is the first born among many brethren still lives.

"Paul based his Easter faith upon the certainty that 'the second Adam' was from heaven, and upon his experience on the way to Damascus of God's revealing his Son to him as still alive. God, he said, revealed him 'in me'; but this inner revelation was coupled with 'a vision,' overwhelming as a vision never was afterwards. Did the apostle know of the message about the empty grave? While there are theologians of note who doubt it, I think it probable; but we cannot be quite certain about it. Certain it is that what he and the disciples regarded as all-important was not the state in which the grave was found, but Christ's appearances. But who of us can maintain that a clear account of these appearances can be constructed out of the stories told by Paul and the evangelists, and if that be impossible, and there is no tradition of single events which is quite trustworthy, how is the Easter faith to be based on them? Either we must decide to rest our belief on a foundation unstable and always exposed to fresh doubts, or else we must abandon this foundation altogether, and with it the miraculous appeal to our senses. But here, too, the images of the faith have their roots in truth and reality. Whatever may have happened at the grave and in the matter of the appearances, one thing is certain: This grave was the birthplace of the indestructible belief that death is vanquished, that there is a life eternal.

"It is useless to cite Plato; it is useless to point to the Persian religion, and the ideas and the literature of later Judaism. All that would have perished and has perished; but the certainty of the resurrection and of life eternal which is bound up with the grave in Joseph's garden has not perished, and on the conviction that Jesus lives we still base those hopes of citizenship in an eternal city which make our earthly life worth living and tolerable. 'He delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage,' as the writer of the epistle to the Hebrews confesses. That is the point. And although there be exceptions to its sway, wherever, despite all the weight of nature, there is a strong faith in the infinite value of the soul; wherever death has lost its terrors; wherever the sufferings of the present are measured against a future of glory, this feeling of life is bound up with the conviction that Jesus Christ has passed through death, that God has awakened him and raised him to life and glory. What else can we believe but that the earliest disciples also found the ultimate foundation of their faith in the living Lord to be the strength which had gone out from him? It was a life never to be destroyed which they felt to be going out from him; only for a brief span of time could his death stagger them; the strength of the Lord prevailed over everything; God did not give him over to death; he lives as the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep.

"It is not by any speculative ideas of philosophy but by the vision of Jesus' life and death and by the feeling of his imperishable union with God, that mankind, so far as it believes in these things, has attained to that certainty of eternal life for which it was meant, and which it dimly discerns—eternal life in time and beyond time. This feeling first establishes faith in the value of personal life. But of every attempt to demonstrate the certainty of 'immortality' by logical process, we may say in the words of the poet:

" 'Believe and venture; as for pledges,
The gods give none.'

"Belief in the living Lord and in life eternal is the act of the freedom which is born of God."

Current Literature.

Clifton Johnson is already well known as a man who can handle well both pen and camera. His "Among English Hedgerows" has led many a fireside traveler into a pleasing and intimate acquaintance with some of the humbler, but not the least delightful, phases of English life; and in Along French Byways he has given the same sort of intelligent and sympathetic treatment to the French peasantry and the scenes among which they live. For the average traveler, as for the historian, it is doubtless true that "Paris is France." But one who knows how to ramble and roam through the country, talking with its people, touching its life and picturing its scenes, can find things in rural France which are quite as well worth while as the cafes and boulevards of Paris. Mr. Johnson is not above saying a good many things which are among the commonplaces of travel and there is not infrequently a touch which one is tempted to characterize as amateurish, though the author is certainly no amateur. But this is more than compensated by his constant enthusiasm for his subject. Heaven defend us from the blase traveler who has seen it all and will not compromise his dignity by enjoying or admiring anything! Mr. Johnson has seen much and with most of it he is frankly pleased. And so is the reader. Among the best chapters is that on the village homes of the Fontainebleau painters. (Macmillan Co.)

Readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are well acquainted with the name of J. Breckenridge Ellis as a writer of stories for children and there are few who have not admired the extraordinary fertility of his imagination. But he is a writer of other books than juveniles. "Shem," an Old Testament historical novel, and "The Dread and Fear of Kings," are the best known of his more pretentious works. His most recent book is Garcilaso, a romance of old Spain. In a historical setting which includes the conquest of Granada from the Moors, the Spanish Inquisition and the discovery of America, it is not to be wondered at that so inventive a writer can find an ample supply of incidents for the working out of his clever plot. Aside from the fact that the story is ingeniously constructed and admirably written, it has one or two more unusual virtues. The description of the workings of the Inquisition and the attitude of the faithful toward it—a tension which arose between friendship and the inherited ideas of religious duty—reveals a true insight into history of the time. It is easier for the writer of a historical novel to be correct in the historical incidents which he employs than to be true to the period in depicting types of mind and points of view, and in the latter respect Mr. Ellis has scored a distinct and notable triumph. His characters think and speak, as well as fight, like fifteenth century Spaniards. There is genuine literary skill displayed in those apparently accidental touches by which the old hidalgo, Garcilaso—proud, brave, boastful, ignorantly religious—displays both his virtues and his vices in telling the story of his life. The story is full of episode and action, involving among other things a description of the voyage of Columbus and his triumphal return. (A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.25.)

By the happy accident of the time and place of his birth and still more by the qualities of his mind, Thomas Wentworth Higginson has become the intimate biographer of more American men of letters than any one else ever has or perhaps ever will. Possessing too much dignity of character and independent worth ever to become a Boswell, he writes not the life of one man but the literary history of his time in the form of biographical essays. He is a man who seems divinely intended to have illustrious contemporaries and to make the most of them, and in his book, Contemporaries,—now no longer strictly new, but by oversight not hitherto mentioned in these columns—he gives delightful sketches of such men as Emerson, Olcott, Parker, Whittier, William Lloyd Garrison and a dozen others, the men who constituted his intellectual environment. There is nothing formal or formidable in these essays, but they cast that sort of side-light upon events and characters of the past that makes history not a picture but a vital and moving scene. Col. Higginson has, of course, done original and creative literary work of a high grade, but he will be longest and most appreciatively remembered as one who, having many friends upon the highest pinnacles of literary fame, caught the light of their personality on the mirror of his own peculiar genius and reflected it down to those of us who dwell in the valley. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.)

Prof. Richard G. Moulton has probably done more than any one else to call attention to the fact that, however unique the Bible may be as an inspired guide to religious truth, it has certain characteristics as literature in common with the other literatures of the world; that it contains, indeed, literature of various kinds and of the highest order. The literary study of the Bible is distinct from the devotional, theological and historical study of it and is not intended as a substitute for any of these methods. Prof. Moulton's work entitled "The Literary Study of the Bible," which has given currency to this conception, has met with wide popularity—no wider, however, than it deserved. He has recently issued another book entitled A Short Introduction to the Literature of the Bible, in which the same subject is treated by a somewhat different method and in briefer compass. The present volume is in no sense an abridgement of the former, though it covers much of the same ground. It is particularly suitable for use as a text-book for either private or class study. As the author says, we have studied the Bible in almost every conceivable way, have dissected it, have written commentaries upon it, have done everything with it—except read it. His work is intended to stimulate the intelligent reading of the Bible. One cannot read intelligently without noting whether he is reading prose or poetry; if the former, whether history, philosophy, oratory or fiction; if the latter, whether lyric, epic or dramatic. Ordinary books are so printed that the literary form is indicated to the reader's eye at a glance; but the Bible, "the worst printed book in the world" in spite of its India paper and limp morocco, is put up in such a way as effectively to conceal the literary form. This makes necessary such works as this to introduce the reader to the Bible as literature. It is a convenient little hand-book which cannot fail to be highly useful either to the reader or to the student. Most of the more technical matter which the student needs, but which would impede the progress of the general reader, is conveniently arranged in the form of appendices. (D. C. Heath & Co. $1.)

The Life of Mrs. Booth, the founder of the Salvation Army, by W. T. Stead, is a remarkable story of a remarkable life. That Mr. Stead, the editor of the Review of Reviews, should have undertaken to write it, is evidence that he considers her one of the history makers of the past century. Unlike the biography by her son, the present work is of necessity written from the standpoint of an outsider, so far as the work of the Salvation Army is concerned. But Mr. Stead has a keen appreciation of that work and tells the story of its founder's life in the vivid style which he always commands. (Fleming H. Revell. $1.25.)

The magazine number of the Outlook, June 1, contains among other articles of interest the report of the Presbyterian General Assembly by a staff correspondent, the country club and its influence on American life by Gustave Kobbe, an illustrated article by Booker T. Washington on Chickens, Pigs and People, The Forester and His Work by Charles W. Ayres and a continuation of the able series of articles by Lyman Abbott on The Rights of Man. Mr. Jacob A. Riis continues his interesting series on The Making of an American. The whole number is well illustrated and maintains in all its departments its usual standard of excellence.

Fresh at Night.

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

A school teacher of Media, Kan., says in this connection, "I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts Food five months ago. At that time my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite, was nervous and sleepless, and experienced, almost constantly, a feeling of exhaustion. I tried various remedies without good results, then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers.

I commenced using that food and have since made a constant and rapid improvement in health in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in the most strenuous and exacting work.

I have gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes but as my vitality increased the eyes became stronger. I never heard of food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts. Please omit my name from print." Name can be given by Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Budget.

—Welcome June!

—Let Children's Day be continued until all the schools have been thoroughly canvassed.

—June is about the last of the active months before summer vacation begins. Let us make the most of it.

—The Missouri State Bible-school Convention at Sedalia, June 10-13. One fare for round trip on M. P., M. K. & T., Burlington, Wabash and Frisco. No excuse now for not going.

—The Missouri Pacific and M. K. & T. have granted a rate of one fare for the round trip to the Sunday-school convention at Sedalia. Tickets will be on sale June 10, 11 and 12, good for return until the 14th.

—Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, Mo., writes that C. C. Redgrave recently gave his illustrated lecture "In the Footsteps of the Pioneers" at that place. It is everywhere spoken of in the highest terms.

—Prof. Goodnight, of Eureka College, recently preached at Cameron, Ill., where his father, T. E. Goodnight, of Meridian, was formerly pastor. O. D. Maple, of Cameron, will preach the annual sermon for the I. O. O. F., June 8.

—The commencement exercises of Add-Ran Christian University were held May 31 to June 5. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Addison Clark and the commencement address was delivered by C. McPherson.

—H. S. Earl, of Irvington, Ind., expects to visit England during the coming summer, spending three or four months visiting our churches in that country and especially his old fields of labor where he spent nearly twenty years of his life.

—Young women under thirty years of age, of good moral character, sound health and a common school education, are wanted to enter a hospital training school as pupils with a view to becoming graduate nurses. Apply to Mrs. O. C. Shedd, 4011 Pine Street, St. Louis.

—Charles Forster, of Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., whose name has appeared more than once among the contributors to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, will spend the summer vacation in pastoral work at Athens, Pa. His home is in Birkenhead, England.

—Sherman Hill will close his work at Hampton, Ia., June 30, after a three years' pastorate and will spend a few weeks at Pendleton, Kan., in resting and reading. Bro. Hill will not be allowed to rest long enough to rust. Such men are in demand.

—The Mothers and Babies' Home, a department of the work of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, has found it necessary to rent a larger house and establish a training school for nurses. Last year they cared for one hundred and eighty-eight babies, gave temporary shelter and employment to one hundred women and sent thirty-five babies into good homes. The Home is located at 2821 Chestnut St., St. Louis.

—Dr. S. R. Wood and wife, of Bowling Green, Florida, are in the city visiting friends and will remain until autumn, as they have many friends in Missouri. The doctor is seventy-three years of age and retains much vigor and a deep interest in the things which pertain to the kingdom of God.

—Dr. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, delivered the address at the commencement of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. J. C. Reynolds characterized it as "easy to hear, pleasant to listen to, pure in diction, sound in teaching and modest and attractive in manner."

—J. M. Van Horn preached his farewell sermon to the church at Warren, O., last week. He has been with the congregation for eleven years and the relation has been a happy one on both sides. During this time the congregation has grown from 450 to 994 members, has paid off all debts and has now no outstanding financial obligations. Bro. Van Horn goes to Worcester, Mass.

—The Fourth Church of Christ of Akron, O., W. D. Van Voorhis, pastor, will dedicate its new house of worship June 16. The present building, which is but the Sunday-school room of the permanent structure, will cost about $5,000, and is located on one of the most desirable sites in the city. The congregation is the child of the state board and of the First Church in Akron and hopes soon to be more than self-supporting. L. L. Carpenter will be master of ceremonies at the dedication.

—The Bible Assembly and Summer School of Drake University begins June 17. The assembly includes courses of study lasting one and two weeks and evening lectures by Knox P. Taylor, I. N. McCash, D. H. Bays, George H. Combs, C. R. Scoville, W. F. Richardson and others, in addition to some of the regular Drake instructors. The summer school will continue for nine weeks and will offer courses in Church History, Christian Doctrine, New Testament Greek, Hebrew and Oratory. For rates and further information address A. M. Haggard, 980 26th St., Des Moines, Ia.

—The receipts for foreign missions from October 1, to June 1, amount to $101,279.21, or a gain over the corresponding eight months last year of $4,436.03. It is hoped the returns from Children's Day will amount to at least $45,000. They ought to amount to $50,000. If we reach $200,000 this year we must gain $15,563.97 in the next four months. This can be done if all will unite in a strong effort. The receipts for foreign missions during the month of May amounted to $10,361.67, or a gain over the corresponding month last year of $1,785.04.

—On June 16 the new church at Wilkinsburg, Pa., will be dedicated. This is the outgrowth of a mission Bible-school started in a hall last November by Henry F. Lutz. A five weeks' meeting was held in the spring by Bro. Lutz and 86 members were gathered, many coming from other churches in Pittsburg. A church was organized April 30 and bought the old Presbyterian church which, with necessary alterations, will cost about $15,000. The cause in Greater Pittsburg will be strengthened by this new organization.

Scrofula

This root of many evils—

Glandular tumors, abscesses, pimples and other cutaneous eruptions, sore ears, inflamed eyelids, rickets, dyspepsia, catarrh, readiness to catch cold and inability to get rid of it easily, paleness, nervousness and other ailments including the consumptive tendency—

Can be completely and permanently removed, no matter how young or old the sufferer.

Hood's Sarsaparilla was given the daughter of Silas Vernooy, Wawarsing, N. Y., who had broken out with scrofula sores all over her face and head. The first bottle helped her and when she had taken six the sores were all healed and her face was smooth. He writes that she has never shown any sign of the scrofula returning.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Promises to cure and keeps the promise. Ask your druggist for it today and accept no substitute.

—We are informed that the congregation at Dresden, Kan., is without a pastor and would like to find a good man who can combine preaching with farming. Charles Hopper of that place suggests that there is also a good opening for a drug store or a hotel.

—At the close of the service last Sunday evening the Christian Church in Columbia, by a unanimous vote, granted its faithful pastor, Eld. C. H. Winders, a much needed vacation of two months in which to visit England. The church and congregation further showed its appreciation of his services by bearing the expense of this trip. Rev. Winders expressed his gratitude in a few well chosen words, and promised his congregation that they should receive some benefit from his contemplated journey, in the shape of renewed effort on his return.—Columbia Statesman.

—The most notable event of the week at Christian College was the announcement on Wednesday evening of the magnificent gift of Mrs. L. W. St. Clair and Mrs. W. T. Moore, of the Christian College property, free from incumbrance, to the trustees in trust for educational purposes forever. Two years ago the trustees made over the college property to Mrs. Moore and Mrs. St. Clair upon consideration that they should expend certain moneys in the construction of new buildings. When this was done the property was to become absolutely owned by them. These buildings have now been completed, the past year has been the most successful in the history of the college and these two noble-spirited women, out of their own private resources, have expended or provided about $75,000 in improvements, making the whole property worth about $100,000. It is this entire property which Mrs. Moore and Mrs. St. Clair have now re-deeded to the trustees, and have assumed all outstanding obligations. This gives to the trustees for education a magnificent property and adds to the esteem in which these good women are held in Missouri for their consecration and liberality. This generous gift was announced at the commencement Wednesday evening by C. H. Winders, president of the board of trustees. It was stated, also, that plans were under consideration for the erection of a new chapel during the coming collegiate year. For this purpose a scholarship of $5,000 has been promised and it is believed the other $25,000 needed for the erection of the building will be secured soon.—Columbia Herald.

—Missouri Bible-school convention next week at Sedalia.

—St. Louis will send a large delegation and other places will no doubt do as well.

—Drury College, Springfield, Mo., lays the corner stone of its new Science Hall on Wednesday of next week. The editor of this paper will deliver an address on the occasion.

—Bethany College sends us a neat program of its commencement exercises, showing the graduating class of 13. The exercises occur June 16-20.

—It will be remembered that the steamboat excursion for the benefit of the Christian Benevolent Association takes place on Friday of this week on the City of Providence.

—The assistant editor of this paper is spending a few days on his wheel exploring some of the beauties of southeast and central Missouri. The wheeling habit is hard to break.

—The Central Board of the Christian Churches of St. Louis and vicinity meets on Thursday evening of this week at the Mt. Cabanne Church and has some important matters for consideration. We are getting in line for an aggressive movement.

—The Illinois Christian Missionary Convention announces its next meeting at Springfield, September 9-12. This early announcement indicates that they are preparing for a great convention in the "Sucker" state.

—J. H. Smart, pastor of the church at Winchester, Ill., was called this week to southwest Missouri by the death of his mother, who died in her eighty-sixth year, and favored this office with a call going and coming.

—A. M. Harvuot, Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, attended our ministers' meeting on Monday morning last, on his way south to fill some appointments for Secretary B L. Smith, who was detained at home by his wife's ill-health.

—V. B. Brecht, superintendent of the Sunday-school of the First Christian Church of Philadelphia, writes that his school was apportioned $75, but that at the time of writing it had reached $130 with more to follow. This speaks eloquently for the Philadelphia school and should stimulate others.

—The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago will offer a special summer course beginning June 4, for pastors, evangelists and Christian workers generally. It is open to both men and women and no tuition fee is charged. For information apply to R. A. Torrey, 80 Institute Place, Chicago.

—We are receiving many inquiries and commendations of our new books "Reformation of the Nineteenth Century," "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea," and others. We are glad to commend these works to all who would make a fuller investigation of the history and principles of the religious movement urged by the Disciples of Christ.

—The different branches of the Presbyterian churches in this city have planned to hold evangelistic services during the summer in four large tents to be erected in the northern, southern, western and central parts of the city. This is a capital idea and might well be followed by other religious bodies. This movement is in harmony with the recommendation of the late General Assembly at Philadelphia.

—The Northeast Iowa District Convention was held at Marshalltown, May 21-23. The attendance was fair and the program contained many excellent addresses. Special interest centered in those of C. C. Smith, I. N. McCash and W. B. Craig. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, R. C Sargent, Mason City; vice-president, W. H. Scott, Marshalltown; secretary, J. T. Nichols, Vinton.

—We are glad to learn that children's day has been generally observed throughout the country. It is not too late for any tardy school to fall into line.

—C. A. Young, Charlottesville, Va., was on a flying visit to the city this week and reports Christian Century, Chicago, progressing finely in its new departure.

—In an article on the Presence of Christ, in the Christian Century, J. M. Campbell says:

What is the proper attitude for the saints of to-day? Is it that of looking with straining eyes to a shut heaven which still retains the absent Christ? Or is it that of looking up into the face of the Christ who has come, and whose loving Presence broods over every heart? When we look to heaven to find Christ we look too far away. "Say not in thy heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring Christ down" (Rom. 10:7). The Lord has descended from heaven and is inseparably united with his people. Instead of going back of his Presence, and waiting with heart breaking agony for his long delayed appearing, they are to rejoice in his Presence as a blessed certainty. Instead of looking up into the silent heaven listening for some message from the Master, catching the inspiration of his Presence, they are to look around and see the world which he surveys, and answer in his name to its calls for help. Those that look to the heavens are in danger of overlooking the things that have come from the heavens. Those that keep gazing heavenward are in danger of looking away from the things that are close at hand.

"If I kept my eager eyes
Always uplifted to the skies—
Some little thing
Beneath my feet might lying be
That needed tender care from me."

He looks too high who looks above the duty that is near and the Christ who is present.

—We have given our readers our own view of the action of the late General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia relating to the revision of their Confession of Faith. We desire, however, that our readers shall have an account of that Assembly and of its action on this and other important matters from the pen of one who was a prominent actor in that Assembly. We have, therefore, asked the Rev. S. J. Niccolls, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of this city, to write an article for us on this subject for our next week's issue, which he has agreed to do. It is our policy to keep our readers in touch with what is going on in every part of the kingdom of God, believing that they are interested in all that has to do with the growth of Christian thought and the development of spiritual life in any part of the church universal.

—Goldwin Smith is reported as saying: "The only Protestant Church of much importance to which the New World has given birth is the Universalist, a natural offspring of democratic humanity, revolting against the belief in eternal fire." This only means that according to Mr. Goldwin Smith the most important thing in religion is to protest against "eternal fire." Few men write with a greater air of omniscience than Mr. Goldwin Smith, but the narrow limitations manifest in the foregoing statement do not suggest infinity. To him the birth of a movement looking to the restoration and revitalization of Christianity, to the emancipation of the minds of men from the bondage of human creeds, to the exaltation of Christ in whom alone we have religious freedom by which to investigate all truth and test all systems, and to plead for the unity of a divided christendom through personal allegiance to Him, is not to be compared with the protest against "eternal fire." This goes to show that whatever omniscience Mr. Smith may possess does not include religion.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

The Infallible Book.

In reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of May 16, I was astonished to read an article by John Augustus Williams, "Infallibility of the Bible." I do not believe his doctrine, and ask for a short space to tell why. He creates doubt, makes half statements and leaves the whole as extremely uncertain. When he asks: "Are there no mistakes or inaccuracies of statement in the Bible either of fact or doctrine?" the inference is clear that the Bible is full of mistakes. This is wholesale. It is dangerous. It puts God's word in a false light. Possible errors in the selection of books of the Bible are also implied.

The whole article seems to me to be calculated to do injury to the book. Must we therefore claim a perfect book in every sentence, word and letter? No. But when you say there are errors you should not leave it there. Point out the little differences. Show that they are exceeding few; that where there are many little differences in the manner of expression that mostly the thought is identical. That it is absolutely word for word in every case is not required. It is not desired. Such would not strengthen belief. But to openly contradict one statement of Scripture by another is certainly a great difficulty. I have been a reader of the Scripture for a long time and I have not found the blundering fallibility that others seem to see, and then after stripping it of all its honor and letting out all of its life blood, to tell its friends that such treatment has really done it good and exalted it, is a statement that will not pass unchallenged. Throwing doubt all over God's word is certainly not very strengthening to believers. With wholesale statement there should be pointed out the specific parts and passages that are so lame and worthless. Begin now and mark the passages. Tell us where the contradiction is, how many radical errors there are, what they are, where they are. Such work will be found less easy than reckless wholesale statements.

Correspondence.

Texas Letter.

Rev. Rufus C. Burleson, D. D., LL.D., President Emeritus of Baylor University, Waco, died at his home in that city, 3 o'clock A. M., May 14, in his 78th year. Dr. Burleson was among the first men of the Baptists of the South, and one of the most valuable pioneers of the Lone Star State. His native state was Alabama, and he graduated at Nashville, Tenn., in 1840. In 1848 he came to Texas and began his splendid career as preacher and educator. When he landed at Galveston he knelt on the beach and vowed that his life should be consecrated to the cause of religion and education in this state, and no man ever kept a vow more faithfully. When tempting offers came to him from the older states, with princely salaries attached, they were promptly declined. In 1885 he was elected president of Baylor University and the school prospered under his administration. Just three years ago he was made President Emeritus and retired on full pay. Baylor was his life work, and that great institution is a fit monument to his memory.

He was an ardent Southerner, and a chaplain in the Confederate Army, but when the war was over he hoisted the old flag over his school and did all in his power to restore harmony.

He was devoid of fear. Being a pronounced prohibitionist, he offended some ruffians, who placed a pistol in his face and ordered him to drink, but he drank not. And a divorced man attempted to force him to officiate at his marriage, but failed.

G. Lyle Smith succeeds J. N. Crutcher at Paris. No better choice could have been made by the Paris church.

Allen and Huston, who have been assisting Pastor Ranshaw in a meeting, have closed it with 122 additions. This, under the peculiarly difficult conditions, is a great victory for San Antonio. These evangelists are now at Waxahachie assisting A. E. Ewell.

T. E. Shirley is a rare man. The world has but few like him. He is not rich, but only what men would call in "good circumstances." He has always been a staunch and liberal friend of the church and all her enterprises—especially her schools. When Add-Ran University was at Thorp Springs he was a friend in every emergency, and when it was moved to Waco his friendship continued. And when he saw the great need of a home there for our girls he led the movement which in a very short time gave us one of the most complete and handsome buildings of its kind in the brotherhood. During all this time he not only gave much of his valuable time, but he also gave thousands of dollars.

But the best is yet to be told. For twenty-nine years he has held a responsible position with one of our railroads. The other day he told the officials that he had to leave them. They in sorrow asked why. He told them he had another position. They asked if the pay was better. He answered no, and told them it was a labor of love, that he was going into the field as financial agent of Add-Ran University, without salary, to pay her debts and raise an endowment. And this is not all: he heads the list of givers with another thousand dollars.

In the light of all this, am I not right in calling him a "rare man"? How many do you know who would give up a liberal salary against the protest of his people, and then with a thousand dollars as a "starter," go into the field at his own expense to raise the money needed by the school?

This is good news, and it will send a thrill of joy throughout Texas, and it will be felt all through the church. It means that the debt on Add-Ran will be paid, and all other means needed will be forthcoming. It will encourage to enthusiasm the friends of the school, and it will give confidence to business men as to its management, and soon other liberal givers will come to the front. Thank the Lord for T. E. Shirley.

Judge T. J. Brown, of our Supreme Court, and an elder in the church at Austin, is being urged to enter the race for governor of Texas. This high honor, for which many strive and agonize, however, seems to have no charm for Bro. Brown. But whether it has or not, we rejoice to see such men in demand.

J. S. Myers, pastor of the Tabernacle church of Ft. Worth, is publishing "The Ft. Worth Christian." It is a handsome monthly, and cannot fail to be of much interest and value, especially to his own people.

M. M. DAVIS.

Dallas, Texas.

In St. Louis.

Children's day is usually made much of by the St. Louis churches. Some have not had their observance yet, but all have it scheduled. The Fourth church made an offering June 2nd of $47 for the cause at Jacksonville, Fla. This congregation is getting ready to adopt institutional methods. Compton Heights church raised $600 on their debt May 26th, and there have been 17 additions in the four Sundays since Mr. Jas. N. Crutcher was installed.

J. A. Bennet has been suffering from a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, on account of which his installation as pastor of Tuxedo church had to be postponed. At last accounts he was much improved. J. H. Garrison delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Christian College, Columbia, May 26th, and F. G. Tyrrell performed the same office the same day for Wm. Woods College at Fulton. The latter institution has had the best year in its history. President J. B. Jones has worked unsparingly, day and night, and kept the college full. They have done their usual amount of purely benevolent work, and proved their right to confidence and support.

W. E. Garrison is wheeling through Missouri—at least a part of it. He will soon have eclipsed Bayard Taylor as a traveler and writer. These notes are written just as the churches are preparing for their annual steamboat excursion to Montesano Park. Friday, the 7th, is the great day. There is every prospect for a pleasant time.

All eyes in Missouri are turned toward Sedalia. A special effort is being made to interest the brethren in the Bible-school convention, and it is hoped that not less than 50 will go from St. Louis alone. The Missouri Pacific will be the choice of a number of the delegates, who will find special arrangements made for their comfort. Our friends and brethren from the southeast have been invited to join us. If we expect to continue to receive favorable rates from the roads, we must exert ourselves to attend. Sedalia is an almost ideal place for such a gathering. Every worker needs the stimulus of the convention. Or if he does not, then the convention needs him. When the conductor shouts "All aboard!" at your station, see that you get aboard.

Thursday, June 6th, is the date for the initial meeting of the central board of the St. Louis churches, and Mt. Cabanne Church the place. Something is incubating. One brother has dared to remark that after trying to compel other religious bodies to practice union, we propose to engage in it ourselves! It is to be hoped we shall like the experiment, and make it permanent.

H. F. Davis met with the preachers last Monday. Melvin Putnam, of Sedalia, preached at Jacksonville, Ill, June 2nd. Since he is determined to leave Sedalia, we hope the Jacksonville church will persuade him to stay with them, as that is near St Louis. Bro. Putnam's work in Sedalia is spoken of in the highest terms, and he holds a warm place in the esteem of his brethren. G. E. Ireland, of Wabash, Ind., will visit St. Louis shortly, and preach for the church at Carondelet.

FRANK G. TYRRELL.

Which is Right?

In December I submitted to you four questions. They were on subjects of practical importance and of great interest. Your answers were not satisfactory to me.

You say that a Christian ought to obey the laws, help to enforce them, and vote intelligently and conscientiously. In this we are agreed.

You say, "Many Christians do vote for parties that are not pledged to the destruction of the saloon. They do not regard themselves in such cases as voting for the saloon, but on other issues. In a direct issue with the saloon they would probably vote against it."

Take the last presidential election. Here is a Christian. He will vote "intelligently and conscientiously." He knows that the Democratic party stands for license. He knows that the Republican party is a license party. He knows that the Prohibition party opposes license. He knows that the liquor traffic is a curse and a crime. He prays to God to destroy it. He knows that no issue compares with that issue financially or morally, and yet he casts his ballot with one of the old parties. "In a direct issue with the saloon he would probably vote against it." Yes, it is almost certain that he would. In a local option election he would stand with the Prohibitionists and assist in pouring shell and shot into the saloons. But if the Democratic or Republican party should come up and reinforce the enemy, he would desert at once and defend the saloons.

The Democratic and Republican parties unite in standing by license. The Prohibition party opposes license. Which is right?

To tell men the truth, to make them see that voting for liquor-licensing political parties is, in fact, protecting and perpetuating the license system and the legalized saloon, is not "uncharitable and unjust," but is charitable and just and Christian.

I have never impugned any man's motive. I believe that the best way with honest, intelligent men is to show them their error and reveal the truth. Turn on the light. All intelligent and honest men will be grateful.

Where's the Use?

Drugging with Coffee and Keeping Sick all the Time.

A coffee drinker is liable to a smash almost any time and without much warning. A New York man, C. W. Bedford, 1065 Lex. Ave., says that when he was in apparently perfect health, weighing about 185 pounds, with good appetite, he suddenly had a severe attack of gastritis. He lost his appetite and the doctor put him on a rigid diet and gave him remedies, but all to no purpose. He says: "Everybody I met had a cure and I tried a lot of them. I lost weight until I reached 144 pounds. I had those nasty gastric staggers.

About the middle of the summer, when on a vacation, a friend asked whether I drank coffee or not. Being told that I did, he suggested that I quit it and take Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts breakfast food. I laughed at him and told him that I was through with special articles of diet.

One day the nerves had another bad smash and I concluded to quit coffee and see if that was really the cause of the trouble.

Next morning I had Postum for breakfast and it was well made, and tasted good. I also had Grape-Nuts for breakfast, and from that day my troubles began to fade away.

I am steadily gaining in flesh, can sleep naturally, and can eat whatever I want. What is the use of a man's drinking an article like coffee that poisons him, and causes such troubles as I have had when you can have a delicious Food Coffee like Postum that builds up instead of tearing down." Health is worth more than all the coffee on earth.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Some of my first work as a minister was near Centre, then Olivet, and no young man ever had better or truer friends, those who encouraged and stood by one, than I. The older people have nearly all gone home since that time, but their children are here and are as true to Christ and his church as were their fathers, and my going to them is as a feast to one hungry. Our rally this year was fine, Superintendent Robt. Keithley seeing that all other schools in the town were invited, that thorough preparation was made and that the rally was well advertised. In his kindness and in overseeing our Bro. Corwine was with us, and all in all, it was a great day. No man goes to Centre in the Lord's work that does not receive warm welcome at the "Central," for such are the Brashear and Wicks families that they do all possible to further the kingdom of God. Have tested them many times in these years of service and always find it so. The liberality of the membership is general and to our work they are free, God bless them for it.

The railroads with their usual liberality make us the one fare rate and the best way we can return the favor is by very large delegations, and every worker ought to make it in his and her way to meet with us. Bro. Abbott has worked harder than any of you think to secure this rate and one of the ways to compensate him is by attending the convention.

Do not fail to write H. B. Shane, Sedalia, asking that you be assigned a home, and if you can not go, then write him again. It is but due these brethren that we do all possible to help them in this arduous task.

In the death of J. T. Plunkett, the Bible-school cause everywhere lost a devoted friend, for such he was indeed. To his faithful helpmeet, we send tender sympathy, for her loss and that of the little one is great.

Sheldon is one of the growing bands of Christian workers, and in our efforts with the children, we have no closer companionship than with these people. In their efforts for us this year, they have surpassed all previous years, encouraged by Sister Peck.

I love to work with H. A. Oldham and this year it was especially so, for it did seem as if all things were ready. The church will soon be freed of its cumbersome debt and then, under his leadership, advance will be rapid.

J. I. Orrison was a few years ago clerking behind the counter, now he is one of our most acceptable and successful preachers, has been with Christian Union six years and in that time their development has been remarkable. At my visit every department of the church was in good condition, while the brethren were planning to meet all apportionments, but to our work, they paid up all back dues and were urgent that I come again.

The cause does not lag at Grand Pass, for two men are at the head financially, and when there is any deficiency, they meet it; verily their reward will come. J. I. is leading the hosts here and they are following bravely.

Pike County is one of our best friends, and this year every school but one has given to our work. B. W. Bryant and his Christian wife co-operate with a noble band and are always pleased to help the cause of God. Annada is one of the mission points, but a fine work is being done for them, D. G. Hinton leading. Paynesville is near by and continues her oversight of the work.

Corinth is where J. H. Allen and his better half work for Christ, and she is a sister of T. A. Abbott, so that many see whence his zeal and good work. With much heaviness in the family work, Sister Allen never neglects the church nor the Master, as a devoted disciple of the Son of God.

Every one of you come to Sedalia, coming early and staying late.

Jacksonville's Appeal for Help.

TO THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST:—Beloved:—You know of the Jacksonville fire. About 180 blocks, a space of one and one-half miles in length and nearly a mile wide, 640 acres, in the heart of the city, burned, and in all that district not a house is left standing. Ten thousand people are without homes. Ninety-three of our own families, about one half of our membership, were left homeless. Not one of them saved household goods, few, clothing, and many only what they had on. Every church except two or three small ones in the suburbs burned. Others will rebuild. With your help we will erect a building that will be a credit to the city and the brotherhood. We regret to make this appeal, but believe that the cause of Christ demands it and that his disciples will cheerfully respond.

We heartily endorse the letter in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of May 16, page 613, and the one in the Christian Standard of May 18, page 625. We believe the brotherhood ought to be called on to build one church only, and are willing that any committee selected may settle the whole matter, and we will abide by that decision We also agree that whatever money is sent us direct shall be reported to Bro. B. L. Smith, and all credited to the general board just as if it had come through the hands of the secretary of the board All we want is to build for Christ and his church.

In less than three years our congregation has grown from 150 to 350 members, and the Bible-school from 36 to an average attendance of over 200. With a good house, and that right away, we can easily be the strongest and most influential people in the city. We have Charles Reign Scoville engaged for a meeting to begin the first of November. We ought to have our new building ready by that time. The First Church appreciates the many expressions of sympathy already extended. All gifts will be thankfully received and properly acknowledged. Feeling sure you will respond as liberally as you can we thank you in advance.

Leaving ourselves in your hands, and imploring your best gifts for the cause of Christ we are, your brethren in Christ.

J. T. BOONE.

Iowa Notes.

E. L. Coons, traveling salesman and pastor of the church at Mt. Pleasant, is doing a great work, for which we rejoice. There were 11 accessions to the church at regular services on May 12th and 19th.

Bro. Adams has taken the work at Oradel, Marion county, for half time. He reports one confession May 26th.

The work at Bedford continues to prosper under the efficient ministry of J. Will Walters. There were 10 additions to the church during the month of May, and 200 during his four years' ministry, besides the erection of a $10,000 house. He will not remain at Bedford much longer. Some Iowa church ought to secure him. We don't want him to leave our state.

Vernon Herrington has closed his work at Minburn to accept the work at Colfax.

D. S. Domer, of Pleasant Plains, Ill., has taken the work at Brandon.

Bro. J. T. Shreve is expected to take charge of the work at Oelwine soon.

F. M. Kirkham will preach at Corydon again to-morrow, June 2nd. F. B Sapp, late of San Jose, Cal., will preach at Corydon, June 9th.

J. K. Ballou is preaching at Lone Tree.

Jasper N. Smith is preaching for the churches at Pekin and Hedrick

J. H. Painter, who now lives at Eddyville, is available for preaching at least a part of the time. Bro. Painter should be kept busy. We have no clearer thinker or purer man in Iowa than Bro. Painter. It is true that he is a little hard of hearing and a little older than he was a few years ago, but his mind was never clearer, his judgment better or his heart warmer than it is to-day. If you need a pastor and are in reach of Eddyville, call on Bro. Painter for regular work or for supply.

The church at Audubon will be dedicated to-morrow, June 2nd, and at Moravia, June 9th.

The central district convention was held at Pleasantville last week from Monday night to Wednesday afternoon. The Pleasantville brethren entertained us royally. Meals were served in the old church building that stood just across the street from the new church where the sessions were held. Bro. F. D. Farrell, the wide-awake pastor, had everything in readiness. The attendance was not large, but all pronounced the convention a success. The officers for the next year are J. E. Denton, president; C. E. Wells, vice-president and G. L. Brokaw, secretary.

Dear Brethren: Many of the churches in Iowa have done nothing for state missions. Do not neglect this important duty. Will you not at once, or as soon as opportunity affords, present this work to your congregation? Some of our congregations have done well and many of our preachers are becoming enthusiastic for the work, but we need the help of all. Many struggling congregations are in need of assistance and open doors in new fields are begging us to enter. Will you not respond with a generous offering for the work?

Muscle

Does not make the man. "The blood is the life," the vital force of the body. So it not infrequently happens that the man who looks to be a picture of physical strength falls a sudden victim to disease. A proper care for the blood would prevent many a serious sickness.

The cleansing of the blood is perfectly accomplished by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It drives out the impurities and poisonous substances which corrupt the blood and breed disease. It increases the activity of the blood-making glands, and so increases the supply of pure blood. It builds up the entire body with good sound flesh.

There is no alcohol in "Golden Medical Discovery" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

The dealer who offers a substitute for the "Discovery" does so to gain the little more profit paid by inferior medicines. There is nothing "just as good" for the blood as "Golden Medical Discovery" therefore accept no substitute.

"I took five bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' for my blood," writes Mr. William D. Shamblin, of Remy, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory. "I had 'ring worms' on me and I would burn them off and they would come right back, and they were on me when I commenced using 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and they went away and I haven't been bothered any more."

Missouri Mission Notes.

Lord's day, May 26, was spent in Gorin, dedicating their new house of worship. A little over one year ago the state board employed Bro. A. J. Williams to go to Gorin and preach once per month, with the purpose of organizing a congregation and building a house of worship. During all this while Bro. Williams, with great energy, splendid consecration and untiring industry, has been laboring toward the consummation of his purpose, and last Sunday he was made supremely happy in seeing that for which he has labored and prayed so long realized. Too much praise cannot be given him for this great work that he has done. It has been accomplished in the face of the largest difficulties, which seemed at times to threaten its success, but he never gave up for a single moment, but with sublime confidence and trust labored on. Dedication day was as beautiful as a day could be and the people came twice as many as the church would hold, and we had morning and afternoon services. There was $700 to raise, and by dint of sacrificing on the part of both pastor and congregation the whole amount was provided for and the church was dedicated unto the Lord. Bro. Granville Snell and his excellent wife came from Memphis, bringing a large number of people with them, and he was full of helpfulness in all the services. Prof. Stagner led the song services, and of course it was excellently done. We missed the presence of Bro. J. M. Jayne, of Memphis, who was away from home engaged in a murder case at Monticello, Lewis county. We called him up by 'phone, however, in the morning, and his pledge of $50 made in that way gave inspiration and helped to raise the needed amount amazingly. The whole service from beginning to end was a delight. A large delegation came down from Wyaconda and your secretary went there and preached at night. This is one of the places in northeast Missouri to which my feet turn with a great deal of eagerness and where I always find that which makes my heart glad. Bro. Reuben Rogers and Bro. John P. Gustin made me very much at home.

One of the hardest tasks that I have had for some time was to secure the usual

RAILROAD RATE TO THE STATE BIBLE-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Missouri Pacific, the M. K. & T., the Frisco, the Wabash and the Burlington have authorized one fare for the round trip, and we confidently expect the Memphis, the C. & A., and the Santa Fe to also agree to making the rate. Tickets will be on sale June 10, 11, 12, good to return including June 14. This is a splendid concession on the part of the railroads, and the Missouri Pacific as the initial line led the way as usual, for without their leadership in this matter the rate could not have been obtained. It was absolutely impossible to get the rate any sooner.

Every indication points to a good convention at Sedalia. Such reports will be made by the men in the field and by the efficient secretary, Bro. H. F. Davis, as will make the heart glad as we think of this blessed work of saving the children in Missouri for Jesus. Do not forget to write to Bro. H. B. Shane, of Sedalia, and tell him you are coming and how many are coming with you. If you want entertainment you should at least give him this notice, as I am sure you will.

Bro. Lampton is now at Hamilton. He closed his meeting at Linn Knoll with seven additions, and we have letters from Bro. Rumsey, the pastor, and Bro. Barton, one of the elders, telling of the good work that Bro. Lampton has done for them, but this is true in every place to which he goes. He is doing a splendid work for our cause.

Bro. Gaylor is now at Carl Junction. A lot has been bought and a congregation organized and building will begin at once. The success of Bro. Gaylor is almost phenomenal. Such men need and deserve the largest support on the part of the brethren.

The money for state missions in the last week has come in very slowly, and you can put as much emphasis as you please upon the word "very" and you cannot make it too strong. We must have a revival of interest, and we are sure that we will. The messages to us indicate that such will be the case, but let it not be too late.

Southeast Kansas Notes.

The third district convention has just been held this week in Parsons and was well attended. W. S. Lowe, of Topeka, Mrs. Rogers, state organizer of the C. W. B. M., Mrs. Louise Kelly, of Emporia, and Bro. Chenault, of Ft. Scott, president of the state board, were among those out of the district in attendance at the convention.

Bro. Willis F. Jordan, a preacher of some ability who came to us from the Methodists about six years ago and who has held pastorates since at Pittsburg and Caney, Kan., and recently at Newport, Ark., came to Oswego a few weeks ago and held a meeting for our people, after which he and his wife joined the Methodist church in the same place.

Bro. J. R. Charlton, our lawyer preacher and evangelist, of Caney, started for Colorado Monday, where he is to hold a meeting.

Bro. C. E. Pile, of Parsons, was elected president and Bro. John Longston, of Independence, secretary of the third district for the coming year.

The writer is to assist Bro. C. F. Sanderson, pastor at Chariton, Iowa, in a series of meetings beginning June 1.

Bro. Pile delivered the memorial address at Parsons last Sunday, and he acquitted himself most magnificently. W. E. HARLOW.

The Female Orphan School.

The Female Orphan School of the Christian Church of Missouri, located at Camden Point, closed a very creditable year's work with its usual commencement exercises last week.

This school has now been in operation full thirty years. In that time it has graduated 172 daughters of the brotherhood, among whom each year there have been some who could not have stood with their sisters on commencement day had it not been for the provision whereby they were made beneficiaries in whole or in part. These graduates and many young ladies who, for some cause or other, dropped out before commencement, are now gracing some of the happiest homes in all the world. Some are teaching in various portions of the country. Bro. M. S. Hardesty, treasurer of the board of trustees, in looking over the entire list of graduates, finds that he now personally knows of the whereabouts of 81 of the number.

The exercises on the closing day, Thursday, were attended by hundreds of people. They came from miles around. "Sweet girl graduates," of whom there were nine, were never in happier vein. Miss Carrie Davis, of Crockett, Tex., as valedictorian, had for the subject of her essay "Soul forces manifest in life." The salutatorian, Miss Ella Shafer, of Edgerton, Mo., had chosen the subject, "The stage and the actor." President A. O. Riall in presenting the diplomas protracted his remarks into a farewell address. After an acceptable service to this school extending through five years, he retires, to the regret of the brethren, and is to be succeeded by Bro. E. L. Barham, who comes from Waco, Tex., and is expected to reach Camden Point after June 10 to enter upon his duties.

Bro. J. H. Hardin, of Liberty, delivered the commencement address. He spoke upon the subject of the "Womanly woman and the other kind." His address was well received. Bro. R. H. Fife, of Weston, and Bro. T. H. Capp, of Plattsburg, were among the visiting brethren present.

As a fit climax to the exercises a basket dinner was spread on the campus by the sisters. The multitude chatted and ate and declared it the best of all the commencement days in the history of the school. Usually many hold to the adage that "the old days are best." The scenes and incidents above referred to yesterday, for once at least, refuted the adage in the minds of all who were permitted the joys of this commencement.

Expressive of their regret at the withdrawal of President Riall, the following complimentary resolution was passed by the Board of Incorporators:

Resolved, That the board of trustees of F. O. S., of the Christian Church of Missouri, bear the following testimony concerning the character and ability of our outgoing president, A. O. Riall. He has been pleasantly and profitably associated with us during the last five years and leaves against the expressed unanimous wish of the board. Both as a man and a citizen he is invaluable to any community: as a Christian, a lever of the church, intensely interested in all its affairs; a leader in ability and practice. But it is in position of president and in the character of teacher we desire to speak especially. He brings to his work a well trained and cultured head and heart pregnant with good sense. During his administration of our affairs the school has been well managed and our curriculum greatly elevated. Under his able leadership the school has come to a standing and reputation never before attained; as a teacher he is scholarly and earnest, and holds the interest of his students and invariably possesses their esteem and affection. We desire to commend him as a teacher and a Christian gentleman, and any community is fortunate to secure him.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

Cincinnati Letter.

The School for Pastoral Helpers has completed its initiation. A year of successful work, the ability of the class just graduated, the undeniable demonstration of works as shown in the experience of the churches already employing these young ladies, justify the answer Mr. Harvout and his associates have been trying to make to the need they discerned in the work of the city church. This year the teaching was largely a gratuity on behalf of the instructors, but the success of the year's work has brought some gratifying answers to the appeal for funds and the future is assured. The experiment is being watched by sociological and city church students over the country and will doubtless result in enlisting another army of profitable workers.

The winter's work in the churches is now a matter of history. It is one of industry and only ordinary results in way of conversions, but very successful in other ways. The churches are in the best organic condition of years and marked by a fellowship that prophesies great success for the Scoville campaign next winter.

Vernon Stauffer is the new pastor at Richmond St., yet he is not at all new, for four years of successful work in the hardest field in the city made him one of the first among us. Your scribe is just leaving the Norwood church for some months' travel and study in Europe. This pastorate is coterminous with the history of the church which has a most propitious future. It is already noted for its missionary zeal. The congregation is happy in being able to secure Bro. P. Y. Pendleton for the pulpit during the summer. He is a member of the congregation and will minister to them until autumn, when a pastor will be called.

Several of the pastors will spend their vacations in the University of Chicago and return with an enlarged horizon and a renewed energy for the year to come.

ALVA W. TAYLOR.

San Antonio, Tex.

The object of my letter to the several Christian churches is to extend my evangelical work among the Mexican race, and to ask of them a noble help in my strenuous efforts to raise it to a higher religious life.

With the means I have on hand it is the hardest work a minister can undertake to increase the number of his followers and assist them in their new faith. The Board of Home Missions gives me a salary of twenty-five dollars per month, of which I have to pay ten dollars for the rent of the house in which it is difficult to seat the fifty members of my congregation. Many of them remain out of doors during the services. With the fifteen dollars remaining I have to assist my family of fourteen members. It is utterly impossible to answer the several calls I have to establish missions in different parts of the state.

With a little help from the many Christian churches of Texas I hope to build a church that would place me on a level with the other Mexican churches of San Antonio, and would command the respect of my new converts. It would also be possible for me to answer the calls and open new missions in the state with benefit for my race and glory for the church. You know better than I do that a church with a capacity for my actual congregation and those to be added is better than a room which has not the character of a permanent and established church.

With a little help from each church of our communion, as I said before, I hope to establish a church of our faith that in a short time will be able to keep me independent of your sacrifice. In the interest of our cause and for the love and glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, I beg of you, my dear brethren, to take into consideration this petition of your humble brother and see with what amount of money you can assist me for this noble purpose without sacrifice to your congregations.

Dedication at Parkersburg, West Virginia.

The church at Parkersburg, W. Virginia, has just completed a new and unique house of worship. One of its peculiarities is that it has a roof-garden, which will make a most delightful place for worship during the hot weather of the summer season. Lord's day, May 26, was the time set for its dedication. There was an indebtedness of $5,200 to provide for. The day was a very unfavorable one, as a drenching rain was falling all day and far into the night. However the giving was generous even to a fault, if generous giving is ever a fault. There was great rejoicing.

Central Christian College.

The commencement exercises of Central Christian College begin May 31, with a baccalaureate program of rare merit. Bro. R. A. Gilcrest, of Centerville, Ia., preaches the sermon, college chapel.

Monday, June 3, the elocutionary department, Miss Hardin, principal, will give a miscellaneous entertainment of readings, music, pantomime and statuary.

Tuesday, the John S. Allen Literary Society gives its annual entertainment. This is made of burlesque operettas, music, debates and general literary exercises.

Wednesday, the annual musicale of the music department, E. H. Williams, director.

Thursday, June 6, commencement, address, orations, music. The climax is reached in this entertainment. There are twenty-five in the graduating class; the largest class in the history of the college.

We had arranged to inaugurate our commencement exercises with an address by the Hon. William Jennings Bryan. This was to be followed by another by the Hon. Jonathan P. Dolliver, U. S. Senator from Iowa. But owing to the general smallpox scare, resulting in attempts to quarantine neighboring towns, it was thought best by our board to have these two distinguished gentlemen to come to us later, and we have arranged accordingly. Mr. Bryan has promised to come in September. This will give us a pronounced opening for next year.

The ministerial department of the college has proved very successful. The work in the English Bible, New Testament Greek, Hebrew and Sacred History has been very gratifying. Our students are in demand and they are successfully preaching the gospel. All have engaged to preach full time, more than paying all their college expenses. The young men and young women in the different college courses have proved studious and exemplary. There seems to be a star of promise and encouragement rising in the sky of Central Christian College.

Prevention of Disease.

Keep the Stomach Right.

It is surprising what a safeguard a healthy stomach is against disease. And again it is not so surprising when it is remembered that the only way we get pure blood, strong nerves and firm flesh, is from wholesome food, well digested. It is the half digested food that causes the mischief. When the stomach is weak, slow, inactive, the food lies in the stomach for hours, fermenting, forming gases which poison the blood and the whole system, causing headache, pains in the back, shoulder blades and chest, loss of appetite, palpitation, biliousness.

The safest cure for indigestion is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, composed of vegetable essences, fruit salts, pure pepsin and Golden Seal. Dissolve one or two of these tablets in the mouth after each meal. They are pleasant tasting and mingling with the food so assist the weak stomach that the food is perfectly digested before it has time to ferment.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion and increase flesh because they digest flesh forming foods like meat, eggs, etc.

Sold by druggists at 50 cents per package. Absolutely safe and harmless.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

BEDFORD, IND., June 3.—Our meeting closed; 26 days, 130 additions.—JAMES SMALL.

COLORADO.

Salida.—Rev. F. F. Walters, late of Anita, Ia., has taken up the work at this place, having commenced the first Sunday in May. The church had been without a regular pastor for seven months, and work in all departments had grown very lax Most of the membership had grown discouraged, and some had even ceased to lend their support. Bro. Walters was called in February, but could not begin his work until May. The very thought of again having a pastor inspired new hope in the membership. The church building was repaired and everything put in readiness for the coming of the new pastor. The audiences have been very good at all services. We are especially proud of our mid-week prayer-meeting, having an average attendance of 30. Bro. Walters is an energetic, earnest and sincere worker. He has much ability in music and personally drills his chorus. Add to this the labor of a consecrated wife, and we bespeak for them a very successful pastorate.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, May 30.—Twenty-five have been added to the roll of the First Church since I began my labors here, March 31. The outlook is very bright. I am delighted with this city and its people.—S. B. MOORE.

ILLINOIS

Bloomington, May 27.—Two more additions yesterday. Good interest and good audience.—JOHN D. AUSTIN, Christian Mission.

Gibson, June 1.—One addition to the church at Center Ridge last Lord's day by confession. The church will observe Children's Day on to-morrow.—P. F. YORK.

Jacksonville, May 27.—Our auditorium and lecture room were both crowded at both services yesterday, our pastor, George Z. Snively, preaching. There were three additions yesterday and one at prayer-meeting. Two of them were by confession, one restored, one by letter. Bro. Snively delivers the Decoration day address at Prentice, Ill.—J. W. BROCKMAN.

INDIANA.

Elwood, May 29.—One hundred and forty-eight added since Jan. 1, 1901. Eighty-six accessions during Bro. T. A. Hedges' revival last February. There have been constant additions, almost at every service, for the last 8 months. Sunday-school growing in numbers and interest. We have three splendid Christian Endeavor societies, the best International Christian Endeavor in the state. Five young men from the church are preparing for the ministry—their names are worthy to be recorded—Raymond Lines, Frank Werking, Ernest Dawson, I. I. Shaw and Chas. Stafford. They were in college this last year and are thoroughly consecrated to this blessed service. They are made of the right spirit and say, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Men only ought to preach when they cannot help it. Two other young young men here are prayerfully thinking of consecrating their lives to this glorious and self-denying calling. May all our preachers be vigilant to call out choice-spirited and devoted young men for the ministry. Brethren, it is a noble thing to give worthy young men to the cause of Christ and missions. We are also training some good girls for useful service in the Master's vineyard. All departments of church work are moving along nicely. Church now has over 600 members, will soon have been here five years. The new church erected two years ago has proven a great blessing to the work. Bro. Geo. F. Hall, of Chicago, recently gave us some splendid lectures and sermons. Many of our churches ought to hear him. He is a fearless orator in defense of the right. We are busy now with Children's Day.—L. C. HOWE.

Vincennes, June 1.—We had 15 additions here last Sunday, 12 were by baptism and three by statement. We were all made glad this week by a princely donation made by C. B. Kessinger, in the form of a building site for our new church. The lot was purchased by Bro. Kessinger for $2,000 cash money. Bro. Kessinger is our Sunday-school superintendent. We rejoice and push forward.—WM. OESCHGER.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Chickasha, May 27.—We had three additions yesterday, making 17 for the month of May. We had 18 additions in April, making 35 additions at our regular services during the two months. This week we will order circular pews for the Chickasha Church which will cost $500. We finished a well for the church last week that cost over $30. Pulpit chairs, new paper for the walls, etc., is now the talk of the congregation. We have already sent $30 to Bro. Smith as an offering for home missions, this being the first offering ever sent from the Indian Territory for that work. Our church hopes to send him $100 during the year. We are busy and full of hope.—JOHN A. STEVENS.

IOWA.

Ames, June 1.—Ames, like other small towns, has been having in her opera house a low grade of entertainments. Our church here has just raised a higher standard and greatly pleased the people by bringing to our city Dean Frederic Howard, of Drake Conservatory, and his great chorus of sixty from the Central Church in Des Moines. Mr. Harvard has few equals as a director of large chorus choirs and as a trainer of the human voice. Drake University may well be proud of the dean of her conservatory.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE.

Waterloo, May 27.—One more baptism last Sunday. Others have recently made the good confession and may be immersed next Sunday.—JOE S. RILEY.

KANSAS.

Kingman, May 27.—Closed here on May 26, with 37 additions. Will remain in the city for a few weeks until we can secure a pastor. V. E. Ridenour was with us for two weeks. Address me at Topeka, Kan.—D. D. BOYLE.

KENTUCKY.

Erlanger, June 3.—Seventy dollars contributed for general missions at Florence (Ky.) Christian Church yesterday. Evangelist J. K. Hester is with us in a meeting that promises great things.—EDGAR D. JONES.

MISSOURI.

Asherville, May 31.—Fair interest in meeting; three additions. Many more reading to "see if such things be so."—FRED R. DAVIES.

Carl Junction, May 31.—Our meeting at Carl is growing in interest. We bought a building lot yesterday. Have had 35 accessions, six by confession. Everything promising. Bible-school organized.—JOSEPH GAYLOR.

Dixon, May 28.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at this place, resulting in an organization with 47 members, and $455 raised to build a house, and the work has already begun.—R B. HAVENER.

Fredericktown, June 3.—We are holding a protracted effort in the church here under the leadership of R. L. McHatton, of Kansas City, Mo. Thirty-three additions in eight days; 29 of which were by primary confession. There are still two nights to make a week's work for Bro. McHatton, in which time he has had 29 additions. We look for a goodly number yet.—GEO McGEE

Hale, May 31.—Our county evangelist, R. H. Love, concluded the meeting at Hale Thursday night of two weeks and five days duration, with 29 additions, doubling the membership, setting the church in order and greatly strengthening the cause in the northeastern part of the county. Our county quarterly meeting will be held with the Mt. Carmel Church the last of June.—E. H. KELLAR, Carrollton, Mo.

Joplin, May 27.—During May we have received 12 additions as follows: By letter, six; by statement, four; by confession, two. Our May offering was over $50.—W. F. TURNER.

Nevada, May 27.—One addition at Clayton yesterday. Will be in a position to do some protracted meeting work after July. North Missouri preferred.—S. MAGEE.

Queen City, May 29.—Had three additions May 19 at Darby Church, northeast of Lancaster, Mo., and one addition last Lord's day at Savannah, Ia. These two churches have been doing very little for some time. We have been preaching about three months for Darby and have had six confessions, with good prospects of more soon. They need a church paper and must have it.—J. L. HOLLOWELL.

St. Louis, May. 30.—I have just closed a ten days' meeting with the church at Farber, Mo., Bro. Thomas pastor, with 10 additions. Meeting closed with congratulatory exercises, participated in by all present.—FERD F. SCHULTZ.

Webb City, May 30.—We are in a meeting here since Monday evening. The attendance and interest are excellent, although this is commencement week for the public schools. Prof. C. E. Millard is conducting the music and giving his wonderful illustrated solos. He is truly a master in art and music. The writer has listened to most of America's gospel singers, but Brother Millard excels them all. His work is free from all clap-trap and is sure to be permanent, as it attracts the very best people. His prices may seem high, but they are the most economical, for with such a helper twice as much can be accomplished in the same time as by any other method I have ever known. We expect a great meeting.—E. M. BARNEY.

NEW YORK.

Tonawanda, May 28.—A memorial service was held at our church Sunday morning, attended by a G. A. R. Post and the Women's Relief Corps. There was not a vacant seat in the house. Four additions since last report. Our yearly report of the work of the church shows a good increase in membership, financial gain, church attendance, and Sunday-school roll.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

New York.—The work at West Fifty-sixth Street Church prospers. We will close the present church year without the creation of a deficit in finances, which is the first time this has been done in many years. There have been ten additions during May. Baptized three people last night.—B. Q DENHAM.

NEBRASKA.

Ansley, May 31.—All departments of church work doing nicely. I delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the high school class; also the decoration address to the largest audience of recent years in this place. Please announce the funeral services of Augustus A. Stuckey on May 29.—JESSE R. TEAGARDEN.

Omaha.—There have been 12 accessions to this church already in May. Others are coming next Sunday. Children's day will be observed.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

OHIO.

Rock Creek, May 29.—R. M. Marshall, of Rock Creek, O., made the memorial address to the G. A. R. at East Trumbull, Ohio.—R. M. M.

Milton Center, May 28.—I began work with the church at Milton Center and Mt. Olive Churches May 1; since that time three have been added to the Mt. Olive Church. The work starts off well.—G. H. CARL.

TENNESSEE.

Kimberlin Heights.—Curtis Countryman, of the School of the Evangelists, is doing gospel work in the Smoky Mountains of Tennessee. The people he has to deal with, like the Waldenses of the Alps, are hospitable and pure in heart, and also very susceptible to the truth.

TEXAS.

Greenville, May 27.—Our meeting here with C. M. Schoonover has been going on for four weeks. He preached two weeks and called me to his assistance. We now have 70 additions and an unabated interest. Twenty came forward last night, 19 confessions; 27 for yesterday's work.—R. R. HAMLIN.

Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

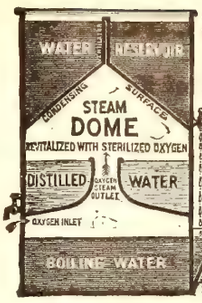
Evangelist Ogden is in a meeting near Ord. Will begin at Geneva June 9th. W. F. King is the pastor at Diller. The Valparaiso work prospers under the care of W. L. Harris. Wickham and Givens report 21 additions at Gering in the meeting there, 11 of them heads of families. They are now at Chadron.

One added at York recently. The plans for the improvements on the house of worship have been placed in the hands of contractors.

H. A. Lemon spent Lord's day with the church at Lanham recently. One confession. The quarantine has been raised at Hebron and the church work resumed.

District convention of No. 8 comes at Beaver City, June 11-13. They always have a good program out there, and it is essential that the churches in the district be represented. Write to A. C. Corbin, Beaver City, that you are coming.

The convention of No. 5 was rather better than usual. The program showed thought both in its make up and in the manner of execution. Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg, of Kansas, was present, giving two addresses. The address of welcome by the pastor of the Fairbury Methodist Church was a happy blending of good will and wit. The convention was entertained in the usual hearty manner of that district, though the Fairbury congregation was without a pastor. The district officers are: D. A. Wickizer, Beatrice, president; E. E. Headley, Route No. 2, Fairbury, corresponding secretary. Most of the preachers of the district were present, and a goodly delegation from the churches also.



H. C. Holmes, of Pontiac, Ill., was announced to preach for the Fairbury church on the 26th of May.

I have an account of the unsavory reputation of one W. B. Cash, lately of Pierson, Iowa. It was intimated that he was headed west in the company of another man's wife. I take this means among others of warning our churches against him. If he turns up in your community write me for the facts as printed in his home paper.

In view of the above, I wish to take this time to say a word about tramp preachers in general. Everything that is good is imitated and counterfeited. The better it is the more likely of the counterfeit and the more dangerous. This is true of the ministry. As soon as it becomes known that a congregation is without a preacher, it becomes at once a prey to the Wandering Willie of the cloth. He appears from nowhere in particular, and has friends in all the large churches. He sometimes carries credentials from some of them. He finds some brother or sister and announces his willingness to preach on the coming Lord's day, and desires simply the good of the church. He must needs preach and is indifferent to the finances. Forthwith an announcement is made without much consultation, and often without the knowledge of the officers of the church, who may have doubts, but dislike to turn down the appointment of well meaning members. The results are often painful. I feel that it is time for the church officers to definitely understand themselves, and to keep a good safe grip on the church door key. Let it be understood that no one is to be allowed to preach unless well known, until after the elders have had a chance to look into the claims of the would-be preacher. No man who can not give a good account of himself has any right to feel offended if he is not at once put into the most important post in any town, the pulpit of the Church of Christ. It may take a shrewd rascal no more than an hour to upset the confidence of the community in the church.

Popular Hymns No. 2

THE ruling purpose of the author has been to give to the public a worthy successor of Popular Hymns. He has not sought to duplicate it, but to make a book as well adapted to the new methods of Church, Sunday-school and C. E. work as the first was to the conditions twenty years ago when Popular Hymns was launched upon its long and useful career. Popular Hymns No. 2 is better than its predecessor, not because it contains better music, but because the music is better adapted to the present wants of all the working forces of the army of the Lord.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in Song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E's care to sing. The Solos, Duets, and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Like its predecessor,

The Temple of Fame.

"How far away is the Temple of Fame?"
Said a youth at the dawn of day;
And he toiled and dreamed of a deathless name,
But the hours went by and the evening came,
That left him feeble and old and lame,
To plod on his cheerless way.

The youth who had failed could never guess
The reason his quest was vain,
But he sought no other to help or bless;
He followed the glittering prize, success,
Up the narrow pathway of selfishness,
And this has been his bane.

"How far away is the Temple of Good?"
Said a youth at the dawn of day;
And he strove, in the spirit of brotherhood,
To help and succor, as best he could,
The poor and unfortunate multitude
On their hard and dreary way.

He likewise strove with adversity
To climb to the heights above;
But his dream was ever of men made free,
Of better days in the time to be,
And self was buried in sympathy—
He followed the path of love.

He was careless alike of praise or blame;
But after his work was done
An angel of glory from heaven came
And wrote on high his immortal name,
Proclaiming this truth, that the Temple of Fame
And Temple of Good are one.

For this is the lesson that history
Has taught since the world began,
That those whose memories never die,
That shine like stars in our human sky
And brighter grow as the years roll by,
Are men who have lived for man.

A Wonderful New Geyser.

Tourists to the Yellowstone National Park this season, says the New York Times, will find a new attraction in the shape of a wonderful new geyser which, if the accounts received in this city are to be credited, will rival in magnificence any of the older geyser attractions.

James King, who has been living in the park during the past winter, where he has been employed looking after the property of some of the transportation companies near the Fountain Geyser, about forty miles south of the mammoth hot springs, states that in the early morning of Feb. 18 he was awakened by a terrific explosion similar in noise to that of the explosion of a large quantity of powder. The ground rocked and quivered for some time violently, dishes rattled on the shelves, pictures hanging on the walls were thrown down and the clock was stopped.

Mr. King's first idea was that it was a severe earthquake shock, accompanied, perhaps, by the eruption of a volcano. On going out to try to ascertain the cause, Mr. King discovered that the Fountain Geyser had given birth to a new geyser.

It is located about two hundred feet immediately south of the famous Fountain Geyser, and at the moment Mr. King discovered it, it sent up a solid column of hot water fully five hundred feet into the air, the water gushing forth with a loud roar from a hole five feet in diameter. Mr. King says the thermometer registered about ten degrees below zero, and for one hour and thirty minutes the monster column of hot water shot upward. It then subsided, and has since been playing at regular intervals of about two hours.

Word has also reached this city that Excelsior Geyser, the largest geyser in the park, which has not been in a state of eruption for several years past, began to play on Washington's birthday, and continued in full play for over five hours. The volume of water sent out, which flows into the Fire Hole River, so swelled that stream that it overflowed its banks. The water of the river became so hot from the geyser water that the fish in the stream for a distance of about two miles below the Excelsior were killed.

As Quick as a Telephone.

One night a well-known citizen, who had been walking for some time in the downward path, came out of his home and started down town for a night of carousal with some old companions he had promised to meet. His young wife had besought him with imploring eyes to spend the evening with her, and had reminded him of the past when evenings passed in her company were all too short. His little daughter had clung about his knees and coaxed in her pretty, wilful way for papa to tell her some bedtime stories, but habit was stronger than love for wife and child, and he eluded their tender questioning and went his way.

But when he was blocks distant from his home he found that in changing his coat he had forgotten to remove his wallet, and he could not go out on a drinking bout without money, even though he knew that his family needed it, and his wife was economizing every day more and more in order to make up his deficits; and he hurried back and crept softly past the windows of the little home in order that he might steal in and obtain it without running the guantlet of questions and caresses.

But something stayed his feet: there was a fire in the grate within—for the night was chill—and it lit up the little parlor and brought out in startling effects the pictures on the walls. But these were nothing to the pictures on the hearth. There, in the soft gloom of the fire-light knelt his little child at her mother's feet, her small hands clasped in prayer, her fair head bowed, and as her rosy lips whispered each word with childish distinctness, the father listened, spellbound:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take"

Sweet petition! The man himself, who stood there with bearded lips shut tightly together, had said that prayer once at his mother's knee. Where was that mother now? The sunset gates had long ago unbarred to let her pass through. But the child had not finished; he heard her say:

"God bless mamma, papa, and my own self. God—bless papa—and please—send him—home—sober, Amen."

Mother and child sprang to their feet in alarm when the door opened so suddenly, but they were not afraid when they saw who it was returned so soon; and that night, when little Mamie was being tucked up in bed, after such a romp with papa, she said in the sleepiest and most contented of voices:

"Mamma, God answers almost as quickly as the telephone, doesn't he?"

How the Chinese Do Things.

Everything relating to the Orient is of interest. The Chinese do everything backward. They exactly reverse the usual order of civilization.

Note, first, that the Chinese compass points to the south instead of the north.

The men wear skirts, the women trousers.

The spoken language of China is not written and the written language is not spoken.

Books are read backward and what are called foot notes are inserted at the top of the page.

The Chinese shake their own hands instead of the hands of those they greet.

The Chinese launch their vessels sideways and mount their horses from the off side.

The Chinese begin their dinner with dessert, and end with soup and fish.

The Breakfast Test.

The breakfast test is one of the most rigorous that can be applied either to looks, temper or manners. It is easy to be glum and snappy and frowsy at the breakfast table when only the family is present. A writer in the New York Ledger says:

"Any woman who looks pretty at breakfast-time is really so. It is one thing to be charming at a party, in pale blue silk and tulle, with 'touching up' of all sorts, and under the gas-lights, but quite another thing to be pretty in a dark calico, with the morning sun full in the room, and all the homely accessories of daily life by way of background, and the hair in crimps. There are plenty of girls who are pretty on the seashore, in big shade hats; on horseback, in a 'habit'; in walking costume, with the softening of waving frizettes and black net mask veils; but the family breakfast-table is the test. Yes, it is the test, not only for beauty, but for better things. If the smiles are bright and the speech soft, the movements gentle, and the temper sweet, then you may rely upon the disposition under almost any circumstances. I should advise any young man who had fallen in love, and did not quite know whether he had done wisely, to get 'her' father to ask him to breakfast, and so decide the matter. You see, he will have to take breakfast with 'her' every morning for the rest of their lives, if they do marry, and it is just as well to be on the safe side. By the way, the place to see 'him,' if you really want to know him, is on house-cleaning day, at home, when his mother has made up her mind that smoked beef and bread and butter, with a cup of tea, will do for dinner, and the morning's paper is being used to polish the windows with. If he comes out strong in good nature then, have him."

The Amiable Plutocrat: "But riches do not bring happiness."

The Unamiable Pauper: "But I ain't looking fer happiness. All I want is comfort."

Training the Puppy.

Forest and Stream has given some wise talk to boys in regard to bringing up dogs from puppyhood, and turning them into good citizens of the canine world. The writer says:

There are two or three things which you must try to remember in connection with the little animal for which you have taken the responsibility.

You must remember, in the first place, that it is like any other young creature, full of spirits, thinking only about itself, and determined to do those things which seem pleasant to it. Your business is to undertake its education. You must begin by making it fond of you; and that means that you must treat it kindly, play with it more or less, feed it yourself, and, in short, cause it to look to you for all the things that make its life pleasant.

Very patiently, very firmly you must instruct it, little by little in good manners. You must teach it that some things may be done, and that other things are not permitted.

You must remember that this little animal has no knowledge of the English language, and that your words, in a new command, are meaningless sounds. One of your first duties is, therefore, to teach it what these sounds are intended to convey, and the lesson is effectual only by enforcing obedience to the command as soon as it is uttered. Thus if you are teaching the pup to charge, whieh means to lie down, whenever you use the word place your hands on him and gently force him to the ground, his legs all under him and his head flat between his paws; but do not be in haste about it. You may easily confuse and bewilder a puppy, and it is much better to let his education proceed slowly than to make him suffer from unreasonable demands.

One reason why boys, and men also, lose patience with the dogs they are training is that they forget how hard it is for the dog to understand what they mean. Sometimes it does happen that a dog is headstrong and obstinate, but this is very rarely true of a puppy. If he fails to "mind," the failure is good evidence that he is not yet familiar with the English language.

A gentleman took his little daughter to a toy shop to buy her a doll. "Now, what sort of a doll would you like, my dear?" said he, as a large assortment was placed on the counter by the shopman. After some hesitation the little miss replied: "I think I'll have twins, please."

The teacher of a Sunday-school class approached one little fellow who was present for the first time, and inquired his name, for the purpose of placing it on the roll.

"Well," said the youngster, "they call me Jimmie for short; but my maiden name is James."

Burt—What are you doing nowadays, old man?

Rust—Writing a biography.

Burt—A biography? Of whom?

Rust—Oh, I haven't got so far as that. I am now engaged in collecting anecdotes and witticisms. When I have got enough of them it will be time enough to make up my mind upon whom to bestow them.

"Excelsior."

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, the daughter of Julia Ward Howe and the playmate of the Longfellow children in childhood, tells many stories of the poet. Among others she relates the contents of a letter which Mr. Longfellow wrote to her father, Dr. Samuel G. Howe, telling how "Excelsior" came to be written.

It was a cold winter night, and the poet had gone to bed, when the idea of the poem popped into his mind. He tried to put it aside, but the idea kept haunting him until he arose and jotted down the verses as they came quickly to him.

"The result," he added, "is that I have a severe cold and an attack of rheumatism, but my best friends find less in the poem to criticize than usual."

In the early days before Longfellow's name and fame were national he went into a bank to get a check cashed. The teller looked at the name and said: " 'Henry Longfellow?' I never heard of any such person." Then turning it over, and seeing the indorsement by Charles Sumner on the back, he paid it with no further protest.

It is likely that among the collectors of this age the indorsement by Longfellow and Sumner would bring considerably more than called for by the face of the check.—Youth's Companion.

Hotel French.

He pulled himself up at the hotel table, tucked his napkin under his chin, picked up the bill of fare, and began to study it intently. Everything was in restaurant French, and he didn't like it.

"Here, waiter," he said, sternly, "there's nothing on this I want."

"Ain't there nothin' you would like for dinner, sir?" inquired the waiter, politely.

"Have you got any sine qua non?"

The waiter gasped.

"No, sir," he replied.

"Got any bona-fide?"

"N-no, sir."

"Got any semper idem?"

"No, sir, we haven't."

"Got any jeu d'esprits?"

"No, sir; not one."

"Got any tempus fugit?"

"I reckon not, sir?"

"Got any soires dansants?"

"No, sir."

The waiter was edging off.

"Got any sine die?"

"We ain't, sir."

"Got any e pluribus unum?"

The waiter's face showed some signs of intelligence.

"Seems to me I heerd of that, sir," and he rushed out into the kitchen, only to return empty-handed.

"Maybe you've got some beef and cabbage and a gooseberry tart?"

"Sure we have, sir," exclaimed the waiter in a tone of the utmost relief; and he fairly flew out to the kitchen.—Columbia Herald.

Getting a Library.

Starting in a small way fifteen years ago Seattle, Wash., began building up a public library. It was moved from place to place as it grew, until on the night of January 1, 1901, it was destroyed by fire. The next morning the Library Commission telegraphed to Andrew Carnegie. They asked for $200,000. Mr. Carnegie answered: "Atlanta has more population. I gave her $125,000." They answered: "Increase of population 1890-1900, Atlanta, 37 per cent.; Seattle, 88. Seattle's population all white and all readers. Actual revenue for 1900, $30,000. Home circulation 1900, over 150,000 volumes. Will need in five years $250,000 building. Will guarantee annual maintenance $50,000." Mr. Carnegie's reply was: "I like your pluck. You may build to cost $200,000, which I will provide."

A Gentleman.

I was once spending the night in a beautiful home in a large city. At about nine o'clock my host, a gentleman of about fifty-five years of age, got up, went out into the hall and put on his overcoat and rubbers. Returning to the parlor door, he said:

"Excuse me, please, for just a few minutes. I am going to say good-night to my mother."

His mother lived three blocks distant, and for thirty years her son had never failed to go and bid her good-night, if he was in the city.

"No matter what the weather may be, no matter who his guests are, my husband never fails to run over to his mother's and bid her good-night," said the gentleman's wife when he had gone.

"Neither he nor she could sleep if this duty had been neglected. When his business compels him to be away from the city, he writes to her every day, if only a single line.

"Her mental powers are beginning to fail, and she forgets many things, so that her mind is a blank on some points; but when nine o'clock comes she always knows the hour, and says: 'It is time for Henry to come and bid me good-night.' "—Will Carleton's Magazine.

"You know Will was just crazy to marry me," said the young bride.

"Yes; that's what everybody thinks," replied her jealous rival.

Mrs. Housekeep—Now, you've had your dinner; will you saw some wood for me?

Wragson Tatters—Say, lady, I'm afraid.

Mrs. Housekeep—Afraid of work, I suppose.

Wragson Tatters—It ain't that, lady; but I'm a kleptomaniac, an' I'm afraid I'd steal the saw.

Ten years ago, when every one was talking of the Queen's jubilee, a gentleman friend of ours heard the following conversation between two Scotchwomen:

"Can ye tell me, wumman, what is it they ca' a jubilee?"

"Well, it's this," said her neighbor. "When folk has been married twenty-five years, that's a silver waddin'. And when they have been married fifty years, that's a gowden waddin'; but if they man's deid hen it's a jubilee."

Whittier's Dog.

During one of the last birthday celebrations of the poet Whittier, he was visited by a celebrated oratorio singer. The lady was asked to sing, and, seating herself at the piano, she began the beautiful ballad, "Robin Adair." She had hardly begun before Mr. Whittier's pet dog came into the room, and, seating himself by her side, watched her as if fascinated and listened with a delight unusual in an animal. When she finished he came and put his paw very gravely into her hand and licked her cheek. "Robin takes that as a tribute to himself," said Mr. Whittier. "He also is 'Robin Adair.'" The dog, hearing his own name, evidently considered that he was the hero of the song. From that moment, during the lady's visit, he was her devoted attendant. He kept by her side when she was indoors, and accompanied her when she went to walk. When she went away he carried her satchel in his mouth to the gate, and watched her departure with every evidence of distress.—St. Nicholas.

Though you deal in liquid blacking,
Dismal bluing and such things,
When you have a sale to manage,
Do it as the robin sings.
Put some cheer-up in your business—
Be a chipper sort of man,
And with other lines of notions,
Peddle sunshine if you can.

There's an awful deal of meanness
In this busy world of ours;
But, mixed in with weeds the rankest,
Ofttimes grow the finest flowers.
Wear a posy on your lapel,—
It won't hurt the trade you plan,
And along with other samples,
Peddle sunshine if you can.

A Royal Botanist.

The botanist, M. Bonnier, tells the following story, in the Echo de Paris, of the democratic simplicity of the King of Sweden and Norway. He was botanizing near Stockholm, when he met a stranger similarly occupied.

We fraternized together, says M. Bonnier, and then I suggested that we should lunch together at an inn near by.

"No, come home and lunch with me instead," said the stranger, and he led the way to the palace and opened the gate.

I was naturally astonished, but my new acquaintance was most apologetic. "I am sorry," he said, "but I happen to be the king of this country and this is the only place I have to entertain anybody in."

So we went in and lunched, and talked botany together all the afternoon.

On the brink of a creek in Ireland there is—or used to be—a little stone containing a carving of this inscription, intended to help travelers: "When this stone is out of sight it is not safe to ford the river."

Nora, fresh from old Ireland, stared at the baby's toy balloon, which wavered at a place two or three feet higher than her head and was anchored to the back of a chair. "'Tis quare and wonderful intoirely!" she said, raising her hands, "To see it up—and balancin' its own self—and it standin' on a shtring!"

...OTHER THINGS GROW IN SUMMER...

Why Should Not The Circulation Of The Christian-Evangelist

It is not mere idle talk when we say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is better than it ever was. This is claiming much, for it has always been the exponent of first quality among the religious periodicals of the Current Reformation.

Our Readers have Helped to Make the Christian-Evangelist What It Is, and We Are Depending Upon Their Aid in Improving It Still More.

We are quite certain that our readers believe that individual lives would be better, homes would be happier, and the power of the church would be many times multiplied if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read in every home represented in the church. It is upon this ground that

We Ask for the Hearty Co-operation of Every Reader in this Mid-Summer Effort to Double the Circulation of the Christian-Evangelist.

How are we to accomplish this result? Those whom we are most desirous of reaching do not know the helpfulness of our journal. They must become acquainted with its good qualities. Sample copies accomplish this in a very limited degree; it takes several months for one to become interested in and attached to any particular class of reading. Therefore,

We Offer the Christian-Evangelist for the Six Months Beginning July 1, 1901, and Ending December 31, 1901, for Only Fifty Cents.

If you are really interested in this question of good literature, you may induce every family in your congregation (and many of your neighbors who are not church members) to invest fifty cents for twenty-six weeks' reading of the very best quality. Of course, we shall lose money on all such subscriptions, but

These Are to be Considered as Trial Subscriptions and are to be Discontinued Promptly December 31, 1901, Unless Renewed at the Regular Price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents a Year.

The justification of this very generous offer is the fact that those who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for six months will not desire to part with it after that time, but will renew as regular subscribers. Circulating religious literature is as truly missionary and evangelistic as preaching from the pulpit. Therefore,

We Call Upon Pastors, Sunday-school Superintendents, and all Others Actively Interested in the Advancement of Christian Teaching Among Us to Engage With Us in the Present Effort to Increase the Knowledge, Piety and Zeal for Good Works of Those With Whom They Have Influence. Who Will Send Us the Largest List of Trial Subscribers?

Two-cent postage stamps will be accepted in payment, but the best way to remit large amounts is by Postoffice Order, Express Order or Draft on St. Louis, Chicago or New York.

"Nap," Mr. Gudger, the detective, continued, as he bent over the fettered tramp, "when Mr. Brown here, found you had a sort of a lien on Mrs. Morris, knowing her secrets to such an extent that you could force from her a hundred dollars, he concluded to trace up your past history and see if he couldn't find out something dark about you. So he hires me to trace you up."

"And welcome, gents," said Nap; "my life is as pure and clear as Haviland."

"So I trace you up just before you come here to Mizzouryville," Mr. Gudger went on; "I find that you come here in company with another tramp; I find that this tramp—let us call him Y—disappeared the night after you arrived here. I find that blood is found in this very ravine, on them stones yonder. I find that you stand possessed of a knife with rusty bloodstains on the blade. I find that this Y has never been saw since you and him come to this place, here building you a campfire. I find that you and him had a violent quarrel that same night, sitting by your fire, and a party of boys out a-swimming heard you and him barking and snapping at each other equal to Dr. Watts."

"It wasn't Dr. Watts as done the barking and biting," interposed Nap, "that ar was one of his figgers in a poem over his name. Which I knowed, gents, in better days. It was thus:

'Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For 'tis their nature toe;'

and nothing ain't truer, gents. You take a dog and set him out doors on a moonlight night, and he don't ast nothin' better than to bark. It is his delight. Now as to biting, dogs is diffurnt. They is some dogs—"

"We needn't analize the pome," interposed Mr. Gudger. "It's cloudin' up and fiixin' to rain and life is short. You killed that Y, and you're a murderer, Nap. And we have you in our power! You happen to be a degenerate half-brother of Mrs. Morris. Well, it'll be small comfort to you when you are swinging for this crime!"

"You have handcuffed my hands," said Nap, "and you're sitting on my legs; so if you choose to insult me by your low talk of 'swinging', I got to grit and bear it. Come, let's talk plain. What are you going to do about that other tramp which you have clothed with an algebraic symbol?"

"We'll do this," said Mr. Gudger; "we'll put you in jail, have our trial, hang you or send you up for life, and get shed of you. Now that's the final word. Mr. Brown, will you take the lines and drive for town?"

"Hold on, gents," cried Nap. "I ain't no more murderer than you; not as much, for I never thought of such wickedness; and you seemed to have growed twins with the thought of bloodshed! I'll tell you where that there Y is. He's alive and hearty. I'll show him to you. Then you'll have to turn me loose. And if I don't prosecute you for disturbing the peace, then they ain't no peace in Missouri, that's all! You take and drive through the woods twell you come to the Creekville road, and in the first left-hand turning after that you'll find a tumbledown cabin with a cellar under; a lovely cellar; Y's in that there dungeon."

After further conversation, Edgar Brown decided to follow the direction and learn if Nap told the truth. They found the road, and at last, the cabin, almost overgrown with bushes and vines. It was a neglected spot, and oh, so dark! Edgar and Mr. Gudger led Nap between them into the cabin. He showed where a trap door led into the cellar. At present it was hidden by an old barrel, filled with broken glass, ashes, and a few bootheels. They made Nap go down first, with his wrists still bound together. They followed. There in the cellar was another man—a tramp. He was all wrapped about with ropes, just like a bundle ready to be sent home. He was obliged to lie at full length. A jug stood near him from which he could drink by putting its mouth in his and tilting it down and down till the water gurgled. And there were some things to eat on a little box. When he saw Edgar and Mr. Gudger, the prisoner cried, "Help, help! Unfasten me before I starve to death!"

"Now listen at that!" cried Nap. "After me begging around town for his victuals, and actually keeping his jug filled with my own hands! You ungrateful Y! You greedy Y!"

"What does this mean?" demanded Mr. Gudger.

"It means," said the prisoner, "that I nourished a snake in my bosom and it has turned and tied me up with these ropes. I thought him my friend, and we had a fight and he drawed his knife and stuck it in my arm so I couldn't hold my own; and he drawed his gun and marched me here, a-threatening to murder me if I resisted. But I'll tell you who I am. You may of heard of Mrs. Morris. I'm the half-brother of her poor dead husband!"

"You ain't!" cried Nap. "I'm Jack's half-brother, and the uncle of Madge, Jennie and Pete."

"'Tain't so!" shouted the man in the ropes; "I am Jack's half-brother, and sweet little Madge's, and darling Pete's uncle!"

"Gents," said Nap, "now you know why I tied him up here. He's raving crazy, and a-goin' around over the country, claiming to be what he was not born to be."

"Yes, gents," shouted the prisoner, "now you know why that viper tied me up here. He knowed I was Jack's half-brother, and he calculated to pam hisself off as that gent, and git sister Maude's money! But it's me as gets that money."

"You see, gents," said Nap, "he heard me telling of my sister Maude—that's Mrs. Morris—and he 'lowed to pretend he was me!"

"No," shouted the other, "he heard me tellin' of my sister Maude—that's Mrs. Morris—and the desprit villain schemed to cheat me of my birthright and my mess of partridge."

"Silence!" shouted Mr. Gudger. "This must be untangled. Tell me your name. Who are you?"

"My name," said Nap, "is Napoleon Hardcattle, the half-brother as was wronged by Jack Morris, now dead and in his grave."

"'Tain't, 'tain't!" roared the other. "My name is Napoleon Hardcattle; and I am the half-brother of Jack Morris!"

"Nap is just short for Napoleon Hardcattle," cried Nap.

"I was always called Nap!" shouted the second, who was very red and angry. Then Edgar began to laugh; a loud, joyous unrestrained laugh. The prisoner in the ropes glared at him savagely, while Nap smiled uneasily. "Mr. Gudger," said Edgar, when he could get his breath, "neither of these rascals is Napoleon Hardcattle. If I had just known that Mrs. Morris's husband's half-brother was named Napoleon Hardcattle, it would have saved much bother! Why, I know Napoleon Hardcattle; I ought to, as he has married my stepmother! I remember now that he had a brother who wronged him out of some money, and now that I think,—it was a Morris!"

Lights in the World.*

TEXT: Ye are the light of the world. . . Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 5:14-16.

Not very brilliant, nor yet very penetrating, but nevertheless lights in the world, are all faithful followers of Jesus Christ. There are some souls that are all aflame with love, that are never opaque, that have no dark side, and in the light of such the world rejoices; but most of us, we fear, are reflectors, rather than luminaries.

A DARKENED WORLD.

The figure presupposes darkness around us. Paul calls the social surroundings of the Philippians, "A crooked and perverse generation." Every city is full of vice and crime. Our ideals are low and vulgar. It can scarcely be doubted that a careful canvass would show that men of uprightness are in the majority, and yet in most communities the vicious minority are permitted to rule. The churches themselves are many of them full of darkness. Tradition tyrannizes over mind and conscience and popery and priest-craft are still the vogue for multitudes of our fellow-men. Paganism mantles many lands. The lights are shining, and the "true light" waxes greater and greater every year, shining with increasing radiance as the centuries roll away, but there are unexplored recesses and unillumined corners into which we must flash the light.

A HIGH OFFICE.

To be a light-bearer is a distinction. To carry the light that guides the benighted, that cheers the belated wayfarer, is a most delightful task. But to be the light and by the simple energy of one's own redeemed nature scatter the shadows and roll back the clouds that hide men from each other and from duty and God—that is to be like Christ. He said, "I am the light of the world," and afterwards, turning to the group of disciples, he said, "Ye are the light of the world." How gracious and beneficent is the ministry of light to the natural world. Darkness has bound the world as with a mystic spell, but the dawn breaks it. Over and over again we see this brilliant triumph of day over night, of light over darkness. Under the tender warmth of the sun the blossoms unfold, the birds awake, the soil becomes instinct with life, and garden and orchard elaborate their fruits. Now the real test of your Christianity is, to what extent are you the bearer of light to the world? Better be the world's light, than the world's bread, or water, or raiment.

A BLESSED RESULT.

Are we living so as to merit this bold and beautiful description? It is easy to see that the prophets, such men as Moses and Elijah, were worthy to be called the light of the world; and the apostles; and John the Baptist, the "burning and shining light;" and the martyrs; and the reformers; but to apply the term to some of us moderns seems not only presumptuous but almost farcical.

Our study of this theme, then, should impress us anew with the dignity of our high calling. Let us not put out the "smoking flax," God forbid! but on the other hand, kindle it anew. Feed the flickering flame; stir up the dying embers! Let your light shine and then in consequence, what? Men will see your good works "and glorify your Father which is in heaven." This suggests that there may be, there must be, a close connection between "shining" and working. May we not fairly say that good works constitute the light? Certain it is that the unbelieving world should not seek in vain for some proof of moral illumination and regeneration in the lives of believers. Give them the chance of believing through you, and so of glorifying God.

WHERE AND HOW?

We are to shine, first of all, in the places to which God has assigned us. We may not like the surroundings; we may fancy our light would be far more brilliant if we were set in a golden candlestick; but just where we are and as we are, we must shine. And then it may be that the Master of the household will set us in a wider sphere. Again, lights burn. To continue to shine, they must be fed. And we are to find fuel for our burning and shining in the word of God. The hand that kindled our light will keep it burnished bright and will feed the flame. As far as possible, let us send the light of consecrated Christian personality into the world, remembering always, "the light that shines the farthest shines the brightest nearest home."

PRAYER.

O Thou Light of the world, shine again upon us and kindle our hearts afresh. Do Thou shine in us, for we are dull and lustreless without Thee. May Thy word be our daily portion, giving us light. Help, Lord, in the warfare against darkness—of ignorance, of tradition, of superstition, and hasten the full and perfect day of righteousness, through the increasing reign of Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

Among Our Colleges.

Barclay Meador, Advertising Manager.

In the plan to make liberal use of the advertising columns of newspapers, by which means to give publicity to the value or merit of an institution seeking public recognition, our schools have, perhaps, been slow to acquiesce. However, last season practically all the schools of our church, and many others beside, carried advertisements in our columns. There is already assurance that they will all be represented this year. Readers can expect to find in our school directory some information concerning each one, beginning as early as the 21st of June. We will be glad to supply information beyond what the advertisements contain to those who may apply.

At Canton, where Christian University is so beautifully located, commencement is being held this week.

The unfortunate accident which deprived the school of Bro. Dungan's presence from the day it occurred until two days before the end of May, in its effect yet lingers, though Bro. Dungan is now rapidly regaining strength. With the exception of two weeks he has received his classes in his home and given instruction, even when not able to sit up. He will lean on his crutches for some time yet. His general health is good, and his rapid recovery from a serious accident is surprising and gratifying alike. On the 26th ult. he went some miles into the country to preach. All who have a personal acquaintance with Bro. and Sister Dungan and their son Daniel, will be glad to know that they are delightfully situated in a commodious house on the campus, with a commanding view of Canton and of the river, as well as the country for miles up and down its banks.

Next to Kentucky University, the one over which Bro. Dungan presides has supplied more of the preachers who stand in the pulpits of our churches in Missouri than any other school. This high standard bids fair to be maintained or even raised, under the direction of our good Bro. Dungan.

Drake University at Des Moines, with its 1,700 students, under the master hand of Bro. Wm. Bayard Craig, closed the last week of May, with colors all a-flying. The year has been the best in its history, and prospects are wonderfully bright. All Des Moines, and indeed much of the state, centers a large measure of interest in this young and growing institution. In the midst of all the demands upon his time, Bro. Craig finds time to be cordial even to the point of hospitality, in the exercise of which grace he is duly seconded by Sister Craig. Drake is a young giant whose power is yet to be felt. Commencement is now on, as will be noted elsewhere.

In one year at Central Christian College, Bro. J. W. Ellis and those who have labored with him, not the least among whom are his most estimable wife and his talented son, J. Breckenridge, has made a most satisfactory showing. This school has gone through much that is incident to the life of every school not under the patronage of a wealthy benefactor. The departments have been maintained at a high standard. The students in the Bible department have been in demand to preach constantly and all are engaged for the vacation period. Here, too, commencement will come this week.

Jesus Appears to John.*

Irenæus, a disciple of Polycarp, who was in his early years a close companion of the apostle John, declares that John was banished to the Isle of Patmos by the Emperor Domitian, during his persecution of the church, near the close of the first century. If this is correct, it was perhaps near the year 96 A. D. when the events of our lesson occur, and the aged apostle had reached almost a hundred years of life. But, even if this banishment took place during the reign of Nero, as many suppose, John was an old man of nearly seventy, and this is the last recorded appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ to any of his personal followers. The hand of Rome was laid heavily upon the preachers of the gospel of the Nazarene, and one by one the apostles became martyrs for their faith. John subscribes himself a brother and partaker with all who suffered tribulation for the kingdom of heaven's sake. The word rendered "tribulation" is equivalent to the Latin "tribulum," meaning the threshing sledge by which the grain was separated from the chaff. No bread can be eaten till the grain is separated and ground. The souls of men can only be fed when the bread of life is ground in the mill of suffering. Sacrifice is the unvarying law of true service, and he who seeks ease and pleasure will turn his neck away from the yoke of well doing. The Man of sorrows is the Minister to sinners.

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day," says John. No wonder the voice of God spoke to his soul, and the glory of the Christ burst upon his enraptured vision. The reason why the Lord's day brings to us so little of joy and blessing is because we are not "in the Spirit." Our souls are not in communion with the Lord. We are thinking of the same things, and following the same ends, as have engrossed our minds and hearts during the other days of the week. We have learned, of course, that all time is sacred and all work holy, to the faithful child of God! And yet, the more truly we have done our daily tasks from Monday to Saturday, the more sacredly we have accepted life's duties as a trust from the hand of God, the surer we will be to welcome the Lord's day as a season of spiritual refreshing. The worship and work of the first day of the week will prove the best possible preparation for the tasks of the succeeding days. We are wronging our own souls, robbing our fellow men of the service we justly owe them, and doing despite to the Lord who bought us by his own blood, when we neglect or despise the sacred privileges and obligations of the Lord's day.

The vision was not for the apostle alone, but for the church of Jesus Christ in all ages, to comfort and cheer her amid the doubts and difficulties which she must surely meet. John is bidden to write what he has seen, together with the messages and visions which are about to be vouchsafed to him, and to send them to the seven churches of Asia, which are named by the Lord. There were many times seven congregations of Christians in Asia, and this number is evidently chosen as symbolic of the whole body of believers, the number seven being thus used for completeness throughout the entire book. The various characters and conditions of these seven churches doubtless represent practically the whole body of the church, and the lessons drawn from these specific cases have taught the Christian world for over eighteen centuries.

Awed by the voice like a trumpet, which had spoken to him of the message he was to convey to the people of God, the apostle turned about, to behold Him who had uttered the awful words from heaven. The sight that met his eyes he never could forget. In the midst of seven splendid golden candlesticks, fashioned like those of the temple of Solomon, walked a transcendently glorious figure, whom the eye of the beloved disciple immediately recognized as his Lord and Master. But how changed from his aspect while on earth! A rich robe held his form, reaching down to his feet, and a golden girdle held it close about his breast. His head and hair were snowy white, his eyes shining like a pure flame of fire, and even his feet glistening like burnished brass. He held in his right hand seven bright stars, and a sword that flashed in the light seemed to issue from his lips. His face was radiant and luminous as the sun at noon. The apostle would at once recall the day when he saw his Master transfigured on Mount Hermon, but the glory of that hour was far surpassed by the present vision, and he fell at the feet of Jesus as a dead man, fear and awe combining in a burden too great for unaided human nature to sustain.

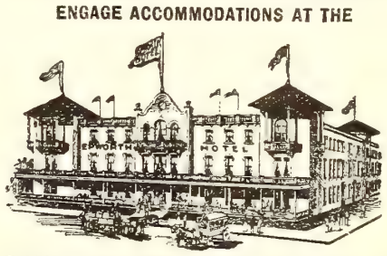
Divine grace was sufficient for the hour. The right hand of the glorified One was laid upon his faithful servant, and the Living One issued the blessed proclamation, "I was dead, and, behold, I am alive forever more, and I have the keys of death and of Hades." When the grave received the body of Jesus of Nazareth, it fancied that it welcomed one more victim, but it soon found that it was embracing its conqueror. He, the Lord of life, could not be holden of death. He submitted once to be death's subject, only that he might forever wrest from that cold hand its scepter over man, and deliver them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage. The grave, and Hades, the unseen world, are now a part of his dominion, and they who trust in him need fear naught in time or eternity. With the sweet Quaker poet they may trustfully sing,

"And so beside the silent sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me,
On ocean or on shore.

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

Amid the churches He still walks, supplying to them their light, and through them illumining the dark pathways of sinful men. In His hand He still holdeth the stars, His messengers of grace, the ministers of His Everlasting Gospel, and they cannot fall, while they trust in and obey Him. Glorious Son of man! Blessed and Faithful Savior! Abide ever with us!

(Lesson for June 16. Rev. 1:9-20. Connection, verses 1-8.)



Complaining about your Soap Powder?—look at your package; you'll find it isn't PEARLINE. Women are correct thinkers as a rule, but some only think they use PEARLINE; they are using a cheap imitation. Others call all washing powders PEARLINE. This is because PEARLINE is the original, standard, best known and safest, and is the mark for all imitations. 641

TOPIC FOR JUNE 16.

Reverence for Sacred Things.

(Exodus 3:1-6.)

It has been said that our day is losing its reverence. Some have thought that we are more given to jesting over sacred things than ever before. And yet, is this not rather a jesting over things that once were considered sacred? Is it not, perhaps, a lack of reverence for what was once thought reverend, but is no longer thought so? One age hallows certain exteriors that another age outgrows.

There was a time, for example, when Greece outgrew old gods and laughed at them. Then certain cried out that Greece had lost her reverence. There was a time when part of Europe outgrew the millinery and mummery of the Roman Church, and then the pope's people cried out that reverence was gone. And now, let us say, the religious world has outgrown the notion of a paradise of gold streets, and quietly smiles at the inactivity of such a heaven. Is this a mark of irreverence?

This can scarcely be called an irreverent age. Though it has lost its respect, perhaps, for some old forms and customs, it is nevertheless deeply respectful toward the essential things holy. There is, for example, deep reverence for the name of Christ. An audience will listen with smiles to a tirade against certain stories of the Old Testament, but will catch its breath in fear when the name of Jesus is lightly spoken.

There is often criticism of worshipers, in this day, because they do not, in worship, assume certain attitudes. Is this criticism just? Is worship a thing of attitude of body or of soul? Is it a question of genuflexion? Grant that our age revolts against attitudinizing in every form, in body in speech, in morals, in charity; is it any the less an age of reverence because it is an age of greater sincerity? God desireth truth in the inward man.

This matter of honesty once firmly fixed in our minds, are there not some things which our age does need to guard? There are some forms, there is some symbolism, worthy to be preserved. There are holy places, and holy of holies. These may not be visible locations but they exist. Such inward reverence should be guarded; and may, for some of us, depend upon reverent, awkward attitudes.

For example, there is no people which more needs to be cautioned against too great ease in the church building than our people. We are sociable. We love to chat. Before service there is a hum of voices; after service, there is a babel. I, for one, would almost rather a congregation should incur the charge of coldness and unsociability by going thoughtfully and quietly out of the sanctuary, than to be thought exceedingly friendly by remaining to visit and laugh and talk.

We need, also, a deepened respect for the earlier portions of our service, the first hymn, the reading, the prayer, all that we bunch together under the business-like phrase, "Opening services." What is the unimportant portion? What is merely introductory? If any part can be dispensed with, let us cut it out, not slight it by being late, by crowding in during it, and otherwise desecrating it. We need to learn from the Episcopalians promptness and regard for the very first word of the service.

This same spirit, in general, carried into all our consideration of religious affairs, will lead us into the right relation—will it not?—to all matters pertaining to the church and to holy things.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

By A. B. JONES.

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

A BOOK WORTH $10,000

Are you keen for a bargain? If you had an opportnnity to purchase something for the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value, would you close with the offer? We think you would. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE? a new volume by W. J. RUSSELL, is easily worth $10,000 in cold cash to anyone who will faithfully study it and follow its instructions. You can buy the book, however, for $1.00, which is the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value. The scope of the book is clearly shown by the chapter titles, which are as follows:

I. What is Your Life?
II. The Value of Time.
III. The Body and Good Health.
IV. Intellectual and Moral Culture.
V. Character Building.
VI. Value and Power of Enthusiasm.
VII. Business Life.
VIII. Christian Citizenship.
IX. Casting Shadows in Life.
X. Words That are Golden.
XI. Good Books and Good Reading.
XII. How Shall We Amuse Ourselves?
XIII. Love, Courtship, Marriage.
XIV. What is a Christian?
XV. Life's Great Guide-Book.
XVI. What Think Ye of Christ?
XVII. Golden Steps Heavenward.

In all the 316 pages of this book there is not a dull line. The author is a master of choice English. He has made frequent use of story, incident and illustration. The most striking feature of the book, after its practical common-sense, is its readableness. Begin a chapter, and you will finish it; read the chapter, and you will read the book.

The volume is one of the handsomest ever issued by us. It is most tastefully bound in cloth, stamped in gilt, contains seventeen chapters and 316 pages, and the price is One Dollar, postpaid.

BLANCHARD.

Mrs. Tamson Blanchard, wife of James E. Blanchard, was born June 26, 1837. Died at her home in Wapello, Ia., May 19, 1901. Sister Blanchard had a bright, cheerful disposition, and was a brave, true Christian, always abounding in the work of the Lord. She was a bright light in the Wapello church. She left a husband, two daughters, and a son who is a faithful minister of the gospel. She is absent from the body and present with the Lord. The funeral was preached at the house by J. K. Ballou.

NORTHCUTT.

Lydia Jane Northcutt was born in Kentucky, April 25, 1820, and died at the home of her son, Elder H. A. Northcutt, in Kirksville, Mo., May 22, 1901. She became a Christian over sixty years ago. She was married to Benjamin F. Northcutt when she was twenty years of age. Bro. Northcutt passed to the better land five years ago. She leaves four sons, eleven grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. She was a true Christian and won the love of all who knew her. Her pure, consecrated life was a great help to others. The funeral service was conducted at Millport by the writer. The large attendance showed the esteem in which she was held by the whole community. She was a devoted member of the Knox City Church.

J. H. COIT.

LaBelle, Mo., May 30, 1901.

STANLEY,

Sister Nancy J. Stanley, wife of Bro. Meredith Stanley, died very suddenly of heart trouble at her home in Anderson, Ind., May 23, 1901. She was 66 years old, and leaves a husband 76 years old, and seven children to mourn their loss. Sister Stanley has been in her usual good health this winter and her death was a great shock to all. She went without warning. It was only last February when I baptized Bro. and Sister Stanley. Bro. Stanley is quite feeble. And he, with the family, have the sympathy of the entire community and church.

TRICE.

Miss Fannie Ellen Minor was born near Lexington, Ky., Jan. 20, 1828. In 1848 her father, J. H. Minor, moved with his family to Missouri and settled in Easton, near which town he bought a large tract of land. Mr. Minor was a man of much more than ordinary ability, and served with honor in the legislature of Kentucky. In 1852, at Easton, his daughter, Fannie Ellen, was married to Elder Samuel S. Trice, a preacher of power in the Christian Church, and a man of sterling worth. They lived near Plattsburg, Mo., until 1874, when they removed to Buchanan county where Elder Trice died in 1876. In 1894 Sister Trice settled in Edgerton, Mo., where she resided at the time of her death, which occurred April 27, 1901, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Grayson, of Plattsburg, Mo. She leaves five children, F. C. and J. J. Trice, Mrs. Mattie Corington, Mrs. J. H. Lampton and Mrs. J. M. Grayson. Sister Trice became a Christian early in life, and during the long period of 60 years was a devoted member of the Church of Christ. She was zealous in all the departments of church work, and never failed to do her part. She studied as but few have done the Word of God and was well posted as to the teaching of Moses and the prophets, Christ and apostles and evangelists. Not a year passed that she did not read through one or more times Old and New Testaments. This was not to our sister a task but a great pleasure. She left not to her children gold or silver, but a precious name: and a noble, devoted, spotless Christian life has this blessed mother bequeathed to her children.

WOODMAN.

Almira J. Sylvester was born in the town of Mentz, Cayuga county, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1825 In her young maidenhood she was identified with the Christian Church at Throopsville. She united her fortune with Daniel Abbott, Oct. 15, 1841, and leaves two daughters, Mrs. E. A Crane, of Kalamazoo, Mich., and Mrs. I. E. Barnum, of Denver, Col. In 1842 they settled in southwest Pawpaw, Mich., then an almost trackless forest, where they carved out a fine home, the first settlers in that region. Her husband died in 1878. Oct. 8, 1889, she was married to David Woodman. She was one of the charter members of the Christian Church established near Pawpaw in 1843. Her death leaves only one charter member of the church, Mrs. Eliza Conger. After suffering for six weeks death came as a sweet release May 20, 1901, loved by many and highly respected by all.

5 BOOKS for $1.00

The following works are paper-bound booklets. Each is a valuable treatise on the subject to which it is devoted—concise and dealing with the fundamental facts rather than microscopic detail. The price of each work singly is 25 cents. We will send the five books, postpaid, for One Dollar.

Christian Science Dissected. By A. D. Sector. This work, issued last summer, has already had a very large sale. It is bright, breezy, clear and convincing—just the thing to put into the hands of one who is inclining toward "Christian Science."

Sabbath or Lord's Day. By D. R. Dungan. Is it the First Day or the Seventh Day of the week that Christians should observe as a day of rest and worship? This book answers the question conclusively.

Facts About China. By W. Remfry Hunt. The author has lived in Central China for many years. His book is full of facts about Chinese customs, language, government, religions, commerce, geography, etc.

The Liquor Traffic. By S. W. Crutcher. Mr. Crutcher has spent years in fighting this traffic, and in this book tells of his experiences with manufacturers and dealers of whisky in the church and out.

The Lord's Supper. By N. J. Aylesworth. This work is a defense of and custom of observing the Lord's Supper every Sunday. It is an able, convincing argument.

WARNING.—If you wait until you can go to the postoffice and buy a money order, you may never send for these books. Just send a one-dollar bill; it is safe, convenient, and saves you five cents.

Wheeling Through Europe

BY W. E. GARRISON.

A Handsome Cloth-Bound Volume of 263 Pages, Illustrated with Half-tones from Photographs taken by the Author.

"A ROADSIDE CONVERSATION."—SPECIMEN ILLUSTRATION.

During the summers of 1898 and 1899 the author toured on a bicycle through England, Scotland, Wales, France, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Italy. Traveling on a wheel, he was able to see Europe as it cannot be seen by the tourist who is whirled over the Continent by train. He has written most delightfully and entertainingly of his travels, of his experiences with odburate officials and unsophisticated peasants, of his struggles with the several European languages, of the customs of the common people, of Alpine scenery, Swiss lakes, etc.

PRICE, ONE DOLLAR.

Book Notes.

Those who have purchased and read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century are most enthusiastic in their praise of the book. It should be borne in mind that this book is not merely a reprint of the articles that ran through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during 1899. The several authors have completely revised, rewritten and amplified their contributions, adding a great deal of entirely new matter. We urge all our readers to send at once for this volume. It will give them a clearer and better understanding of the origin, growth and triumph of our cause than they can otherwise gain. Price, postpaid, $2.00.

We are preparing a little pamphlet which tells all about this new history—The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century. It explains how the book came to be written, the plan of the work, its value and place in our literature, who the authors are, etc., etc. This little pamphlet will be sent to any who wish it. We will be glad to send a bundle of them to any pastor who feels that it would be a good thing for his people to read such a work.

We are selling more song books now than ever before. This branch of our book business has had a phenomenal growth during the past few months. Our presses are kept busy printing new editions of the several excellent works we publish, in order to supply the demand. Our house has for years been the acknowledged headquarters of our brotherhood for books and Sunday-school supplies, and it has now become the leader in the publishing and selling of song books. The great majority of our churches to-day are using books published by us. If your church or Sunday-school is contemplating the purchase of new books, communicate with us, and we will send specimen pages, price list, etc., or, if desired, specimen copy of any of our books.

The Christian Worker, by J. H Foy, has long been generally regarded as the best ministers' manual published It is a book that every preacher needs, for it will give him assistance and help in every part of his duty as a minister of the gospel. It is full of hints and suggestions concerning weddings, funerals, baptisms, dedications, and all manner of special occasions. Besides, there are instructions anent church discipline, organization, etc, etc. The book is eminently practical, and is exceedingly cheap at its low price—seventy-five cents.

J. N. Baskett, writing in the Intelligencer (Mexico, Mo.) concerning What Is Your Life? says: "There has recently fallen into my hands a book published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, which has in it so much to commend that I ask space to call attention to it. It is What Is Your Life? by Rev. W. J. Russell. The book is meaty with original facts and rich with extracts from the best writers on moral and intellectual growth. . . . . If we should look at this book from no other standpoint than that of an outline sketch of nearly all that is best in literature and culture, it would be well worth reading. . . . . Especially timely is this volume in the day when religious anchors are dragging a little under the strain of so many influences which are not for bettering." From all directions come such testimonials of the worth of this volume. It is one of our latest publications, but already it has had a good sale, and promises to have a very wide circulation. The book should be read by every young man and woman in the land. The price is $1.00.

No greater bargain in a book was ever offered than our offer of the Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman for seventy-five cents! This is a handsome volume of 954 pages, printed in large type on the finest book paper, illustrated, and bound in the best cloth. It is a book that was cheap at the original price of $2.00, but we have a number of copies which we offer at about one-third of that amount. These books are not soiled or damaged in any way. We secured them, by a fortunate deal, at a very low figure, and are disposing of them for less than the cost of production. Our supply is limited, and when it is gone, we cannot obtain any more to sell at this low figure. While those we have last, we will send them, postpaid, for only seventy-five cents per copy.

Among the many valuable contributions which W. W. Dowling has made to our literature are two manuals which every worker should have. These are The Helping Hand and The Guide Book—the former a book of suggestions and instructions concerning every point in the organization and work of the Y. P. S. C. E., and the latter a manual of helps and hints for the teachers and officers of our Sunday-schools. The most experienced worker in either of these departments of Christian activity, as well as the beginner and novice, will find much to assist him. Either book will be mailed, postpaid, for twenty-five cents.

We have also a number of copies of the Life of Gen. U. S. Grant which we offer for seventy-five cents per copy. This is a volume of over 700 pages, handsomely printed, illustrated and bound in cloth, which formerly sold for $2.00. Seventy-five cents is but a nominal price for such a book, but until the present stock is exhausted, we will send it, postpaid, for that price.

Our great offer of The Moran Series of Shorthand Instruction Books, containing seven volumes, for Five Dollars, is still open. These books are the best for self-instruction or home study that have ever been published. By their aid any person of good, average intelligence may, by a reasonable amount of study and application, become a capable stenographer, able to fill a commercial position, or to report court proceedings. The young man or woman who secures a set now and devotes his or her spare hours during the summer to study, can be ready to obtain a position in the fall. There are not enough good stenographers to supply the demand of the business world. Four-fifths of those who apply for positions are incompetent. If you master the art, you will never have any difficulty in securing and holding a position at a good salary.

WHAT WE STAND FOR

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

J. H. GARRISON, in Christian-Evangelist.

REASON teaches, and all human experience confirms the teaching, that education in the sense of intellectual development—such education as the state can furnish—though highly important, is sadly inadequate to meet human needs. If man be created in the image of God, capable of knowing Him and of entering into relations with Him; if the human soul hunger for the living God, as well as for truth and knowledge, then it follows that education, in its highest, broadest and truest sense, must minister to these higher needs. It is the power and glory of a Christian College that it recognizes human nature in its totality, and in its unity, and seeks to promote an all-sided and harmonious development. Religion is no longer regarded as an exotic—something foreign to man's nature which must be grafted into it by supernatural processes—but as the normal adjustment of a human soul to its spiritual environment, that is, to God, "in whom we live, move, and have our being." It is the natural life of the spirit enlightened and freed from the dominion of evil. This makes it not only a legitimate part of education, but its crowning part, seeing that it gives direction, purpose and inspiration to all our other powers and faculties. This fact must have recognition in any theory or system of education that is to control the future.

A BOOK WORTH $10,000

Are you keen for a bargain? If you had an opportunity to purchase something for the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value, would you close with the offer? We think you would. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE? a new volume by W. J. RUSSELL, is easily worth $10,000 in cold cash to anyone who will faithfully study it and follow its instructions. You can buy the book, however, for $1.00, which is the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value. The scope of the book is clearly shown by the chapter titles, which are as follows:

I. What is Your Life?
II. The Value of Time.
III. The Body and Good Health.
IV. Intellectual and Moral Culture.
V. Character Building.
VI. Value and Power of Enthusiasm.
VII. Business Life.
VIII. Christian Citizenship.
IX. Casting Shadows in Life.
X. Words That are Golden.
XI. Good Books and Good Reading.
XII. How Shall We Amuse Ourselves?
XIII. Love, Courtship, Marriage.
XIV. What is a Christian?
XV. Life's Great Guide-Book.
XVI. What Think Ye of Christ?
XVII. Golden Steps Heavenward.

In all the 316 pages of this book there is not a dull line. The author is a master of choice English. He has made frequent use of story, incident and illustration. The most striking feature of the book, after its practical common-sense, is its readableness. Begin a chapter, and you will finish it; read the chapter, and you will read the book.

The volume is one of the handsomest ever issued by us. It is most tastefully bound in cloth, stamped in gilt, contains seventeen chapters and 316 pages, and the price is One Dollar, postpaid.

The Reformation of the XIXth Century

Being the first complete, authentic, adequate history of the beginnings, development and progress of the Disciples of Christ that has ever been published. It stands without a rival, in a class by itself. This work, which has been long expected, has just been issued, and has been hailed with delight by all those who have an intelligent, active interest in our great cause. The chapters devoted to the beginnings and early history of the movement are especially valuable, being written by men who were intimately associated with Campbell and the "fathers," and who were, themselves, actors in those early events and scenes. This history was published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during 1899, but has since been entirely revised, rewritten and amplified.

These two great books, the one dealing with our principles and the other with our history, are properly companion books, and should stand side by side in the library of every one who cares to comprehend "our plea." They should be placed in every home among the Disciples of Christ. There can be no question but that these are the most important volumes in all our distinctive literature, and we believe we are justified in feeling proud that we are the publishers of two such splendid works. Both works were planned and edited by J. H. GARRISON, editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We especially urge every preacher, who has not already done so, to speedily obtain both of these volumes. Again and again have we heard preachers say of The Old Faith Restated, "It has helped me more than any other ten books I possess." The second and later work is equally valuable. Both are large, handsome volumes, of 456 and 514 pages, respectively.

Current Events.

The Cubans still Refractory. By a majority of one, the Cuban Constitutional Convention adopted the provisions of the Platt Amendment, and all would be well if there had not been included with the amendment some ifs and buts showing a misinterpretation of Secretary Root's explanation of the amendment. The President has decided, with the advice of his cabinet, that the acceptance of these provisions with the interpretation given to them by the Convention does not fulfill the requirements of the Platt Amendment and that we must therefore remain in military possession of the island pending further action. The Convention has been so informed by the Secretary of War and it remains to be seen how much more time the delegates will waste in considering whether or not they will do what ultimately they must do. The vote of 15 to 14 on the measure which was adopted would seem to show that they would not stand anything stronger than that. It is generally believed, however, that this narrow margin was a play to the Cuban gallery and that more votes would have been forthcoming had they been needed. Among the Cuban populace, whose pride is greater in proportion as their intelligence and capacity for self-government are less, the most popular plan is doubtless to establish a government without assistance or advice and without giving guarantees to its sponsor, the United States, for its permanence and effectiveness. To these the Platt Amendment is probably a hard pill to take, but it may prove to be good medicine. It is believed that a good majority of the delegates accept this view of the situation but are willing to please their less enlightened constituents by holding off as long as possible and making what they are pleased to call a "struggle for liberty."

An International Courtesy. The visit of representatives of the New York Chamber of Commerce to England as guests of the London Chamber of Commerce has furnished the occasion for many exhibitions of international friendliness, which have a particularly pleasing significance, coming just now when British statesmen and journals have been so frankly conceding the prospective—and in some cases, the present—commercial supremacy of America, and our own papers have been exhibiting the inevitable and perhaps justifiable tendency to crow over the admissions and alarms of our European neighbors. The war of commerce is fierce but it has its amiable phases, for it does not prevent the representative business men of rival nations from meeting about the festal board and indulging in courteous compliments and mutual felicitations. King Edward entertained the American visitors most hospitably, and all London, from the Lord Mayor to the reporters of the half-penny press, has been both interested and friendly. In fact, it is a notable group of financiers, and the very sight of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and Mr. Andrew Carnegie sitting together in company with other millionaires of unknown—and probably much exaggerated—wealth is enough to stir the imagination. It is said that the American visitors will make a generous contribution to the Queen Victoria memorial fund. It would be a graceful and appropriate act. The St. James Gazette goes so far in its expressions of friendliness as to suggest that the two flags be displayed together on the public buildings in Great Britain on July 4. In 1898, when our war was in progress, London was for the first time extensively decorated in honor of Independence Day, but at that time the decorations did not extend to the public buildings. All of this friendly feeling growing out of an exchange of courtesies by the Chambers of Commerce, is significant of the fact that commercial intercourse is an effective bond of peace. Trading nations can not afford to fight each other or even to be unfriendly.

Against Secret Societies. The United Presbyterian General Assembly, which has been meeting in Des Moines, Ia., adopted a resolution not to permit members of secret societies to become members of the church. The resolution may perhaps be interpreted to exclude those members of secret societies who are already in the church. At any rate, it will make it unpleasant for them. One speaker in advocating the resolution said: "We shall not take pagans into the church even if they are called Masons." Such high-handed action as this exhibits a degree of illiberality which is equally out of harmony with the spirit of the times and the teaching of Jesus. It is worse than the error of the apostles when they wished to rebuke those who did good works but "follow not with us," for it is aimed to prevent certain doers of good works from following with them even if they so desire. If Masonry or Odd Fellowship makes men immoral or unbelieving, it will be easy enough to exclude each member individually on the ground of his immorality or his unbelief. But those who passed this resolution would probably claim nothing more than that the system logically involves immorality and unbelief, though it does not always work out this result in each individual. But it is a great mistake to impute to any person all the logical consequences of any position which he takes. Least of all can the church attempt to do so without transcending its function and placing a stumbling block in the way of many whose character and faith are as truly Christian as those of the supporters of this resolution. We are not advocating the secret societies, but we are saying that personal unfitness, and not membership in this or that society, is the only just ground upon which a church can exclude any person from its membership.

The Indians Protest. There appears to be considerable dissatisfaction among the Indians of the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache tribes in regard to the opening of their reservations for settlement. They claim that the treaty which was made with them for the opening of their lands was not fully explained to them, that the acceptance of it was secured by fraud and that Congress amended it in parts to which they have never given their ratification. Lone Wolf, representing the three tribes, has applied for an injunction against the Secretary of the Interior to prevent the opening of the reservations. It is not likely that the injunction will be granted. It is said that settlers are going into the Creek country in large numbers and are buying such lands as the Indians are permitted to sell at ridiculously inadequate prices. Much of this fraud may be prevented by the fact that such bargains are not binding until approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Alabama Constitutional Convention. The Constitutional Convention called in Alabama for the purpose of placing a limitation upon negro suffrage has now been in session for several days, but no decisive result has yet been reached. The convention is virtually of one mind in desiring to adopt an amendment which will disfranchise as many negroes and as few whites as possible. The only question is how to frame such an amendment without making it conflict too obviously with the constitution of the United States. Senator Morgan has suggested one scheme: To make negroes ineligible to office and make the registrars of election (all white, of course,) the judges of the qualifications of voters. There is no doubt about the effectiveness of this scheme. It would do all that it is intended to—and perhaps more. When once the negro has been eliminated from politics divisions are certain to arise among the whites and it will then be undesirable to have a small body of men, the registrars, entirely in command of the situation. The convention realizes that government by election officers is not likely to prove satisfactory—not even in the long run to the party that controls the officials. It is possible that the Carolina plan may be adopted, excluding from the franchise all illiterates except those whose ancestors were voters before 1867—that is excluding illiterate blacks but admitting equally illiterate whites. It would be far better to adopt the Maryland plan excluding all illiterates regardless of color.

A Third Term. It may have been only one of Senator Depew's jokes when he suggested some time ago that it might be advisable for the Republican party to nominate President McKinley in 1904 for a third term. It is the unfortunate condition of Mr. Depew's fame, being based rather upon a reputation for convivial oratory than upon statesmanship, that, while his utterances are read with interest, they are seldom taken quite seriously. But whether originally meant as a joke or not, the third term suggestion has found serious advocates. The unwritten law which prohibits the election of a president for a third term is, as we have previously pointed out, not simply a law of custom but a natural outgrowth of the circumstances surrounding the presidency. In the hands of a president who aspires to be president of the whole country, and not simply of his party, party discipline inevitably suffers during a second term, and a new leader is demanded. To prevent this would be the work of an acute and scheming politician rather than of a statesman, and such a person could never command the popular enthusiasm which would be necessary for overcoming the general prejudice against the third term. If there is to be any change in our traditions concerning the presidency it should not be toward legitimation of the third term, but in the opposite direction—a single term of six or eight years with a constitutional provision against re-election.

The Feud in South Carolina. The resignation of Senators Tillman and McLaurin had from the first the appearance of a mutual bluff, wherein each of the bluffers was called by the other before he had time to back out. The events which have followed the Gaffney debate have still further heightened this impression. As already recorded, the two hostile Democratic senators agreed to resign their offices, and both contest for the long-term senatorship now held by Mr. Tillman. A joint note to this effect was sent to Governor McSweeney. The governor refused to accept the resignations, and suggested that the senators consider the matter more calmly and deliberately before insisting upon it. Mr. Tillman's reply was characteristic. He called the governor names, and reiterated his determination to resign. In reply the governor signified his readiness to accept the resignation if the matter were pressed, but said that in that case he would exercise his power of appointment, instead of allowing a campaign to be precipitated at the present time. Thereupon Mr. McLaurin signified his willingness to withdraw his resignation, and Senator Tillman did likewise, accompanying his note with a general fire of invective at all parties concerned. No man south of Mason and Dixon's line, in public or private life, has a more comprehensive vocabulary of political billingsgate, or a more fluent use of it, than Senator Tillman, and he has not neglected this admirable opportunity for the exhibition of it. The incident, so far as the resignations are concerned, may be considered closed, but the enmity between two senators and their respective factions will remain the most conspicuous feature of the South Carolina political situation until one of them has retired to private life.

An Unconventional Commencement. This is the month of college commencements and from graduating platforms all over the country a flood of social, economic and political wisdom is being poured forth which would deluge a smaller land. Happily these deliverances are not taken seriously but are considered merely as exhibitions, so the country is none the worse. The recent commencement exercises of Tuskegee Industrial Institute exhibited a marked and characteristic variation from the usual type. The object of the school is to give to negro young men and women a training in the practical affairs of life and industry. At this novel graduating performance the eagle did not scream nor was the political history of the twentieth century outlined in glowing prophecy. But a young man stepped forward and made a short talk on the fertilization of soil and the best methods of preventing the soil of the south from becoming worn out. Another spoke on the planting and care of fruit trees. Another exhibited and explained a steam-pump which he had made. A young woman, a daughter of Booker T. Washington, talked on dress-making, with illustrative models, and another described some processes of plain cooking and illustrated them on a conveniently placed range. That is education of a sort that counts directly in the uplifting of the negro race.

Mrs. Botha's Mission. For several months it has been stated with more or less confirmation that the wife of Gen. Botha has been an active agent in negotiating for peace between the British and the Boers and that it was through her influence that her husband consented to negotiate, futilely, as it turned out, with Gen. Kitchener. The report that Mrs. Botha was on her way to England naturally aroused interest and expectation. Since her arrival in London, however, a few days ago she and all connected with her have maintained such absolute silence that the public has no idea of what she intends to do except such as can be gleaned by perusing guesses of enterprising press correspondents. Whatever her mission may be it is not likely to accomplish much in the direction of securing peace, though it may possibly occasion the government some embarrassment by stirring up sentiment among the pro-Boers. It is reported that Mr. Kruger and his associates have no sympathy with Mrs. Botha's plan. Meanwhile hostilities are continuing in the Transvaal. Since the British reverse at Vlakfontein, resulting in one hundred and eighty casualties, Gen. Kitchener has been pursuing Botha's forces and a considerable quantity of supplies has been taken, but there has been no engagement of importance.

The City That Found Herself. As we have before observed from time to time, more good is likely to come to a city in the preparation for an international exposition than in the possession and entertainment of it. St. Louis is now enjoying a preliminary boom in expectation of the World's Fair of 1903. Already real estate prices are advancing, though the site of the Fair has not yet been determined, and building is unusually active. Up to June 1, 1,420 building permits have been issued this year, a gain of fifty per cent. over last year. More striking still is the fact that, while the matter of a Fair site is being discussed, the citizens are coming to a new realization of the magnitude and resources of the city. It requires a great deal of space for a fifteen million dollar fair, yet six sites have been offered. Each of these has certain advantages which seem to its advocates to make it pre-eminently suitable. But the friends of each site have been surprised at the strong showing made by each of the others. Few residents in the northern part of the city had any adequate conception of the beauties of the south side, and southsiders knew but little of the west and northwest. It is a big and beautiful city and it is a wholesome exercise for any city to be called upon to examine itself critically in this way and learn what manner of place it is. The examination makes St. Louisans more than ever proud of their home.

Brevities. The report that General Cailles, the chief Filipino general still in the field, had surrendered, is said to be an error, or, more likely, a premature announcement. The withdrawal of the volunteer troops from the Philippines has been progressing and the government will probably be able to discharge all, or nearly all, of them by July, when their term of enlistment expires.

Count von Waldersee has resigned his position in command of the allied forces in China and has gone to Japan. The evacuation of Pekin is proceeding rapidly and at present the capital is almost free from foreign troops with the exception of the Japanese and the several legation guards. There has been some friction between the various forces, incident to the confusion of departing, especially between the British-Indian and French troops.

Parties who are interested in the restoration of the army canteen, either for business reasons or for personal indulgence, are still busy manufacturing and circulating stories of the terrible increase in drunkenness and disorder at the posts since the abolition of the canteen. These stories are mostly general statements without details or specifications. No specific instance of increased disorder has been cited in which the allegation has not been proved to be false.

The $150,000 libel suit brought by Mrs. Woodbury against Mrs. Eddy of Christian Science fame, was decided in favor of the defendant without the defendant even being brought into court. It is hard to convince the average juryman of to-day that a general reference to a person as "the Babylonish woman" is worth that sum of money.

The Industrial Commission at Washington is hearing testimony in regard to the relation of the trusts to the tariff. Undoubtedly a trust can sell goods cheaper than a small concern. What is needed is for some one to point out the forces which will make a protected trust without competition sell as cheaply as it can.

Mrs. McKinley's condition is now reported as slightly improved and the dispatches again give ground for hopes of her recovery.

Words and Deeds.

Taking up a Greek New Testament from our study table a few evenings since, and glancing casually through it, our eyes fell upon some words which attracted our attention. The passage read that "Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; and he was mighty [dunatos] in his words and works"—[en logois kai ergois.] He was not mighty in logois only but in ergois; not in words only but in deeds.

Lingering on the passage our thoughts ran thus: Moses was a learned man. He was not only instructed in Hebrew tradition and literature, but in all the wisdom of the Egyptians. What was the use of this learning? What purpose did it serve in the career of Moses? What is the object of all our learning? Is it not to give us might or power for the tasks of life? Is not this the real end of all our college and university training and of all our religious instruction? This was the end which wisdom served in the case of Israel's great lawgiver. What men need to fit them for the difficult tasks of life is power (dunamis) —mental power and moral power. Any education that fails to impart this needed power fails at a vital point.

But Moses, the passage states, was mighty in his words and works. It is not always that we find this happy combination in one man. Some men are mighty in words, but weak in deeds; others are strong in deeds, but have not, to any great extent, the power of utterance. They express themselves in deeds rather than words. The greatest danger among Christians of all classes, and in our humanity generally, is that we shall rest content in giving expression to our feelings and convictions in words without carrying them out into deeds. The age demands men who shall be strong both in words and in works, and if there is to be any shortage it is a great deal better that it should be in words rather than in deeds. There is no word that is so eloquent as an act. But even words acquire a force which they would not otherwise possess in a man who is mighty in deeds. The real expression of character is in deeds rather than in words, and the words find their best interpretation in the works of the man who utters them.

It is not enough to be a good man, though that is much. Many a good man would have failed in the place of Moses. Leadership in every age requires intellectual and spiritual might—the power to conceive, to plan and to execute great enterprises. Because education, in its truest and best sense, develops this power, it holds a place of fundamental importance in all progress. It is not simply knowledge that is needed, but wisdom, which is knowledge wisely directed. Whether power is a good thing or an evil thing depends upon the use that is made of it; but power one must have if he is to accomplish any great purpose in life.

At this season of the year when our colleges are turning out thousands of graduates, it is well to impress the lesson through pulpit and press and in every other way, that this power which has been developed by education is to be transmuted into wisdom, and is to be dedicated to the benefit of the race. The world is in need both of wise utterances and of noble deeds. It needs men who can discourse wisely and powerfully upon the great themes which occupy the thought of men, and it needs, too, and more than anything else, perhaps, men who will embody their learning, their wisdom, their convictions and their highest sentiment, in living and loving deeds. In what way can one build a monument so enduring, which shall be an inspiration to those who shall come after them, as by putting his life, his strength, his resources into some noble, unselfish, generous deed, that will live while men have hearts to appreciate what is true and noble in human conduct?

Moses holds his place in the world's thought and esteem as one of the great benefactors of the world because he was a man not only mighty in words, but in deeds as well. He undertook a great task under God's direction, and carried it out under circumstances which would have discouraged and defeated a man whose faith was less robust and whose power was less capable of coping with the difficulties which he encountered. His name lives forever among the immortals because he turned his back upon the pleasures of sin, upon the allurements and enticements of royal luxury, to dedicate his strength and his life to the uplifting of his fellow men, and to carrying out the high purposes of God. May it be that many of those who in these days of college commencements are leaving their alma maters behind them to begin the real work of life, may seek that power which cometh from above and which consecrates all knowledge to high and worthy ends and will enable them to live in history as men who were mighty both in words and in deeds.

Our Message to the Churches.

Jesus sent messages to the churches of Asia Minor and through them to the church universal by his servant John while he was in the Isle of Patmos. Is it not probable that He has sent other messages through other servants of His since then? Did not Luther have a message for the church of his day from Jesus Christ? We believe he had. And so we think had Calvin, Wesley, Campbell and other reformers. These later messages, coming through fallible men, must, of course, be tested by the standard of Christ's teaching as that teaching has been conveyed to us by men especially trained by Christ and endowed by the Holy Spirit for that work. But when so tested it will be found that all these reformers had a true message of Christ for the churches of their day.

It is a common saying among us who are identified with what we call the current reformation that we have, in addition to the old message of the gospel to the world, a special message for the church of our day. If ours is really and truly a reformation or restoration—we do not set these words in antagonism to each other, as some do, for restoration is, after all, a method of reformation—it would be strange if we did not have a message from Christ to the churches. Let us refresh our minds a little as to the nature of this message, to the end that we may have clear convictions as to the nature of the task that is set before us. As to our message to the world it is simple enough. It is to preach the old gospel of redeeming love and urge on men the claims of this gospel just as they were urged by men who preached with the "Holy Spirit sent down from heaven." But that part of our message which relates to the churches is perhaps not so simple in its nature and requires a fuller statement.

Let us state first what it is not, that we may clear the way for a better understanding of what it is. It is no part of our message to unchurch the other churches, and to make it appear that they have no claim whatever to be recognized as churches of Christ. Even Jesus said of Himself that He "came not into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." If we have a mission to the churches of our day, would it not be right to say of it that it is not to condemn these churches, but that they may be saved from certain errors and dangers which detract from their power and efficiency as agencies for the extension of the kingdom of God. Jesus Christ has laid no such responsibility upon us or upon any other people as to justify us in condemning those who claim to be following Christ's teaching, because they "follow not with us." There was vast wisdom in that saying of Christ, that He came not to destroy but to fulfill the law. The law was imperfect and inadequate, but Christ's method was to take whatever there was in the world that was an agent for truth and righteousness, and make it larger and fill it fuller of His truth and grace. Only that which was absolutely evil was to be destroyed and even that was to be destroyed by the power of truth.

It is a very easy matter to see how utterly disqualified the average member of any religious body is, for passing judgment on another organization of believers, by the limitations of his knowledge, both as to the range of infinite truth on the one hand, and of the actual teaching and influence of the religious body which he would condemn, on the other. There are few preachers in any church, we dare say, who would not gladly recall certain rash judgments which they at one time felt free to utter against their religious neighbors, if so be they have learned the sweet lesson of charity. Even the Apostle John in his earlier life felt called upon to prohibit certain ones from casting out demons in the name of his Master, because they "follow not with us." But when he reported the fact to his Master, expecting, perhaps, His approval for the zeal he had displayed, he was told rather not to do so again, since "they who are not against us are for us." This has been a hard lesson, however, for the religious world to learn. Nearly every church in christendom has at some period in its history claimed a sort of monopoly on the casting out of devils, and has looked with disfavor upon any work of that kind which was being done outside its own ranks. How strange this is in view of the fact that there are more devils to be cast out than all the churches combined have so far been able to exorcise!

But are there not absurd theories and claims put forth by certain sects and parties which need to be exposed? Certainly, and let them be exposed by all means to the blazing light of the truth preached in love. There is no enemy to darkness like light. Many a false system has been made to flourish for a season by persecution. In the Master's message to the churches it will be noticed that He commended where there was anything to commend, and then pointed out the error in the spirit of a friend who would save them from disaster. If we have a message to the churches we can only deliver it effectively by recognizing whatever truth and devotion and loyalty to Christ they possess and in the spirit of true brotherhood pointing out the evils which we think ought to be remedied.

If we have now gained the right spirit and attitude in which to approach our religious neighbors we may postpone until another week the message which we have for them.

Notes and Comments.

We are glad to present our readers this week with an able article by Dr. Niccolls, of the Presbyterian Church, on the late General Assembly. Dr. Niccolls is one of the oldest resident pastors in St. Louis, as he is one of our ablest and most honored ministers. He is prominent also in the general councils of his brethren, and took an active part in the proceedings of the late Assembly, giving his voice and vote for the measure finally passed on the subject of the revision of the Confession of Faith. Differing as we do with our Presbyterian brethren as to the need or value of any other confession of faith than that contained in the New Testament, we nevertheless honor that great body for its dignity, its order, its devotion to fundamental truth, and its great work of extending the kingdom of God in pagan lands.

It is wonderful what good service some churches can get out of a preacher by appreciating him, praying for him, encouraging him, and standing by him. Some churches would freeze out Paul, while others would thaw out anything short of an icicle. A splendid substitute for changing preachers would often be for the church to change its treatment of the preacher it has and make a new preacher of him. If it has been neglecting the prayer-meeting and the Sunday-school, and blaming it all on the preacher, who has been well criticized but poorly paid, let it repent of its shortcomings, do its duty, hold up the hands of the preacher, and see what a difference it will make. The habit of laying all failure on the preacher is not just.

Some preachers are so afraid of being "sensational" that they fail to be inspirational. Sydney Smith once remarked that "some men preach as if they thought sin was to be taken out of a man as Eve was taken out of Adam—by casting him into a profound slumber!" Some one else has said that certain preachers treat their hearers who differ from them as Peter did the servant of the high priest—cut off their ears! There is truth in both these remarks. The preacher who cannot keep his congregation awake will neither get a rib out of them nor an idea into them. While the preacher who by abuse cuts off the ears of his hearers is as foolish as one who would carefully cork his jug before attempting to fill it with water.

"The East Window" of the Columbia (Missouri) Herald, which never fails to let in some of the true light, pays a beautiful and deserved tribute to the dreamers, against whom so many slurs have been cast by this "practical" age. The world can not yet afford to dispense with the men who have the power of vision, the divine gift of seeing things which do not appear to duller eyes. Truly and beautifully does the Herald editor say: "This is the danger in the bewildering world of time and sense. The danger of unremembrance of the dreamer's due, and, by forgetting, shrink ourselves from dreaming. The ideal appeals, and we turn our backs. The vision beckons, and we hang up the brazen shield of business before our eyes that we may not see. The clamor of the material shuts our ears to the high call of the spiritual. Let poets dream—and tramps. Let philosophers speculate and preachers moralize. There is sterner stuff needed for the work which the world wants done. And with this blunder we stumble on through life, and fall into a slit in the ground at last. For it is a blunder that the world no longer needs dreamers. The need is greater than in any generation gone. As Moses came from the shepherd's tent, Amos from the gathering of the sycamore fruit, David from among the herdsmen, and Isaiah from the peasant's place, there is need for voices loud and clear to call in this age of commerce and coldness to the invisible and the eternal. There is need for dreamers who can put their visions into words, and sing or speak to an unwilling but needy world. What matter if the world, unthinking, reaching blindly in the darkness, neither hears nor heeds? The dreamer may not quit his dreaming, When Phocion heard the multitude applaud his speech, he asked, surprisedly: 'Have I said something wrong?' "

One of the false and pernicious pleas which men often make to shield themselves from blame for some mean and unworthy act is, "One must live." Not necessarily! One must die sometimes, if he would save his honor and preserve his conscience unsullied. Why should one live if not to do good and to build up a character which shall be a blessing to the world? Why should one wish to live if living means dishonor, the forfeiture of true manhood? Is it not better to live in poverty all one's days and preserve an unsullied conscience than to grovel in the dust for the world's luxuries? No, it is not necessary to live. If by losing one's life he can find it in a truer and larger sense, let him not hesitate to lay it down. It is, however, a mistaken notion that one will perish if he pursue an honest, honorable, upright course which happens for the moment to be unpopular. One should have more confidence in the power of truth to win its way, and in the honesty of human nature, which sooner or later pays its tribute to honest worth. But if the worst come and recognition is delayed until cruelty and neglect have done their work, even then is it not better to be Paul in prison awaiting beheadment, than to be Nero on the throne, surrounded by the adulation of his courtiers? The one lives in the world's affectionate remembrance, the other in the world's scorn and contempt.

A brother writing to us from the far west says that one of the delegates to the late Presbyterian General Assembly at Philadelphia was asked on his return home how things went at the Assembly and that his reply was, "We met the enemy and we are theirs." So it appears to him, no doubt, now. It may be, however, that the whole matter will present a very different aspect to him at some future time. How often it is that those we count our enemies are found to be our friends, and the things which we regard as disasters turn out to be blessings in disguise. "We know in part and we prophesy in part." If that was true of an apostle how much more true it is of the most of us to-day. Our fathers had some convictions and uttered them and acted upon them, although they were not in harmony with the convictions of those who had preceded them. We honor their memory not for the perfection of knowledge which they displayed, but for their moral heroism in being true to their convictions. But is not the same obligation resting upon us, to be true to the light which God has given us, that rested upon our fathers? The recognition of this truth would not lead us to reject anything which our fathers accepted because it is old, but it would give us the freedom to reject whatever seems to us false or only partially true, whether new or old. Whenever we lose this free spirit of independence we are no longer true to the memory of those brave reformers in the past who dared to reject hoary traditions, customs and doctrines which were tested by the word of God and found wanting.

Editor's Easy Chair.

On one of the brightest and warmest days of last week the Easy Chair had a call from a distinguished visitor whose name has reached every city, town, village and hamlet of the civilized world. He had a familiar look about him, and as soon as his face was illuminated with its characteristic smile, we recognized him at once as an old friend. He was not long in making known his business. It was Mr. Vay K. Shunne, of "The Amalgamated Sons of Rest," and his mission, he said, was to induce as many of the sons of toil as possible to secure temporary membership in his association. He insisted that a month's, or better, two months' membership in "The Amalgamated Sons of Rest," would promote the health of the world's toilers, increase their energy and vitality, prolong their lives and thus add immensely to the world's wealth and to the sum of human happiness. He claimed to represent a cause which had rights that white men are bound to respect. He cited facts which, like that one of Bill Nye, "stood on its hind legs and howled for recognition." He grew eloquent as he expatiated on the bent backs, the weary brains, the exhausted nerves, of those who were doing the world's work and carrying its heavy burdens, and he had medical opinions and vital statistics to support his claim that what these toilers needed was to join "The Amalgamated Sons of Rest." As the Easy Chair has long been a convert to his theory we did not require him to cite all his facts and figures, but we subjected him to a brief interview which we submit herewith for the benefit of our readers.

"What class of people," we asked, "do you think will be most benefited by joining your association?" The reply was prompt: "Nervous, high-strung people, who work at a high tension, are bound to have rest or a breakdown. Men carrying heavy burdens of care and responsibility, whose whole nature is taxed by the private and public demands made upon them, must periodically throw off this burden or shorten their lives. Monotonous drudgery, too, such as many housewives undergo, wears the spirit and energy out of one, and should be relieved by a vacation. In a word, all who work hard and whose labors exhaust their physical and mental energies, owe it to themselves, to their families and to their employees to take some respite from their work to recuperate these wasted forces." "As you include women in those needing rest, why is your association called 'The Amalgamated Sons of Rest,' as if the women were not allowed membership?" we asked. "Our association was named before woman's rights were recognized as they now are, but while the name remains unchanged, women are received on an equal footing with men and enjoy the same rights and immunities." "What does your experience suggest," we asked, "as to the best manner of spending the vacation?" "That depends. There are 'many men of many minds.' Every one must follow his taste or inclination. Only avoid fashionable watering places where society people go to exhibit their fine clothes, and where plotting mammas go with their daughters to ensnare wealthy young men and bachelors in the meshes of matrimony." Our visitor gave a cunning wink as he made this last observation and continued: "No, our advice would be, go where you can rest most; where you can find the most complete change from what you have been doing or seeing; where you will have new scenes, new associations and new duties, if you do anything. It is not necessary for one to go to a popular resort in order to have a vacation. A few miles in the country, if you live in town or city, will often answer the purpose very well. Only get close to nature, listen to her myriad voices, and feast at her table if you are wise."

So saying, our visitor took his hat, bowed, and begging the support of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in promoting his gospel of rest, he departed. When he was gone we fell to musing on what our visitor had said. We believe in work. There is nothing that dignifies a man or woman more, and gives one more self-respect, than honest labor—the consciousness that one is doing his part of the world's work. There is no sort of amusement we have ever yet discovered that gives us so much real pleasure as congenial work, when the mind and hand are ready for it, and eager to do it. When one's mental powers leap to their task with alacrity, as unleashed dogs to the chase, it is a positive joy to work. But this very joy of work is self-consuming in the imperious demands it makes on the nervous system. When the joy goes out of one's work, whether it be mental or physical, and one's lagging energies must be spurred on like a jaded horse, then nature calls loudly for a cessation of activities in order to recuperation. This is the meaning of the summer vacation. One need not wait until exhausted nature refuses to do more, but should anticipate such a result in the premonitions which are always given. Our visitor is right. If you are a hard worker, and do not happen to be an editor, by all means take temporary membership in "The Amalgamated Sons of Rest."

That was a very graceful and wise thing which one of our Missouri churches did for its minister a few days ago. It was the sixth anniversary of his pastorate. He had labored faithfully all these years, having only two vacations of a month each in that time, and these he had spent at a university studying to better qualify himself for his work. He had been growing all these years, and other churches wanted him, and offered him $500 more salary than he was getting where he was. But he had failed to recognize "the hand of the Lord" in these offers of a higher salary. He stood by his church, and his last year's work had been his best in his pastorate. One of the elders had the grace and wisdom to mention these facts to the other officers, and suggest that a two or three months' vacation to visit Europe, with salary continued and expenses thrown in, would be about the proper recognition of such fidelity. It was done, and ratified by the church, and the preacher is now on the ocean, making his first visit to the Old World Who does not know that is a wise investment? The Columbia church has bound its preacher to its service in bonds so strong that no enticement of a higher salary can take him away from it. There is many a hard-working preacher that deserves that sort of recognition and appreciation. May the example mentioned prove contagious!

Questions and Answers.

It is claimed by us, and considered to be according to Scripture too, that the Old Covenant ended when Jesus died on the cross and that the New began or was founded on the day of Pentecost. So then, under what dispensation or covenant were the people living in the space of time between these two events?
T. B. Ross, M. D.
Slater, Ia.

It is usual to say that there was an interregnum between the old and new dispensations, that is, between the death of Christ and Pentecost. As a matter of fact we know that many of the Christians at Jerusalem continued to observe the Mosaic rites and ceremonies many years after Pentecost, and perhaps on up to the destruction of the temple. On the other hand there were those who lived before the death of Christ who laid little if any stress on the sacrificing of animals and other ceremonial requirements of Jewish law, while they emphasized the value of righteousness in character and conduct. Just as in some species of oaks the leaves remain on the trees until the coming in of a new tide of life in the spring sloughs them off, so the forms of Judaism actually gave way when the new life in Christ made them seem unnecessary. Since the death of Christ was the means by which this result was accomplished, it is proper enough to say that the old covenant with its ordinances was taken out of the way by the death of Christ, but as the new law—the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, or the law of faith—was not made known until Pentecost, it would be better perhaps to conceive of the old covenant as continuing until the new took its place. Strictly speaking there can be no such thing as an interregnum in the divine government. There never has been any suspension of the moral law which requires men to do right nor of the obligation to approach God in the most acceptable way known to men.

Is there any evidence of any previous preparation in the history of Saul for his conversion which took place when he had the vision of Christ near Damascus? S. S. C.

Yes, every man who is living up to the light which he possesses is consciously or unconsciously preparing himself for that change which the Bible calls conversion. Saul's preparation was perhaps both of a negative and of a positive character. It was negative, in so far as he had not found that peace, that sense of justification, under the law which he had been zealously seeking for. See his experience as recorded in the seventh of Romans. In a positive way he must have been impressed by what he had seen and heard in the lives of the Christians whom he had been persecuting and carrying captive into strange cities. Their patience, their cheerful submission to the will of God, their words of kind admonition, which they must have spoken to him, the rapid spread of this new religion—these things must have had their influence on the mind of this bold persecutor. So much the case was this that in continuing his work of persecution, he was "kicking against the goads." It was this condition of mind and heart that made it possible for him to receive and to be profited by the vision of Christ on his way to Damascus.

How can a Christian take the life of his fellowman on the battlefield or elsewhere with a clear conscience? J. A. S.

He must believe that as a citizen of the government he is subject to the powers that be, and that in acting as a soldier under authority he is simply an instrument of the government for the punishment of evil doers, and is not personally responsible except to be faithful in the performance of his duties as a soldier. Having that belief his conscience would not be defiled if, in the discharge of his duties, some one of the opposing army should be killed. Of course no one has the right in his private capacity to take the life of his fellowman unless it should be in the defense of his own life or that of his family. Some would even deny this right.

The other day a Baptist brother gave me a New Testament in which the word baptize is rendered immerse. The date was torn out. It was printed by the American Bible Union. Can you tell me who made the translation, the date of it and also if it is now in print? William H. Knotts.
Litchfield, Minn.

This translation was made by the Baptists chiefly, though other immersionists co-operated with them to a limited extent through the organization known as the American Bible Union. We cannot give the exact date of this publication, not having a copy of the book, but it was in the first half of the preceding century. It is doubtless still in print and can be had by application to any Baptist publishing house.

What is "the great and notable day of the Lord," spoken of in Acts 2:20? A Disciple.

Any special visitation of God in the way of judgment or blessing might be called "the day of the Lord." Perhaps "the great and notable day" referred to in this passage is the day beginning with Pentecost, and the larger revelation of truth and of life through the descent of the Holy Spirit, and culminating at the time of the "revelation of the righteous judgment of God," known as the judgment day.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church

By REV. SAMUEL J. NICCOLLS, D. D.

The recent meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in the city of Philadelphia, was one of special interest in many ways. One hundred and fourteen years had passed by since its first meeting in the city of Brotherly Love. Its first session was presided over by the venerable Dr. Witherspoon, president of Princeton College, and one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. For many years the General Assembly held its annual sessions in that city, and it came to be recognized as the headquarters of Presbyterianism. The return to it, after a period of over a century, was, to the commissioners gathered there from all quarters of the globe, like going back to the ancient altars of their faith where their sires had worshiped. Naturally the historic features of the occasion were emphasized. The Academy of Fine Arts had been generously placed at the disposal of the Committee of Arrangements, and within its spacious rooms was a display of portraits, relics, books, banners, and seals, that told of the history and progress of the church, and of its missionary and educational enterprise. Its message furnished a reason for thanksgiving to God, in view of the progress that had been made, and perhaps also quickened that historic pride which has had not a little to do with Presbyterian conservatism.

A noble ancestry is an invaluable heritage, but it is apt to stand in the way of progress. It makes men slow in accepting new ideas. The pride of it has often been rebuked since the days when John the Baptist told the Jews that God was able to raise up from the very stones around them, children unto Abraham. It is not a little significant that the burning question of the Assembly, met in the midst of the conservative associations of the past, was the revision of the venerable Westminster Confession of Faith, which for 250 years has been the standard of orthodoxy among Presbyterians. The subject was not a new one. It had been introduced in the Assembly which met the preceding year in St. Louis, and a committee had been appointed to take the whole subject under consideration, and advise what was best to be done.

The investigation by the committee showed first, that there was no desire among the churches to change or abandon the system of doctrine which is taught in the Confession. In other words, Presbyterians have no desire to abandon or change their substantial creed. Next, it was found that a large majority of the Presbyteries, amounting to two-thirds in number, did desire some change in the Confession of Faith, which would remove misconceptions as to certain doctrines, and at the same time more clearly express the belief of the church at the present time. A small minority of the Presbyteries, while admitting that there were forms of expression in the Confession which were infelicitous, or liable to be misunderstood, were anxious that the whole matter be dismissed, chiefly on the ground that the present was not a suitable time to make a change.

A still smaller number desired to leave the old Confession unchanged, and to prepare as a substitute for it a new statement of the belief of the church, expressed in modern language, and in view of the present condition of affairs. It was urged by them, and with much force, that the Confession of Faith represented the condition of theological thought existing more than two centuries ago; that it was framed in view of theological controversies and errors in doctrine which then existed, but that most of these had passed away or were no longer living issues; and that new light had come from the Scriptures, in view of which related doctrines were seen in their true perspective. The old confession has nothing to say with reference to the great work of missions, in which the church is so actively engaged; or of the love of God for all men; or of the special office and work of the Holy Spirit. For these reasons, it was urged, it would be better to make a restatement of the doctrines most surely believed among Presbyterians, and to write it in modern language and terminology.

In answer to this it was urged that a restatement was not necessary; a very few changes in the old Confession would remove the objectionable parts, and two or three additional chapters would express the faith of the church with reference to missions, the love of God for all men, and the office and work of the Holy Spirit.

The whole subject was discussed on the floor of the Assembly with much earnestness and great ability. Happily there were no dissensions, and not a discordant note was heard to mar the harmony of the occasion; and when at last the final vote was reached and the Assembly decided by an overwhelming majority not to dismiss the subject, but to proceed in the work of revision, all acquiesced heartily in the decision. The Assembly, moved by one spirit, rose and sang the Doxology, and a prayer of thanksgiving was made by the Moderator to signalize the happy result.

The report of the committee adopted by the Assembly recommended that a revision of the Confession should be made, either by changes in the text or by explanatory statement; that three new chapters should be added to it; and that a brief creed containing a statement of doctrine should be prepared for popular use among the churches.

There is, in certain quarters, a misconception with reference to the position of the Confession of Faith in the Presbyterian Church. It is not, as is commonly supposed, a test of church membership. Personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is the only condition of membership in the church. No creed is allowed to interfere between the believer and his Savior. Officers and teachers in the church are not required to give their assent to the Confession of Faith in every particular, but only to the system of doctrine presented in it, as it agrees with Holy Scripture. The Confession is not the standard of faith in the Presbyterian Church. That church acknowledges only the supreme and infallible authority of the Word of God. The Confession is a subordinate standard, and is to be received only so far as it agrees with the Word of God.

The amendments or revisions which were referred to the committee to be reported to the next General Assembly, have reference to chapter 3, which contains a strong statement with reference to the predestination of men to eternal life and eternal death; chapter 10, section 3, which has the clause with reference to elect infants dying in infancy; chapter 16, section 7, which has a somewhat confusing statement with reference to good works done by unregenerate men; chapter 22, which concerns the taking of oaths; and chapter 25, section 6, in which the Pope is denounced as anti-Christ and the man of sin. These are the principal causes of difficulty or misunderstanding in connection with the present Confession. Whether they will be removed by an explanatory statement or by changes in the text, remains to be seen. The new Committee on Revision, which meets for its first session in the city of Pittsburg June 18, will have a year to consider the matter and make its report to the next General Assembly. Its conclusions, if accepted by the Assembly, must be sent down to the Presbyteries, and when approved by three-fourths of them, they will become part of the organic law of the church.

The meeting of the Assembly in Philadelphia marks progress. The unwritten faith of a church is always larger and better than its written faith, and sooner or later it must be recorded. The growing life of a church led by the Spirit will not be held in bondage by any creedal statements of the past. The Holy Spirit in his gracious ministry is to lead the people of God into all truth, and no creed yet framed by mortal man is a finality. Prejudice, sentiment and pride lead men to cling to the past; but in spite of them the Church of God is rising to higher and clearer views of truth and duty.

It is pleasant also to record another and more significant mark of progress. All of the mission boards of the church reported not only that they were out of debt but also that their work had been enlarged during the year. Especially was this so with the Foreign Board of Missions; over one million of dollars were contributed by the churches during the past year for this cause.

Second Presbyterian Church, St. Louis.

The two kinds of people on earth, I ween,
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.
Wherever you go you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.
And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.
In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?

In "Poverty Row."

By Minnie E. Hadley.

In sooty space suspended high
Above the rush of the world below,
Its chimneys grazed by a stretch of sky,
Is this small room in "Poverty Row."

Its windows drink the eastern sky,
And every morn long roofs of snow,
Reflect the first soft gleams of light,
That bathe this room in "Poverty Row."

And here I sit and think all day
Of God above and man below,
And doubt if life does really pay,
In this small room in "Poverty Row."

Ah well! I know this ceaseless toil,
This hurry-scurry to and fro,
This making plans for fate to foil,
Is not confined to "Poverty Row."

The whole wide world is sick with strife,
With vain pretense and empty show,
Man barters God for the husks of life,
And dwarfs the soul that ought to grow.

The sky above is filled with peace,
The stars peep forth with light serene,
The lake's mad waves their turmoil cease,
To bathe their crests in moonlight sheen.

But man goes on, and on, and on,
His dearest gain the sordid dime,
Nor stops to think, this paragon,
Of any nobler use for time.

And as the lake on quiet nights
Reflects the face of the lunar orb,
A peaceful soul emits a light
A restless one could not absorb.

And thus I sit and think all day,
Of God above and man below,
And doubt if life does really pay,
In this small room in "Poverty Row."

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Among the great religious assemblies to be held this year the International Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations in Boston, this month, must be accorded a prominent place. The time of meeting is June 11-16. The Young Men's Christian Association is now a recognized power in Christendom. The Boston convention will be a great meeting—in the territory represented, in the character and number of its delegates, in the high aim of the organization, in the wonderful results secured, and in what it promises for the future.

This is a jubilee convention. The first association on the North American continent was organized in Montreal, Dec. 9, 1851. The second was organized in Boston, Dec. 29, 1851. It is a curious fact that these organizations were established, each without the knowledge of the other, and on information received independently from London concerning the establishment of the association in that city.

The first Young Men's Christian Association was organized in London, June 6, 1844, in a room in the mercantile house of Hitchcock, Williams & Co., opposite St. Paul's Cathedral. The foundation principle of the Young Men's Christian Association is—

"WORK BY YOUNG MEN FOR YOUNG MEN."

The London association had its birth in a meeting for prayer and Bible study. The leading spirit in the nascent organization was George Williams, a clerk in a large dry goods house—now Sir George Williams. There are at the present time associations in England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, Germany, France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Italy, Asia, India, Japan, China, Africa, Oceanica, Spain, Mexico, Canada and the United States. The first convention of Young Men's Christian Association workers was held in Buffalo, New York, in 1854, nineteen of the then thirty-nine associations sending delegates. At a special convention held in New York in 1861, in the month of November, when the people were profoundly stirred by our great civil war, the United States Christian Commission was created. This organization sent 5,000 Christian helpers to the camps and hospitals, and distributed more than $5,000,000 in money and stores. The value of the Young Men's Christian Association, through the Christian Commission, during the civil war, cannot be estimated.

See the wide extent and strength of this organization of young men in behalf of young men: England, Ireland and Wales have more than 400 associations, Scotland has more than 250, Germany more than 1,100, Switzerland 400, France in the neighborhood of 150, Holland has between 500 and 600, Sweden more than 50, Norway and Denmark together nearly 200—there are some 40 associations in Asia scattered among the mission stations of Syria, Persia and Asia Minor—India has about 80 associations, that in Calcutta doing a wonderful work among the students, Japan has between 35 and 50, Africa about 20, and Oceanica between 20 and 30. There are 17 associations on the Island of Ceylon. There is a Young Men's Christian Association in Honolulu, which owns a fine building. There are eight or ten such organizations in China. Russia and Turkey must be included in this imperfect survey. From many of the countries here named representatives will come to the convention in Boston. There will be mechanics, farmers, clerks, lawyers, teachers, physicians, railroad engineers and conductors, bankers, railway presidents and preachers. There will be members of all Protestant denominations and Christians with no denominational affiliations.

In North America, that is, in the United States and Canada, there are, or were in 1899, 1,439 associations with a membership of considerably more than a quarter of a million. There is an army of officers and working committeemen of not less than 35,000. The associations of the United States and Canada own 360 buildings valued at over $21,000,000. This work began among commercial young men in London, Montreal, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, etc., etc. It now reaches students, railroad men, lumber men, miners, factory hands, soldiers and sailors, and colored young men of the student and industrial classes. It has also been discovered that the association work is as well adapted to boys who are all on the road to becoming young men as it is to any one class of young men themselves. Almost $3,000,000 of annual expenditure and $30,000,000 of permanent property constitute the financial situation of this movement at the beginning of the twentieth century.

The first world's conference of Young Men's Christian Associations was held in Paris in 1855. This conference agreed to the following declaration:

"The Young Men's Christian Associations seek to unite those young men who, regarding Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior, according to the Holy Scriptures, desire to be his disciples in their doctrine and in their life and to associate their efforts for the extension of his kingdom among young men."

The fact should be noted in this place, that the organization of which I speak is distinctively a laymen's movement. It was founded by a man who was not a preacher. From the beginning the leaders of this movement have been laymen. It is probable that this fact will account for the strong appeal that the associations have always made to business men. They have felt a sort of proprietorship in the movement and have found an outlet for the exercise of Christian activity such as had been afforded by few other religious organizations. Is it not also a fact that the Young Men's Christian Association was the pioneer of the great laymen's movement in the religious world?

This is a movement in the interest of Christian unity and union. The declaration of the Paris convention in 1855, quoted above, is placed in evidence. The foundation principle, also quoted in this letter—"Work by Christian Young Men for Young Men"—is in accord with this view. Any movement that brings Christian men face to face in worship and work is in the interest of such a unity as that for which our Lord prayed—and this is what this great organization does. In every city where it exists, its rooms are the places of meeting for all who believe in the Christ as their Lord. In these places the pastors assemble for conference and Sunday-school teachers to study their lessons. The Young Men's Christian Association is our common meeting place and thus it promotes Christian fellowship.

Some of the greatest evangelists of our time have been developed by the Young Men's Christian Association. The names of Moody, Whittle and Munhall, with their helpers in the service of song, I am sure, come to your mind. An evangelistic propaganda originated in the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, supported by such business men as John V. Farwell, the end of which is not yet. Bible readings now are popular, but the men who were prominent in the Chicago association led the way in this profitable service.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions sent W. M. Forrest to Calcutta, India, to labor among the students of that great university town. He found a place at which to begin work at once in the Young Men's Christian Association of Calcutta. As a Bible teacher he is doing a good work—a work of far reaching influence. Mr. John Campbell White is the secretary of the Calcutta association. Dr. Edward Abbott said last March: "I do not believe that there is anywhere in the Indian empire to-day a personality and a moral and spiritual force which offers greater results for Christ and his kingdom than the work of Mr. John Campbell White in Calcutta. It is unique, it is unconventional, it is specific, it is to the point, and with the blessing of God it must tell." And our own W. M. Forrest, supported by our own Christian Woman's Board of Missions, is a part of this work.

"The Deplorable Ignorance Concerning Modern Missions."

By C. J. Tannar.

1. Probably the most charitable view to take of the attitude of at least two-thirds of the Christian people of to-day towards missionary enterprises is to call it "deplorable ignorance." In some cases a different and severer term would, perhaps, be more nearly correct.

A glance at a little work put out by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society reveals some unpleasant facts. Ohio has some 584 churches and 317 gave last year to our foreign work. Out of Indiana's 889 churches, 337 gave. Illinois sent in offerings from 314 of her 792 churches. Missouri boasts of 1,642 churches and only 291 gave. Some weak states make a better showing. New York comes up with 36 out of 47; Minnesota, 29 out of 40; and Vermont 2 out of 2.

Of our churches having regular preaching all the time only two-thirds took up the offering. We might excuse this in churches with irregular or no preaching. Of the 3,067 churches which contributed, only 1,602 gave $10 or more. There seem to be indications all along the line of a need of more systematic instruction.

2. The material is abundant for such instruction as will remove all ignorance. A brief perusal of a recent catalogue of missionary literature, which lies on my study table, shows 1,500 publications, and the compiler of the list modestly prefaces with these words: "This list is by no means exhaustive, containing as it does only a little more than 1,500 entries. It is, rather, a list of literature selected from a mass of material as being in some sort representative of the missionary literary productions of the closing century." When we add on the magazines and newspapers and all the material being sent out by the various boards to the churches, it would seem little less than a crime for a Christian to be ignorant concerning modern missions.

Again, this material is not dry and tasteless. It reads like a romance. No books are more enchanting than those covering the lives of our great missionaries and the countries and peoples where they labor and the success of their efforts. Once opened, these books cannot be laid down. No other subject is so vitally related to all the great world problems of this age as that of modern missions. The missionary holds the key without which none of the doors of 20th century progress can be unlocked.

Be he Christian or Pagan no man can afford to be ignorant here.

3. This ignorance leads to more serious results than the mere depletion of our missionary treasuries, the starvation of our workers far away and the holding back of the kingdom of God in its world-wide advancement. It cripples the man and the church thus ignorant. It shuts off from the most intimate fellowship with Christ—working with him for the salvation of souls. It dwarfs Christian character and plucks stars out of many crowns. Failing to grasp this central fact of the gospel causes a partial or distorted view of the whole system.

4. When we look around for the one most responsible for this sad state of ignorance we must unhesitatingly lay hands on the preacher. When our preachers post up and teach and exhort with all long suffering and patience they will find a receptive people.

About Our Churches.

It was my privilege once more to be invited to preach the anniversary sermons and to lecture at the Church of Christ, Southampton. There are few towns in the world as beautiful as Southampton. To Americans it is one of the most important of English cities, seeing that it is the southern gateway to Britain, as Liverpool is the western, and Glasgow the northern. Southampton is a much lovelier place than these other ports, though it is much smaller, and nothing like so busy. But it is a combination of industry and beauty which is rarely to be discovered. It is old and new; historic and industrial; aristocratic and democratic; full of parks and gardens mixed up with quays and docks; and is one of the most religious spots in the land. Here in a sweet public park stands a noble statue to Dr. Isaac Watts, the finest hymn writer the world has yet seen, who for years preached in the town, making his everlasting renown there. Here also a yet living preacher made himself famous. Archdeacon Basil Wilberforce only a few years ago removed to London, after residing long at Southampton, where he was by far the most eloquent and popular pulpiteer. Every American visitor who can stay a few days at Southampton should do so, for he can thus take the precious opportunity of visiting the romantic region called the New Forest, which is nearly a thousand years old, notwithstanding its name, for it was planted by William the Conqueror, whose son William Rufus was shot by an arrow from the bow of Sir Walter Tyrrell, while deer hunting there, at a spot marked by a stone in the heart of the great sylvan retreat. Near by this part of the coast is the exquisitely lovely Isle of Wight, where I trust we may some day plant a few churches of Christ. I found our beloved American brother, Leslie Morgan, supremely happy with his people. He preaches in the fine building situated in the best street of the town, erected by the late Timothy Coop. In every department of the work the church is prospering, and the prospect was never so bright. The property is equal to any that we have in England, and must be worth fully ten thousand pounds. So much is being raised this year towards the liquidation of the debt that it is likely to be improved off the face of the earth, and then one more of our churches will be happily free. We are looking forward to the not distant date when all the English churches will thus be emancipated, and then will follow a great extension of the enterprise. At Southampton during the year there has been an addition of 28 members. Minister and people are evidently much attached to each other. This church was founded by H. S. Earl, who will like to know that on the basis which he so soundly established is rising such a superstructure.

Lancaster.

Amongst my best correspondents is that estimable minister of Christ, Bro. J. H. Versey, pastor of the Church of Christ at Lancaster, the important and historic old county town of Lancashire, and the centre of the chief manufacturing district of England. From him I have just had the joy of receiving a long description of the present state of his happy sphere of ministerial labor. It is a rosy account, and is full of most encouraging details. There is just now in England a craze for "so many souls and so many guineas." The Wesleyans are clamoring for "a million souls and a million guineas," this first year of the twentieth century. I trust they may get both, though I do not much admire the coupling of the categories in that way. The material and the spiritual do not seem to make exactly the right sort of mixture. A guinea a soul is much too cheap for the heavenly market. If the Wesleyan friends could win a million souls they ought to be so far inflamed with the spirit of sacrifice and gratitude as to sing the doxology to a collection of a hundred million golden guineas. I am glad to hear that Bro. Versey has been succeeding both spiritually and materially, securing blessings in the way of conversions and gathering the means for steadily reducing the debt. As it is almost impossible to put up church buildings without debt, the usual fate of a church and its pastor is to spend the first years in laborious and continuous efforts to build up the spiritual community while gradually paying off the liabilities.

The May Meetings.

The month of May is poetically ideal, and even bears the reputation of consisting of days as of heaven on earth. But in prosaic fact May is a fickle and perilous time. It is a mocking-bird among the months. While I am writing these lines the sunshine is flooding my little study; but when I arose early this morning the skies were murky and the world looked dismal, while the atmosphere was almost wintry in its temperature. Perhaps by the time I have ended this letter the chill will recur. I long for June, the "lady month," when the whole of this country bursts forth into efflorescence, and all England is one vast bower of roses whose beauty gushes on right through the summer. No country is so delicious in summer as England. There is one delightful feature of the English May. It is the chosen period of religious assemblies. At Exeter Hall, Queen's Hall, the Memorial Hall, the Lord Mayor's Mansion House, St. James' Hall, and the Great Church Houses, immense denominational and undenominational meetings gather, thousands of good folks coming up to London from every district to patronize the different societies. This year the crowd seems greater than ever. It is a noble crowd. Every face beams with the radiant light of soul-goodness within. In my next letter, when more of the great meetings have been held, I will allude to some of them.

The Decay of Optimism.

I am somewhat sadly impressed with the frequency of pessimistic articles in recent Anglo-Saxon literature, British, colonial and American. It seems to me that of late a very morbid and melancholy accent prevails in current literature. The great novelists like Marie Corelli, in her "Master Christian," and Hall Caine, in his tale, "The Christian," almost entirely limit their delineations to the darker side of the proclivities of human nature, while they pre e nt every form of popular religion which they treat upon in a miserable aspect. Is this justifiable? I for one do not think so; but then I am by individuality of temperament an incorrigibly sunny optimist, and therefore I am naturally out of sympathy with all the new Schopenhauerists and Hartmannists. Nevertheless, I am bound to allow that the alleged "Decay of Optimism,"—much as I dislike the admission—is a palpable fact. The artists at the new Royal Academy, just opened, are in too many instances manifestly pessimistic, though there are not lacking some glorious bright pictures. I note that the most popular of our preachers are all lapsing into an approximate despair. Perhaps my American readers have not noticed this so much in their own preachers. The money-market is under the spell of greed. Statesmen are practising unworthy compromise with the devil of expediency. Armies and navies are as truly centres of corruption and venality as are all the civil service bureaucracies. Success is being adored and piled-up dollars are the holy hills of the worldly Zion. Not long ago the extreme optimistic fallacy was so securely fixed in the hearts and minds of the average members of the community that for an artist or a writer to attempt tragedy, or for a preacher to discourse only about the ills of life, was almost a warrant of originality. But now every scribbler of ephemeral fiction prides himself on a contemptuous rejection of "happy endings." Even in almost any present-day melodrama one of the most attractive and youthful characters is sure to be made to sacrifice himself in the otherwise successful effort to save the life of the heroine. In the good old days he would certainly have been allotted a suitable spouse with whom we should have been free to imagine him as living happily ever afterwards. A book is being circulated in the libraries for which there is a desperate craze. It is published anonymously, and is called "The Letters of Elizabeth." The object of this abominable work, written, it is shameful to note, by a woman, is to represent all "good society" as such a sink of profligacy that "Elizabeth" in all her letters to her own mother is constantly describing the attempts of people at houses she visits to degrade her. So one writer after another is morbidly professing to see in modern society only a terrestrial vestibule to the nether hell. Dr. Parker has of late taken to frequent denunciation and lamentation; and I note also in the recent sermons of your Hillis, Parkhurst, and Talmage much more than heretofore of declamation against what man is and does, rather than of dissertation on what God is and does. The sting of life is being felt more painfully, especially by all the timid folk who fear to grasp the nettles of temptation and adversity. In place of the optimistic convention of the early Victorian era, a pessimistic convention has arisen which is almost equally fallacious. Life is not all gloom and terror. This modern harping on one string, and that a very dreary one, must have some cause. What is it? I think the reason lies in the lack of certitude arising from the popular misapprehension of the gospel. Christianity is distorted by sectism, and a distorted Christianity is twisting the public intelligence out of the simplicity of Christ. The nations are not paying heed to the teachings of Christ so much as to those of the doctors in the temples of philosophy. But if they would turn from these rabbis of confused legend and tradition and hearken only to the Master, the prospect would soon be irradiated by the gleams of truth. I mark that a new writer says that the new optimism is going to prove a truer and deeper thing than the old, because it fully realizes the depth of the shadows which the old optimism pretended not to see. I do not pretend to know what is meant by the new optimism, but this every simple follower of Jesus knows, that the only sound optimism and the only antidote to pessimism is to be found in the New Testament.

Columbia University—I

By R. P. SHEPHERD.

It is to be regretted that so little has been made known through our papers of the character and advantages of this, the second largest of America's universities. Many of our young people are seeking what may be gained in higher education, and different universities have received their patronage. Yale and Harvard have been much written up, and, through the Disciples' Divinity House, the University of Chicago has had frequent and favorable mention. Very few Disciples have enrolled in Columbia, and little or nothing has appeared in our publications to turn attention this way. Because of this, a brief sketch of Columbia's career may be justified.

In 1754, George II chartered Kings College. Fifteen years later it established the first medical school in America. The stirring scenes of the Revolution made continuous sessions of the college impossible and its buildings were used as a hospital. When the college reopened at the close of the war it took the name Columbia, the first official use of that word known.

In 1857 its location "down town" became unsuited for its work and it was moved to Madison Avenue between Forty-ninth and Fiftieth streets. Forty years' growth by both city and college made this site, too, inadequate. The beautiful site on Harlem Heights was chosen, and the spot made historic by the first successful battle of the Revolution wears a most fitting crown. It needed more than a century for the seed sown in the blood of our sires to ripen in gracious fruitage, but the group of buildings consecrated to mercy, memory, and culture, are worthy children of the life poured out upon that rocky soil. Grant's monument marks the north end of the group, and twelve blocks south is rising in stately majesty the great cathedral of St. John the Divine. St. Luke's Hospital lends delicate and lofty beauty to the scene. Columbia's quadrangle lies midway between, and, fronting on 116th St., it adds completeness to the entire field. The library building is a memorial to Abiel Abbott Low, and about it are grouped the remaining structures. Standing to the south from the middle of the quadrangle, and facing south, its front forms the center of what is perhaps the most perfect architectural picture on the continent. No brief description can convey an adequate idea of it. Resembling somewhat the approaches to, and the front of, the Capitol at Washington, its general symmetry, harmony of outline, perfect subordination of details, and wholesome impressiveness far surpass those of the Capitol. It is never monotonous nor wearisome to look upon, but is, on the contrary, of pleasing restfulness to the eye.

The remaining buildings of the University, except the College of Physicians and Surgeons, are of uniform architecture and extend about the side of the quadrangle, forming, when taken together, as noble and imposing a group as can anywhere be seen.

The change in location added about eight million dollars to the value of Columbia's plant. Aside from the indebtedness of three million dollars which is yet unprovided for, the value of her buildings and other unproductive endowment is approximately ten million dollars. In addition to this she has productive endowment to the amount of ten and a half millions.

Seth Low, Columbia '70, was installed as president of the college in 1890. His work has witnessed, in large part caused, a phenomenal development. Not until 1896 was the institution made in name what it had long been in reality, a university. Realizing that a university must fulfil the expectations aroused by its name, President Low met with hearty co-operation on the part of trustees and faculty in his efforts to emphasize and enlarge the university phase of Columbia's work. Graduate work was broadened and strengthened, attempts were made to equalize and co-ordinate the work of the several schools, specialists were put forward or called in as instructors, and the end constantly aimed at that the degrees from American universities should embrace as much work and confer as much honor as those granted by the universities of Germany or England. In this most praiseworthy ambition Columbia is now joined by other prominent institutions, and by the end of this generation, American scholarship may not doff its hat in deference to the products of any of the old world's institutions of learning.

To encourage and stimulate scholarship Columbia offers twenty-eight fellowships worth six hundred and fifty dollars each, and thirty-eight scholarships worth one hundred and fifty dollars each. These honors are awarded on reasonable conditions, merit being the basis chiefly, so far as that can be ascertained. Preference is given to younger men and those who have no means of support. No young man of honor and industry need fear that his talents will pass unrecognized, for Columbia, as all other institutions of learning, will be largely known and judged by the character of the men who leave her halls to represent her in the world of thought and action. She knows this and she seeks the best. The close personal relation which is sought by many of the professors gives open evidence of this, and it will be a surprise to those who think of a university professor as being, of necessity, a literary aristocrat.

Expenses at Columbia are somewhat higher than at most of the other universities, but it may be questioned if she does not return more to the student for what he pays than any similar institution in the country. Her gymnasium is the finest and most thoroughly equipped to be found anywhere; her library facilities are unexcelled; her professors are authorities in their several departments and are moved by deep personal interest in their students; Earl Hall, now in process of erection, is to be used by the Y. M. C. A., and by all other religious organizations of whatever faith or creed, and will be to the religious life of the university what Phillips Brooks House is to Harvard; her situation is incomparable, and the spirit of the institution puts her well to the front in any movement which aims to dignify, exalt, and render useful to its age the scholarship of the land.

Barnard College, a college for women, and Teachers College, a professional school for teachers, were incorporated into the educational system of the university in January and May of 1900. Barnard College graduates are admitted on equal terms with those of Columbia College as candidates for higher degrees in the university. Barnard students are given the privilege of all the university affords, including undisturbed possession of the gymnasium at stated times. Fronting the quadrangle on the west, between the boulevard and Riverside drive, with the Palisades as the western background for a beautiful scene, the location of Barnard leaves little to be desired.

Teachers College is of national reputation. Its graduates are sought for, being as well tutored and equipped as is possible. The building fronts the quadrangle on the north, and is one of the most elaborately furnished and beautiful of the entire group. Strictly normal work of all grades is afforded, from kindergarten to high school. Its equipment comprises everything from "blocks" to fine arts of all descriptions. Man fashion, the writer was most interested in the outfit of the department of "Domestic Economy," as the culinary department is called. Everything, in fact, which a school-ma'am should know, from hemstitching to the precise amount of energy to be expended in applying the ferrule, is amply provided for, and it is not to be wondered at that positions seek its graduates.

Aside from all these institutions whose educational interests are incorporated directly with those of the university, Union Theological Seminary is in affiliation with it and the students of each institution enjoy the reciprocal advantages thus afforded.

Provision must be made for the indebtedness already mentioned, and besides this, she needs a chapel, a more adequate building for housing the college, sufficient funds to finish University Hall, upon which work has had to be stopped for lack of means, and she needs athletic grounds badly. The college paper has been unremitting in its appeals for this latter addition, and the undergraduates are a unit in counting this the one supreme and indispensable element of success which is yet lacking.

Like all other successful enterprises, when once an institution is embarked upon the sea of wide and ever widening usefulness there is never a time when opportunities will fail to be presented and larger expenditure demanded. Columbia is commending herself, thanks to the united efforts of president, trustees and faculty, to the favor of New York's public spirited citizens, and with her present needs met and future enlargement provided for, Columbia University is bound to stand in the front rank of this country's educational institutions in all-round scholarship and general efficiency. The concerted movement now being made by the universities and by the Federation of Graduate Clubs to raise the standard of all academic degrees, and particularly that of Ph. D. with those of similar grade, may in the end transfer the burden Germany has so long borne, as the center of scholarship, to younger shoulders.

What Most Interests Me Now.

XIV.—The Unexampled Life.

I have already hinted at the peculiar difficulty, judging from our point of view, of leading a life that should be consistent with the two claims which the Christ came to establish—that he was one with God, and also that he was one with man. To human thinking it would seem that the proof of the one would be the disproof of the other; that if his life demonstrated that he was God, he could not be truly man—that the human would be so exalted and glorified in the divine as to be beyond recognition as our human nature. And vice versa. Our difficulty in the preconception of such a life results from the fact that we conceive it as a dramatic representation in which two distinct characters must be represented, now one and now the other, by the same person. But this is not the truth. Such a portraiture would be historically unreal and affected. It would represent acting and seeming rather than living and being, and this, indeed, would have been embarrassing and difficult. But to Christ the course to be pursued involved no problem and presented no difficulty. He was the Word, which was God—and he was made flesh. And he simply and only and always was unaffectedly true—true to himself, to his nature, to his mission. In feeling and purpose, in word and in deed, his life was simply genuine, unaffected, unstudied and spontaneous—the absolutely honest life of a true man—such a life as God himself in man would lead. If he was content with plain food, and to trust in God for that, it was because he preferred the greater to the less, and he felt in himself and therefore knew that the life was more than the food. If he chose to be a poor man, with none of this world's goods, it was because he preferred the essential to the circumstantial—and a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. If for nearly thirty years he earned his daily food by the labor of his own hands, it was because this was the true way to live, the way that God intended, and, therefore, the manliest, the noblest, the trustfulest and the best—and thus too he could enter into fullest sympathy with the trials and struggles of the toiling multitudes. He was one of them. He could feel for them in their troubles, and know from his own experience what they needed and how best to help them.

In due time he entered upon his public ministry, responding to the call which he felt within him to relieve the distressed, to instruct the ignorant and save the lost. Everything was unstudied and spontaneous, and seemingly there was no thought of distinguishing the human and the divine, one from the other. It was not distinctively human sympathy, it was divine-human sympathy, so sincerely felt, so truly shown, that drew to him the sick, the helpless and the sorrowing; nor was it distinctively divine, it was divine-human power, that healed and comforted and blessed. The one man, Christ Jesus, was himself the one Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, in whom dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. Hence the perfect naturalness and truth and consistency of the whole life. It was wonderful. With all his divine fullness he dwelt among us as a man—growing, developing, unfolding, from infancy to manhood; experiencing our infirmities and griefs and subject to our temptations; he hungered and thirsted and slept; he became tired and he rested; he felt dependent and trustful and he prayed; he exercised upon occasion human prudence—he avoided the murderous Herod; he more than once left Jerusalem to escape from the Jews; he told Simon Peter to pay the temple tax, lest we cause them to stumble, and though he miraculously fed the five thousand, he was careful to direct the gathering of the fragments, that nothing be lost. It was only thus, by entering vitally into the very stream of human life and experience, feeling its infirmities and limitations, and becoming subject to its law, that he could be truly man. At the same time, it was because he was God, humbling himself to these conditions and voluntarily clothing himself with our nature, that he could do the works of God—works which none other did—mighty works and wonders and signs which God did by him. "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

And not only did he manifest the mighty power of God, he also displayed his perfect and unerring wisdom, his divine goodness, his tender mercy, his boundless love. The question, then, is: Did he worthily represent the character? Did he truly exhibit the nature and attributes, the mind and heart and purpose, of God? Did he live the life of God? Such a life as the very God would have lived had he incarnated himself in man? We have been trying to prepare ourselves to answer these questions by walking, as it were, with God through the limitless ages of the past—contemplating his purposes, noting his wisdom, observing his works and wondering at his thoughts and his ways—and for myself, as I stand before the Christ, I feel that he is the visible image of the invisible God, the brightness of his glory, God himself manifest in the flesh, and with the deepest conviction of my soul and the truest worship of my heart I can say, "My Lord and my God." It may not be best, and it is frequently unwise, to express one's faith in these high mysteries in other than inspired words, but the conjunctive phrase first used by Origen seems so true to the conjunctive facts of his sacred person and work that I can, with good conscience, adopt it as most succinctly and truly expressive of my own deep and earnest conviction: I believe that he was Theanthropos, THE GOD-MAN.

A Bit of Country Road

By W. E. GARRISON

The habit of taking bicycle trips, once formed, is not easily broken. There is considerable difference in scale between a world-girdling tour and what the English call a "week-end" trip in the country, but the impulse which prompts them is the same—the desire to find rest in vigorous action, and recreation in a constant change of scene. Circumstances must determine the magnitude of the trip. When one's vacation shrinks from four months to four days, the exploration of remote corners of Europe must be abandoned; but there are highways and byways in Missouri as unspoiled by tourists as Finland or the villages in the Apennines. My last bicycle I left in the hands of a Laplander on the shore of the Arctic Ocean, but there are other wheels to be bought—and bought cheap, thanks to the waning popularity of the bicycle among the mere faddists.

So it came to pass that, a few days ago, I bumped southward over the cobblestones of Broadway seeking an exit from St. Louis. St. Louis has beautiful streets but South Broadway is not one of them. Its chief virtue is its location, for after the first mile or two from the heart of the city, it is the nearest street to the cliffs which rise abruptly from the Mississippi, so that the land between has the advantage of a double front on street and river. It is a source of constant wonder that the residence portion of the city has not expanded in the direction of these magnificent sites. Perhaps the presence of the great breweries in this region may have been the deterrent.

A short ride through the squalid lower streets of our southern suburb, Carondelet, and the street crosses the River Des Peres and becomes a country road. The dividing line between city and country here is almost as sharp as it is on entering or leaving a walled town and one instantly has the sensation of being out in the big world and under the blue sky, with plenty of air to breathe and plenty of room to shout if one pleases. Perhaps this is the most joyous feature of a vacation trip anywhere—not the actual shouting, but the sense of being free to do it if you want to—and no tour can be wholly a failure in which this sensation is prominent at the very start. The higher buildings of the city are still in sight from every hill-top long after one has begun to feel that he is far away in terra incognita.

It is fine, high-lying, rolling land in this part of St. Louis County, with little timber and many fields, and the De Soto Pike stretches away in long undulations with the dignity and self-confidence of a road which does not mean to lure you out into the country and then leave you, as so many of our roads do, but promises to stay with you at least to the next city. It is just such landscape as one sees on the South Downs of Dorset. But here there are no flocks of sheep dotting the pastures and occasionally blocking the road as on the English downs, and here the traveler must be content with ham and eggs thrice daily in lieu of south-down mutton. Most of the farms here are given over to market-gardening and at this hour, near noon, there is a long procession of empty market-wagons returning drowsily from the city. Some of them come from as far as twenty miles out in the country and these must start as early as 9 P. M. with their produce for the next day's market, for the wholesale business is all done long before sunrise. It means an all-night drive every night for the market men, and their nodding, sleepy figures sway to and fro on the wagon-seats, while the teams drive themselves.

There are few towns along this road, but for the first few miles road-houses are frequent, at one of which I paused for dinner. The primary function of the road-house is to dispense malt, vinous and distilled beverages, but the proprietor is usually prepared to receive a traveler at his own table for a meal. So I sat down with the "barkeep" in his shirt-sleeves and began the regime of ham and eggs which was to be continued, with only slight interruptions, throughout the tour. My friend the barkeep turned out to be a rather intelligent fellow in his way and, as I later discovered, a county official in St. Louis County. His little girl, in reply to my question, said she thought the scenery around there was very pretty, but that Jefferson County (to the south) had no scenery at all because there was nothing there but high hills and woods. She did not sympathize with the suggestion that hills and woods might be the ingredients of very fair scenery.

The road rolls on in gentle waves, deep with dust and bright with sunshine, but always high and commanding a wide view of undulating fields and pastures. So strong was the resemblance to the south coast of England that I could not rid myself of the impression that presently, passing a higher ridge than usual, I would catch sight of the blue waters of the Channel. But even the Mississippi is now beyond view and no water is encountered until the road crosses the Meramec River near its mouth—a fine wholesome stream which turns one's fancy at once to thoughts of canoes and camping trips.

The Meramec is the boundary of Jefferson County, that fearsome land where there is "nothing but high hills and woods." True enough, the gentle slopes of Dorset are soon succeeded by the sharper grades of Kent and the first ten miles south of the Meramec River is enough like the country between Canterbury and Dover to have been cut from the same piece. Gradually the proportion of cultivated land decreases and the amount of uncleared forest increases. There are no more road-houses and only at intervals a country store, selling everything from harrows to hair-pins and serving also as the post office for the district. Some of these places have names on the map and one might easily be deceived into expecting to find a town at the point indicated.

In riding through a fairly settled country for half a day without encountering even a village, one is impressed with a characteristic difference between European and American country life. In Germany, Italy or Russia the farmers live in villages, from which they go out to their fields each morning and to which they return at night. There are few isolated farm houses. With us, on the contrary, each farmer lives on the land which he tills. The purely agricultural village does not exist, and a town means commerce or manufacture. Perhaps it is an indication of the independence and self-reliance of the American spirit that the farmers do not huddle together in villages for mutual protection.

Higher and higher grow the hills, thicker the woods and rougher the roads. Now the landscape has lost all similitude to these English counties and suggests rather the abrupt and wooded hills of some parts of Norway. Here, as in Telemarken, the road plunges up and down with little regard for anybody's convenience, least of all for the wheelman's.

The afternoon was spent in alternate wrestling with these hills and lying in cool and shady spots to read in the little volume which I carried in my pocket for that purpose. No touring cyclist should be without some such aid to restful contemplation, and a handy volume of a favorite poet or out-of-door essayist is the best thing. Scott and Wordsworth are good for such use. Mabie's essays on "Nature and Culture" and Burroughs' "Outdoor Studies" read well on a breezy hill-top, and Van Dyke's "Little Rivers" and "Fisherman's Luck" would be incomparable if their form were more convenient for the pocket.

At the end of this afternoon, a rush down a hill and a climb up a hill brought me into the town of Hillsboro, a county seat with only 250 inhabitants. It is the sort of town where the men gather in the court house yard in the evening and play croquet until it is so dark that they have to put handkerchiefs on the wickets.

From Hillsboro down to De Soto the road is more civilized and the country more populous. It was a warm and thirsty afternoon as I rode that way and, as six weeks of drouth had dried most of the springs, there was a plausible pretext to stop at almost every house for a drink of water and incidentally to talk with the people. And there are no people better worth talking with than these Missouri farmers. Most of them down this way live in log cabins and prosperity seems not to have come to them as a permanent guest, but their interests are broad, their wits keen and their hospitality unfailing. My progress was necessarily slow, being thus interrupted by visits to all the people along the road.

Of a Sunday stop at De Soto, little need be said except that I found the church there zealous and harmonious, and witnessed the Children's Day exercises, which were both ambitiously conceived and creditably executed. De Soto is a growing little city with its business houses in a valley and its suburbs hung up over adjacent hills. It has no need yet for street cars, but a system of elevators would be a convenience.

From St. Louis to this point there is a definite road, the De Soto pike, which, with all its faults, is one of the best roads in the state. But south of De Soto for some distance there are only mountain roads, with those peculiarities of surface and grade which unworked mountain roads usually present. Too much might be said against them, but it is at least no exaggeration to say that it is no place for century runs. First the road starts off up the creek—not simply in the valley but actually in the bed of the creek—and for some miles flounders back and forth across that gravelly expanse, now on one side, now on the other, of the slender rivulet which trickles down where a torrent dashes in the early spring. Now and again the road emerges upon solid ground, but only for a moment, and then dives once more into the creek. I mention this not in criticism, but in praise. It was a highly interesting road and was far more agreeable to me than any park boulevard can be.

Presently the so-called "main road" disengaged itself from its entangling alliance with the creek-bed and rambled off up the hill to one side—a fact which I did not discover until I had gone on a mile or two farther in company with this interesting creek. A passing horseman, who declared that he knew "every blamed hog-path and log cabin from here to Texas County," gave me elaborate directions how to take a series of cross-country cart-tracks and come in on the "main road" without going back. The directions might well have been less elaborate, for they amounted simply to the advice to keep an eye on the sun and steer as nearly as possible southwest, up hill and down—which I did with the desired result. Far be it from me to dispute my friend's boasted acquaintance with the hog-paths of this region and now, having ridden over the roads by which he directed me, I think that I too have a fair idea of the hog-paths of Jefferson County.

Here and there in the woods, usually on a hilltop with a magnificent view, was a clearing with a log house and a garden patch and at each of these places again I stopped to talk with the people and get as much as possible of their view of life and the world. The "main road," when at last I came into it, proved to be not much better than the others—a mere track through the gravelly clay. Little lively lizards shot back and forth across the road just as they do in the Campagna about Rome—though these were brownish black while the little Roman lizards are green like tarnished bronze—and the rustle of them could almost always be heard in the bushes at the sides of the road.

After an indefinite number of miles of this sort of thing, the road plunges into Big River which, though rather broad, is fortunately not too deep at present to ford, and beyond that the road again takes to the bed of a creek as before—only this one is blue with the waste from the lead mills and looks as if it could be used for paint if only it were thinned out a little—and so in due time one comes to the town of Bonne Terre.

Bonne Terre is noted for three things: its complete departure from the usual pattern of Missouri towns in the arrangement of its streets; its hotel; and its lead mines. It is a town without a center. In whatever part of the town one may be, one has the sensation of being on the edge. Its streets run at all angles and there is no point at which its few shops are collected more than at another. If any point could be considered the center, it would be the vicinity of the hotel and the lead works, though these are both on the outskirts. The hotel—I refer to the Shepard House—unlike what one would expect in a mining town, has those delightful qualities of quietness, coziness and homelikeness which one finds at a good English inn but seldom at an American hotel. Few of our hotel-keepers have yet learned that cheerfulness and comfort can exist apart from magnificence. But here in Bonne Terre the problem is solved almost as perfectly as by the best innkeepers in England or Norway, and the white-haired proprietress presides with a mien suggestive at once of grandmotherly hospitality and the dignity of the president of a woman's club.

One does not need to go as far as Joplin to find lead mines in Missouri, for this region is rich in that mineral. I spent an afternoon in the lead works, in company with a genial piano salesman, who knew all the employees and had sold pianos or organs to most of them. It was a striking illustration of the prosperity of the American workman to see mechanics and engineers and even grimy furnace-men come up to talk about their pianos and say whether they needed tuning or not.

The reduction of lead from crude ore to pure metal is an interesting process, and after half a day of observation and inquiry I learned to talk rather glibly about "jigs," "bumping-tables," "chat," "draws" and "slag." This superficial acquaintance produced an unexpected effect the next day when I was going through another lead mill at Flat River. After conversing for a quarter of an hour with one of the workmen about certain of the processes, he asked very respectfully, "What mine are you with, sir?" The superintendent of that Flat River mine, to whom I applied for permission to go down one of the shafts, said that only employees were now allowed to descend into the mine. I asked for a job for, say, half a day and offered to work cheap, but he was not to be moved. It only shows how hard it may be for a willing and able-bodied man to find work, in spite of Prof. Wycoff's experiences.

The Flat River district is not beautiful, but the underground part of it is rich. Above ground it is arid and dusty. The mining towns are almost near enough to touch, and the sun beats down on thousands of tiny, unshaded cottages which seem to have sprung up from a broadcast sowing over the hills.

The mines furnish occupation not only for the laborers of this region but for the lawyers, and one may go into the courthouse at Farmington on almost any court day and find a mining suit in progress. A very interesting one was on when I dropped in. A miner had been killed while being hoisted from a shaft by a contrivance which was not in accordance with the requirements of the law. The company was being sued for damages and the attorneys for the defendant were trying to prove contributory negligence. Some very shrewd lawyering was being done. The law may have its disadvantages as a profession, but as a game of intellectual skill it is far and away the best thing ever invented. Neither chess nor duplicate whist can touch it.

The wheelman may be interested to know that there are some good roads in St. Francois and Iron counties—and some not so good. From Farmington by Pilot Knob to Ironton is an easy afternoon ride involving no special difficulty. The latter place was a blaze of glory when I entered it. The Knights of Pythias were having an annual district assembly with races, speeches, picnic and fireworks, and special trains had brought in every one for fifty miles around who could raise a dollar. The whole town was bending its energies toward reaping this harvest. The road into town was lined with booths and counters for the sale of sandwiches and pie. Porches were transformed into lemonade stands. There were flags wherever there was not bunting, and a gorgeous "WELCOME" dangled across the main street. The Presbyterian ladies served supper in the basement of their church—with ice cream for dessert, as announced by their scarlet-clad, bell-ringing crier: "Come on, this way fo' yo' good Presbyterium suppah. You know you a-a-all like ice cream-m-m. Come on!" The Baptist ladies and the Methodist ladies served supper in the court house yard and invoked the patronage of their respective co-religionists by equally potent appeals. Happily no interdenominational friction arose, for there were plenty of patrons to go around.

Then, about sunset on that sultry day, when these open-air refectories were at their busiest, the thunder clouds rolled up and the windows of heaven were opened after a six weeks' drouth and the rains fell. There was the wild rush for the cover of trees and tents, the first satisfaction at being in a dry place, and the after-clap of consternation when it was found that the cover leaked. The colors of the bunting faded and ran, especially the red, and ladies of gentle and benign countenance went about in crimson-stained garments which would have convicted them of murder. Then the rain stopped. The sun peeped out a moment before he sank, lighting Pilot Knob with his last rays, and the wet and weary crowd bought another sack of peanuts and gradually straggled off to the station in hopes of finding a dry place to sit down and wait for the midnight train.

Feeling that whatever came next could not be other than an anti-climax after the moist hilarity of this festal day, I here brought to an end my brief vacation ramble through this corner of imperial Missouri.

The Wanderer.

Upon a mountain height, far from the sea,
I found a shell;
And to my listening ear the lonely thing
Ever a song of the ocean seemed to sing,
Ever a tale of ocean seemed to tell.

How came the shell upon that mountain height?
Ah, who can say?
Whether there dropped by some too careless hand,
Or whether there cast when ocean swept the land,
Ere the Eternal had ordained the day.

Strange, was it not? Far from its native deep,
One song it sang—
Sang of the awful mysteries of the tide,
Sang of the misty sea, profound and wide,
Ever with echoes of the ocean rang.

And as the shell upon the mountain height
Sings of the sea,
So do I ever, leagues and leagues away—
So do I ever, wandering where I may,
Sing, O my home! sing, O my home! of thee.

Current Literature.

"On Knowing Your Missionary."

The following from "The Contributors' Club," in the current number of the Atlantic Monthly, exhibits a hitherto unemphasized phase of the controversy over the deeds and misdeeds of foreign missionaries. It is too good and too true to be lost to our readers:

"Mark Twain has announced the verdict that the missionary's head is not so good as his heart, and that he is liable to errors of judgment. The tu quoque argument is always embarrassing, but, really, dear and honored Mark, have you not described in those words your own predicament? Your swift attack upon what you conceived to be outrageous wrong has made us like you even better than before, but could there be a more grave error of judgment than your readiness to pronounce sentence upon very scanty knowledge of the facts? When you lay bare the cant and hypocrisy of civilized nations, we applaud the moral courage that speaks the truth as it sees it, regardless of the popular fashion of the hour. But when you castigate American missionaries, please remember that they are the pride of a missionary-producing people. Some of us plain stay-at-homes, who have never had your opportunity for traveling around the world, are persuaded that we know the American missionaries rather better than you do. We were brought up with them, have summered and wintered with them, have gone through school and college with them, have read letters from them and written letters to them all our lives. We have contributed hard cash—the Lord knows it was little enough!—to help them in their work; have welcomed them home on rare vacations, and bidden them Godspeed when they returned. Missionaries? Professional globe trotters and correspondents speak of them as a bloodless, sexless, inefficient order of beings, living on charity, and never getting at the facts of foreign politics or the real temper of foreign peoples. But we know better. There is scarcely a town in New England where foreign missionaries are not as well known as the village postmaster. We raise missionaries!

"The writer never saw a missionary at work in the foreign field, but he has fished, and shot, and sailed, and tramped, and forgathered with dozens of them here. William S., you of the West Coast mission now, do you remember pulling No. 2 in that heart-breaking race so long ago? Billy M., of Asia Minor, you have forgotten how you surreptitiously gave me your blanket that freezing night on Greylock, but I have not. . . . And you, scholarly, book-loving S., who, with your wife and child, are holding your solitary post at the far end of Alaska, where the steamer touches but once a year,—Mark Twain may think your heart is better than your head, but I should be satisfied if I had either.

"As for the missionary women, I have frankly lost my heart to more than one of them. Bright-eyed, brave, soft-voiced little strategists, I have heard you tell the story of Armenian massacres when you cared, single-handed, for hundreds of refugees; the story of famines in India, when you were quartermaster general. Only the other day I had the pleasure of lunching with one of you who toiled side by side with the Rev. Mr. Ament through the siege of Pekin, and know him as only those who have faced death together can know each other. If you or he were more bent upon procuring food and shelter for your homeless converts than you were upon getting favorable press notices, it was the sort of error in judgment that does you infinite honor."

June Magazines.

The Century opens with an article (from which we have already reprinted a section) on "Working One's Way Through College," showing the many employments which are open to self-supporting students, and depicting the attitude of the college authorities and the student bodies of various institutions toward the working student. Much of the real spirit of a college, and the essence of its social life and traditions, can be understood better by looking at them from this point of view than from any other. The average of expenditure among students is perhaps higher than it ever was before, but there are also more facilities for working one's way. The article will be of value to every impecunious prospective college student. President Hadley, of Yale, in an article on "Alleged Luxury Among College Students," says that luxurious living at college is dangerous as a deterrent from serious work rather than as an incentive to vice. He believes that it is more wholesome for a student to spend his college years in an atmosphere and society where wealth is present, but correctly estimated as a matter of secondary importance, than in a place where every manifestation of wealth is rigorously and artificially restrained. Ex-President Cleveland writes the first of two articles on the Venezuelan boundary controversy; and, apropos of the semi-centennial, there is an article on the Y. M. C. A. in Europe.

Washington Gladden writes in the North American Review on "The Outlook for Christianity," in which he states, in a popular and sketchy manner, the progress of Christianity to date in numbers, works and thought, and its present prospects. R. de Cesare, member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, has an article on "The Pope and the Temporal Power," replying to Archbishop Ireland's recent article advocating the restoration of the Pope's sovereignty. It is a sound and lucid argument, from a Catholic point of view, against bolstering up the Pope's spiritual authority with temporal dominion. A series of ingenious and plausible guesses into the social and industrial changes of the next hundred years, especially such as concern life in the great cities, is contained in H. G. Wells' "Anticipations: An Experiment in Prophecy." Goldwin Smith, who seems to have become unusually prolific of late, has an article on "The Irish Question," in which he opposes the home-rule policy.

Mr. Horwill's article on "The Opportunity of the Small College" in the Atlantic Monthly is a plea for the small college as a permanently necessary element in our educational system. The writer points out the need for a more exact distinction between the college and the university, and would hold the former to a sphere similar to that of the German gymnasium with no considerable application of the elective system, while the latter is to be devoted to the training of specialists. The relation of the college to the university is aptly expressed thus: "One is to make iron into steel, the other steel into tools." The writer is a strong believer in holding the college curriculum to the old "humanities"—the classics and philosophy—and does not believe in such innovations as modern languages and laboratory science. The correctness of this latter position seems more than doubtful, but happily it does not affect his main contention for a sharp distinction between the college and the university.

Henry Norman's article on Finland in Scribner's is an illustration of how good an article may be written about a country by one who has apparently not seen much of it. There is no internal evidence that Mr. Norman has ever seen any part of Finland except the narrow strip at the south edge between St. Petersburg and Helsingfors, but his discussion of the present situation in Finland, especially with regard to its political relation to Russia, is eminently intelligent. In the same magazine Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson tells the life story of "Krag the Kootenay Ram" in a style similar to the biography of Wabh, the Grizzly. There is also another of the Amateur Cracksman stories, the illustrations of which by Mr. Yohn, both in this and preceding numbers, deserve particular consideration, and an article on the Scottish University, a subject brought into particular notice with the American public by Mr. Carnegie's recent gift. Senator Hoar writes on oratory, maintaining that the place of the orator is not now, and never can be, taken by the newspaper, and giving some practical suggestions for effective speech-making.

If Slugs,

Even Harder than a Prize Fighter.

A newspaper man is subject to trials and tribulations the same as ordinary mortals Coffee "slugs" a great many of them.

D. Beidleman, on the Wilkes Barre Record says regarding his experience with coffee, "A little over two years ago I was on the verge of collapse superinduced by the steady grind of the newspaper office. For weeks I did not have a night's sound sleep and the wakeful nights were followed by despondency and a general breaking up of the constitution. I ran down in weight. My family physician insisted that I leave off coffee and take on Postum Food Coffee, but I would not hear to it.

"One day I was served with a cup of coffee, as I supposed, that had a peculiarly delicious flavor. I relished it, and when drinking the second cup I was told that it was not coffee, but Postum Food Coffee, I was dumfounded, and for a time thought I was the subject of a practical joke. However, I became a firm believer in, and a user of Postum from that time, and almost immediately I began to sleep nights and the irritableness disappeared, and in less than three months I was completely well and in seven months my weight increased up to 198 pounds. I can now do the work of two ordinary newspaper men."

There is a great big lot of common sense in leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

Our Budget.

—Help the burned-out brethren in Jacksonville, Fla.

—Finish up and forward your Children's Day collections.

—Hand the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to your neighbor and ask him if he knows a good thing when he sees it.

—"Kind words are the music of the world," said a speaker at the banquet of English and American merchants in London recently. The sentiment is worthy of any pulpit. Who of us is there that cannot add something to the sum total of the "music of the world" by kind words fitly spoken and by kind deeds nobly done?

—Steady progress is being made by the directors of the World's Fair to be held in St. Louis in 1903. Last week the executive committee heard the claims of various sites, six in all, as presented by their champions. The decision will be reached in a few days.

—The University of Chicago will celebrate its tenth anniversary in connection with the quarterly convocation June 14-18. The exercises of the week include dedications, corner stone ceremonies, class reunions, baccalaureate and vesper services, educational conferences, official luncheons and receptions and athletic events. The convocation address be made by John D. Rockefeller.

—The receipts on the Children's Day offering for the first six days of June amounted to $7,939.06, a gain of $3,594.91 over the corresponding days of last year. The number of schools contributing within this period is 543, or more than twice the number for the same time last year. This is a good start. Keep it up. Send money promptly to F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati.

—The offering for home missions for the first eight days of June gained $640.92. This recovers the loss of the third week in May, but this offering for home missions is not showing the gain that that cause should have. There is no more worthy benevolence asking the support of our brotherhood than home missions. We urge every church that has not yet remitted their offering to give it their early attention.

—Mrs. T. M. Shackleford, of Tampa, Fla., writes that she is meeting with some success in soliciting funds for their lot in that southern city. She has received $250 of the $500 which she started out to raise. The purpose is to get a lot and erect on it a tent or temporary tabernacle ready for a meeting as soon as possible. She reports two confessions last Sunday and two additions by letter. The little band of disciples there is worthy of all encouragement from the great brotherhood of which they are a part.

—Prof. J. Fraise Richard, Fayette, O., has favored us with a prospectus of his Modern Normal and Business College located at Fayette, O., together with an excellent photo taken on his fifty-seventh birthday. Prof. Richard is something of an innovator in modern educational methods and has had much experience in Washington City and other places as a teacher. Later we hope to have something to say concerning this institution and its principal in our columns.

—H. H. Moninger, a graduate of Bethany College, who has since done post-graduate work at the University of West Virginia, Butler Bible College and Yale Divinity School, and has recently taken the B. D. degree from the latter institution, will become pastor of the church at Tiffin, O., July 1. Among the graduates from the Yale Divinity School this year we note the names of three of our own men: H. H. Moninger as above, William L. Fisher, of Bethany College, and Claud P. Leach, of Drake.

—Do not miss an article of the splendid series of Brother Lamar. They will soon be ended. Shall we not have him prepare them for publication in a little volume to be handed down to the generations that are to come after us?

—We have another excellent series from J. J. Haley which will immediately follow Brother Lamar's and which, as our readers know, who have often followed his pen, will be worth reading.

—The prospects seem good for receiving $50,000 this year from the Sunday-schools for foreign missions. If this is done we can confidently expect to reach the grand total of $200,000 for the general offering for this purpose.

—Bro. H. S. Earl, of Irvington, Ind., has made his annual migration to Macatawa Park. The exodus from the cities is already beginning and we have received several requests to change addresses for the summer to Macatawa.

—The Missionary Convention of the First District of Kansas, Melancthon Moore, President, will be held at Valley Falls, Kan., June 25-27. The program, which is too long to publish in full, presents some interesting topics and those who attend will be well repaid.

—The North Side Christian Church, Chicago, T. S. Tinsley, pastor, presents an interesting program of services for this month. On June 23 President McGarvey will be present and will ordain the church officers and in the evening will preach on "Are We a Denomination?" On June 27 Prof. H. L. Willett will lecture on "The Right and Wrong Use of the Bible."

—In announcing an increase of the Children's Day offering at Delta, Ia., to $100, L. H. Humphreys says: "It was largely due to the fact that we have a wide-awake, energetic business man for superintendent. J. C. Reed is his name and Delta, Ia., his address. If some superintendents that I have met would write to him for pointers they would be wise." There is no place in the church where a lively business man shines to better advantage than as Sunday-school superintendent. The worst fault for a superintendent is to be preachery.

—Important business was transacted at the last meeting of the central board held in the Mount Cabanne Church, in connection with the Christian Church Circle. A resolution was passed to appoint a committee of seven members to consider the feasibility and desirability of purchasing or leasing a lot centrally located, and erecting thereon a tabernacle capable of accommodating our union evangelistic services, in contemplation, our national conventions, should they decide to come to St. Louis, and to serve as a center for union rallies during the World's Fair and perpetually. The committee is to report next September, at the next quarterly meeting of the board.

—The Jubilee International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America, which will be held in Boston June 11-16, will be a notable event. It marks the close of the first half century of Y. M. C. A. work in this country. Over 2,000 delegates will be present and the program presents an extraordinary list of distinguished speakers from all parts of the world. At one session Bishop Potter, President Faunce of Brown University, and Dr. F. E. Clark will speak on "The Relation of the Y. M. C. A. to the Churches"; and at another President Patton, of Princeton, President Northrop of the University of Minnesota, and Booker T. Washington will speak on "The Contribution of the Association to the Moral and Religious Life of Universities and Colleges." These will serve to show the character of the program. A report of the convention will be presented later.

—E. W. Thornton, one of our Missouri preachers now serving the church at Mayfield, Ky., visited this office one day last week. His church recently raised $100 for home missions and $135 for foreign missions. Bro. Thornton came this far with his wife and daughter and youngest child, who went on to Kirksville, Mo., where the little daughter is to be treated by the Osteopathists for curvature of the spine, caused by a fall.

—Receipts for home missions during the month of May show an increase in the number of contributing churches but a decrease in the number of contributing Sunday-schools, aid societies and individuals. The total receipts for the month were $14,789.85, a gain of $1,245.03 over the same month of last year. There must be a total increase of $10,000 for the year to enable the secretary to report $100,000 for home missions at the Minneapolis Convention.

—We regret to announce that F. O. Fannon, pastor of the First Christian Church in this city the past four years, has offered his resignation to take effect the first of September next. We believe he has accepted a call from the First Church of Sedalia. Bro. Fannon was well adapted to the work in this city and especially to the particular field he was occupying. He drew larger audiences than most of the churches in his part of the city, and was making himself a name and reputation among the people of this city regardless of church lines. We sincerely regret that he should have felt it necessary on account of the demands of the work here upon him to resign, but the church at Sedalia is certainly to be congratulated in securing a preacher so capable and so fully consecrated to the work.

—H. C. Kendrick, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Logansport, Ind., has resigned his work there to accept the pastorate of the church at Hagerstown Md., where he begins his labors the first of July. He asks us to state that the letters which he has received from ministers concerning the Logansport Church will be turned over to the chairman of the board of officers to be duly considered. He speaks heartily of the kind treatment he has received, of the church and of its excellent character. The local paper speaks words of hearty praise of the retiring pastor and of his work in that city. In going east he hopes to receive the right hand of fellowship from brethren Power, Bagby and Wright, of Washington, Brother Ainsley, of Baltimore and other ministers of the east.

—In another place we publish a tribute to Bro. Geo. C. Christian who recently departed this life at his home in Eureka Springs, Ark. Bro. D. W. Moore, who writes the article, was formerly pastor of the church at Eureka Springs and knew Bro. Christian intimately. We also have known Bro. Christian for more than a quarter of a century and have often shared the hospitality of his home while spending a few weeks occasionally at the Springs for recuperation. Bro. Christian has a wide reputation throughout the country as a lecturer on temperance, having taken an active part in many of the political campaigns in behalf of the Prohibition party. He was large-hearted, hospitable, generous, loved the cause of Christ and was not ashamed to speak for it at any time or at any place. Our tears mingle with those of his beloved wife, Mrs. Persis L. Christian, so widely known and loved throughout the brotherhood, in this her great bereavement. It is comforting to know that as our loved ones leave us here they go to be with Christ and share in the joys and activities of that life that lies beyond. It will only be a little while until our earthly tasks are finished and in some quiet hour we shall hear the summons: "Come home," and we too shall depart to be "forever with the Lord."

—The Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo appears to be worth seeing. Read the articles of our special Buffalo correspondent.

—C. H. DeVoe, Rochester, Ind., announces that he will be glad to arrange with some congregation to hold them a meeting during July and August.

—E. W. Brickert, of East Side Church, Des Moines, Ia., announces that the work there is moving on nicely and that in his absence his wife recently supplied his pulpit and also delivered the address to the G. A. R , which was highly spoken of.

—Robert E. Rosenstein, President of the Fifth Missionary District of Kansas, living at Manhattan, Kan., makes an earnest appeal to the churches of that district to pay their apportionment to the state work in order that the good work be not hindered for lack of funds. There is a great work to be done in the district and it is to be hoped that the churches will be prompt and hearty in their co-operation.

—James H. Brooks, late of Mississippi, has accepted a call to the church at Newport, Ark., and has already entered upon the work there as pastor. He writes hopefully of the outlook there and of the cause in Arkansas. The ministers in Arkansas are to be congratulated on this accession to their ranks of an earnest and capable preacher of the gospel, who will be sure to make his influence felt not in Newport alone but throughout the state.

—E. T. McFarland, pastor of the Fourth Christian Church in this city, which has recently remodeled and enlarged their church building, asks us to announce the dedication services for Lord's day, June 23, and that Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., is to be master of ceremonies. This church has wrought well and wisely and it is to be hoped that the dedication will witness the full realization of all that they desire.

—A Law and Order League has been organized in Kansas City, Mo., to use legal and effective means for securing the enforcement of existing laws restricting the sale of liquor. This is a sane and sensible method of procedure which ought to be encouraged by all good citizens in Kansas City. All Kansas City voters who desire to join this League, which involves no financial obligation, may send their names and addresses to A. O. Harrison, secretary, 27 Waterworks Building, Kansas City.

—The summer session of the University of Chicago opens June 19, and as usual the regular courses will be supplemented by numerous courses of lectures by professors from other institutions. Prof. C. R. Gregory, of Leipsic, E. Benjamin Andrews and Marcus Dods, of Edinburg, will give courses in the Divinity School, and lectures will be given by Prof. Kovalevsky, of the University of St. Petersburg. The summer quarter has been shortened to meet the convenience of teachers. The first term will close July 27 and the second August 31.

—W. E. Boulton, of Taylorville, Ill., writes that the Christian Church in that place has been placed under additional obligation to Sister Caroline Davis by her recent purchase of the residence property adjoining our church building and making a gift of it to the church for a parsonage. It was through the generosity of her husband, Henry Davis, deceased, that the church owns such a splendid building in which to worship. Though nearing her eighty-first birthday she has given her personal attention to all the details of the transfer of the property. Her daughter, Sister Davis Hoover, enters heartily into all her mother's plans. They desire now to see the church building remodeled and made still more convenient for Sunday-school purposes and it is likely that this wish will soon be executed.

—Prof. Frank H. Marshall, of Waco, Texas, will spend the summer with the church at Garden City, Minn., returning to his work in Add Ran University, Sept. 1.

—We are glad to print here this gentle reminder to the brethren concerning the claims of the old preachers:

The board of ministerial relief has on its books the names of fifty-four of the old preachers, or preachers' widows, whom it is trying, in a small way, to assist. $25 per quarter is a very meager support for an old preacher and his good old wife. Some receive less. Before we can make the next quarterly payment, July 1st, we must have $500 more money. If we do not get it, we will either have to borrow or cut down the already scanty allowance. Brethren, many of you have not done anything for this work this year. Just think for a moment how the Lord is depending upon you in this matter. Will you disappoint your Father? It is your duty, your privilege, and may it be your good pleasure to have fellowship in this tenderest of all ministries. Do not delay, but send at once a contribution to Howard Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

A. L. ORCUTT, Cor. Sec.

—Closing an eloquent address in favor of a united Congregational Church in Great Britain, Dr. Joseph Parker said:

"Brethren, I am hoping that God will mercifully grant me early release from my long and arduous and now lonely ministry—a ministry full of pain, black with blackest sorrow, yet now and again bright with all the glory, and calm with all the peace, of realized and sanctifying love. I hope soon to see the evening star, and then the summer morning of heaven. According to the reckoning of the calendar, my life is behind me. 'My company is gone on before.' Under such circumstances a man will speak his most solemn and ennobling thoughts. Standing, therefore, at the parting of the ways—a sinner, needing all the Savior's priestly help—a minister weaker than a bruised reed—a brother to whom has been daily given the pain and chastening of a wounded spirit—I solemnly say, with a passion so intense as to become the highest expression of repose, that it would make my heart glad with a Simeon-like satisfaction if I could have some assurance that it is this day in your hearts prayerfully to consider at least whether we cannot all come together, work together, live together, as the United Congregational Church."

—In his recent address before the Congregational Union of England and Wales, Dr. Joseph Parker pays this compliment to the poor churches:

The poorest chapel on the bleakest hillside stands for a spiritual and most holy testimony. Looked at architecturally it may seem mean enough, but looked at ideally and in the thrilling poetry of its significance it is none other than the house of God and the very gate of heaven. They that have passed by may have wagged their heads and railed on it, but by so doing they have but established their kinship with the gang who made the cross a jest and spat on the Son of God. I call upon my brethren working in sunless places to take a high view of their functions and responsibilities. Never be little vicars. Be yourselves. I do not object to a big vicar, but I do not like a vicarette. It will soon be made clear that good men eat at the table of the divine plenteousness and drink of the river of God, which is full of water. Thus believing and thus acting, my very poorest brethren cannot long be down-hearted. If we keep steady at our own work, if we do nothing else, if we work the twelve-hour day, God has pledged himself that he will cover the evening with light.

Scrofula

Few are entirely free from it.

It may develop so slowly as to cause little if any disturbance during the whole period of childhood.

It may then produce irregularity of the stomach and bowels, dyspepsia, catarrh, and marked tendency to consumption before manifesting itself in much cutaneous eruption or glandular swelling.

It is best to be sure that you are quite free from it, and for its complete eradication you can rely on —Our own Champ Clark, Member of Congress from Missouri, has been prophesying. He was recently asked to deliver a funeral address on the death of an old friend in Pike, which he did to the entire satisfaction of the large audience which gathered in the grove. Among other good things he said, was the following as reported in the Republic:

"Without being a preacher or the son of a preacher, discarding even the faintest claims to saintliness, I may, nevertheless, as an American layman, express my opinion upon the loftiest theme that ever engaged the human mind, and it is this: Religion is as much a necessity of the soul as bread is of the body. Wisdom, revelation, reason and hope conspire to teach this. All experience proves it. I answer the preposterous and heart-sickening dictum of the French materialists—'Death is an eternal sleep'—with the triumphant declaration of Job: 'I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.'"

Kansas City Letter.

The First Church "omnibus" offering for missions will be brought up, Pastor Richardson thinks, to $1,400. This is a gain over all preceding offerings and a large gain over the years when the various "days" were observed. The experiences of the Tonawanda, the First Church, Louisville, and the First Church of this city would seem to authorize the new departure. Thus far no church that has tried the one offering is reported as having gone back to the five or six special offerings called for by our various boards. There is among many of our most enthusiastic supporters of missions a growing dissatisfaction with our present methods and a disposition to "lump" the offerings. If, as the history of all the "omnibus" offerings would indicate, there is clear financial gain by this method there seems to be no reasonable objection to it and the writer's prediction is that more and more will this plan obtain among our churches. Its most obvious advantage over our present system is that it makes possible a thorough canvass of the entire membership. Everybody is reached. Under the present regime it is simply impossible in a large church to follow up all the special appeals and the result is that only a limited number is reached. This same elect few give to all and the unchosen many have little or no part in the matter. It is easy to say that it ought to be otherwise, but we must face the facts. And doubtless our enthusiastic secretaries sometimes feel that this work of gleaning after the harvest day should follow each missionary appeal, but thus far no church of any considerable membership has found it feasible. No doubt the experimentation should go further before we are prepared to speak authoritatively, and our churches should in wisdom be in no haste to adopt the new plan. Let us wait, study and bye and bye we shall see more clearly.

The Young Men's Federation of Kansas City—an organization composed of the young men of the Christian churches of our city—promises to count for something. Definiteness is in its program. At the end of its deliberations is an act. The special and immediate object now aimed at is the establishment of a "social settlement." By this is meant that somewhere in the neglected down-town tenement districts a Christian home will be planted—this home to be a school to all the "submerged" neighborhood. In cleanliness and sanitation, it is to give object lessons, and more broadly with all that pertains to the betterment of the physical, intellectual and spiritual conditions of the district it is to concern itself. It is thought that this enterprise can be started with but small financial outlay and the day of the venture is near. There is much of the heroic in it all and much too of serious import. How profoundly sobering is the thought that these who go down into these districts go there first of all by "example" to teach Christ. The underlying thought of all this settlement work is that practice must precede creed and sermon and that the salvation of the masses is through daily incarnations of the Christ, daily interpretations of him in helpful deeds. This conception differentiates this work from all other missionary undertakings. Elsewhere the reliance is upon the message, here the reliance is upon the man and the man's incarnation of the message; elsewhere the sermon comes first, here the life. And who shall say the latter is not the better, the wiser way? Much has been said and foolishly said of "the decline of the pulpit." Well the pulpit ought to decline. So winsome should be Christian living in Christian lands that sermons should not be needed. After all, preaching should be for the heathen and for the immature in Christian thought. Once having learned of the Christ and having mastered his secret there should be less need of the sermon. Indeed in Christian lands the sermons to "sinners" are but makeshifts, but clumsy attempts to do that which could be done otherwise. Did but Christians really live their lives in Christ, so beautiful were the demonstration that none could resist it and the "sermon" were an intrusion, a superfluity.

Yes, when we live right the pulpit is bound to decline at least as evangelistic agency and we shall convert men not through the sporadic way of evangelism but by the beauty of daily deeds.

The Prospect Club, an organization of the young men of the Sixth and Prospect Church, gave its third and last banquet of the season in the parlors of the Sixth and Prospect Church last week. About eighty members of the club were present. The banquet was served by the "Whatsoever Circle," a guild of the young women of the church. The decorations, music, menu, toasts, were all of the highest order. As it now appears, the organization of this club seems to have been the most important of the new undertakings of the year.

Why any preacher in his senses should seek the responsibility of a city pulpit seems to passing strange. My conviction is that the only ideal city preacher is a man without either a conscience or nerves. If he has either he is doomed. Any fineness of physical organization and any conscientiousness of endeavor will drive the pastor of a city church of a thousand members or more either into the mad house or an early grave. No one man can do the work that such a church demands. It's die, go crazy or ——, but really this scribe is too tired to continue the discussion.

GEORGE H. COMBS.

West Texas Mission.

Now that the Indian Territory is to be settled up by white people, and perhaps thousands more there already than will find homes, and preachers enough to meet the demands, my promise is up. Many years ago when I began work among the Indians there was not a Christian preacher in all this Territory, not one, and not a congregation of Disciples. I promised to stay until the country was settled by white people. Now in the far west there is a sad destitution—a few, very few Disciples. That country will attract settlers in the near future. I have been trying for years past to get some one to go there who would kindly and firmly represent the cause we so much love, and sow the seed of the kingdom preparatory for the coming home-seekers. In this I have failed, and I will go myself. We would like to have a willing-minded, earnest young man, who is deeply in love with the cause for which Jesus died, to go with us. He need not come for his health or an easy place. With the willing mind no task is hard. We go trusting God's promise and the fellowship of the saints. We have not the promise of any organization, church or individual back of our going. We invite the co-operation and fellowship of the family of God on earth.

From this date our address is changed from Atoka, I. T., to Turkey, Texas.

There are people who say that the benefit derived from the use of put-up medicines is imaginary. It is not the case with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which makes weak women strong and sick women well. A woman may imagine she's weak, or may fancy she's sick, but her imagination can't add forty pounds to her weight. The positive proof of the curative power of "Favorite Prescription" is found in the restoration of health which is recorded in face and form, of strength which can be tested, and weight which can be registered in pounds and ounces.

The general health of women is so intimately connected with the local health of the womanly organs that when these are diseased the whole body suffers loss. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, stops weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"I am very glad to let other poor sufferers know what Dr. Pierce's medicines have done for me," writes Mrs. Edwin H. Gardner, of Beechwood, Norfolk Co., Mass. (Box 70.) "You know I wrote to you last summer. I read what your medicine had done for other people, so thought I would try it, and I found it was a blessing to me and my family. I began in June and took six bottles of your medicine, and three vials of 'Pellets.' I took your medicine a year when I had a ten-pound girl. I had the easiest time I ever had with any of my three children. I have been very well since I took your medicine. I took three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' three of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and three vials of 'Pellets.' I had no appetite and could not eat much without it distressing me before I took your 'Favorite Prescription,' and I only weighed 135 pounds. Now I weigh 175."

Thunder of Water.

Niagara means (Indian) "Thunder of Water."

The first printed allusion to this interesting body of water, it is believed, occurs in the account of a voyage, 1535, by James Cartier, the French mariner. In 1603 the first map was constructed by another Frenchman, Champlain. Then a number of years later Father Hennepin's descriptive book appeared.

The river receives the waters of many lakes, it is not affected by the snows in winter or by evaporation in summer. It is said that every seven years the waters rise and fall, said to be due to a disturbance in the waters of Lake Erie, which is 240 miles long, 573 feet above sea level.

The theory held by geologists is that the deep chasm has been cut by water through the limestone. This has been accomplished "through countless ages." It is estimated that the falls wear away "one foot of the precipice every year." Again it is said that only half an inch is worn away every five years.

The awful whirlpool is of unknown depth, all the water passes through this whirling, seething center, thence out through the canon. It is said that once the falls were at the place marked by the whirlpool and that during thousands of years the vast depth was excavated.

Many years ago when buildings were erected and the trees destroyed, measures were taken to restore the lost beauty; it was not till 1883 that the bill was passed. It cost $1,433,529.50 to buy back the land, which was then purchased by the state to be preserved in "a state of nature, and that every part of them shall be forever free from access to all mankind."

To-day the spirit of progress, industry, and prosperity presides over this interesting domain. The power of Niagara has been harnessed and is now man's servant just as all the forces of nature may, will yet be, for man is to be the monarch.

To-day a great city of 350 acres, like the white city, rises in beauty; lighted by 300,000 lamps that shine like suns, with a canal one mile long whose waters are ploughed by beautiful vessels. There are 125 groups of American sculpture. There are 201 buildings, a gallery of art costing $400,000, New York state building of marble costing $150,000, an electrical tower 391 feet high. The machinery is moved by 5,000 horse power derived from the Falls and 4,000 horse power developed on the grounds. There is a life saving station, lighthouse and signal station, a mint display and exhibits from Hawaii, Philippines, Guam, Porto Rico and Cuba.

There are a stadium seating 12,000, a music temple seating 2,200 containing an organ costing $15,000, 500 flower beds, 200,000 plants. There is a realm of pleasure which cost $3,000,000, representing national amusements of many varieties. The cost of the Exposition is $10,000,000. Thirty-five thousand gallons of water per minute is required for the fountain display. Six nations of Indians may be seen living as they did 400 years ago. The largest gun may be seen capable of a range of twenty and a half miles. The smallest vessel that ever girdled the globe, a one-masted sloop, is also there. This is a stupendous work and its object, to show the advancement of the great western world, and to promote trade.

Now what a grand thing it would be if the same spirit could mark all of the professed followers of Jesus! A spirit that would lead all to labor for the golden age, when the forces of nature and the powers of man shall be subservient to the proclamation of the commission and the ushering in of the reign universal of the Prince of Peace.

The Spiritual Side of Our Plea

By A. B. JONES

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

A Letter from Bengal.

[The following letter, which was not written for publication, has been forwarded to us at the suggestion of Bro. N. M. Ragland, and it has seemed to us that it might be of interest to a larger circle than that for which it was originally intended.—EDITOR].

It has now been over two years since I came to India and these years have been very busy and very happy.

God has helped me and blessed me much in the acquiring of the language and he has kept me strong and well for service.

For a while, after coming down from the hills, where I spent six months in studying the language the first year, I did some zenana work. This going from house to house with the life message was very precious to me. But as other needs came which could not be neglected, I had to give up the zenana work. For a while last summer and autumn I took charge of the orphanage for Dr. Baldwin who had to be away at the hills on account of her health. As soon as she was able to take it up again, I took charge of the school work which had been laid down by Miss Farrar. I am very happy in the school work and the children are getting along nicely. Some of the most advanced girls, in addition to keeping up their own work, assist me in teaching the younger girls. I have one class preparing for the lower primary examination next autumn. Next year they will be able to pass the upper primary and another class will be ready for the lower primary examination. The subjects taught are the Bible, reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography and physiology.

I give the Bible a prominent place in the school and it is a most blessed opportunity I have of teaching its truths to one hundred and thirty-six children day by day. It is good to see them drinking in its pure, sweet truths. The girls who have just come to us from the last famine listen so eagerly as I tell them of our "salvation giver," as we say in Hindi.

I also have the S. S. and the C. E. work. We have a good C. E. Society among the girls of the orphanage. About Christmas, six more of our girls were baptized. We now have about thirty Christian girls. These are trying to follow Christ—but some of them have many struggles. There are some beautiful characters among them—girls that are growing into strong, Christian women who will be a great blessing to India

The number of children in our orphanage is almost double what it was one year ago. Many who came to us last summer, looking like little skeletons, are now plump and happy girls. But, of course, some were too far gone to grow strong again and several died soon after coming to us.

Dr. Baldwin's health has failed and she sails to-morrow for the home land. The orphanage work has been taken on by Miss Boyd, formerly of Bilaspur. Pray that she may be kept strong for this heavy work and pray that in all that is being done in Deoghur the name of Christ may be glorified and that many souls may be lighted by this light of life.

Commencement at Add-Ran Christian University.

The twenty-eighth commencement of Add-Ran occurred June 5, in the chapel of the university. The address was made by C. McPherson, pastor of the First Church at Fort Worth, Texas. He spoke on the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. In spite of the stormy weather the attendance was very large, and the interest of the brotherhood in the institution was manifest. Eight persons received the degree Bachelor of Arts: Charles I. Alexander, L. Pierce Bailey, Carr T. Dowell Robt. L. Marquis, Maude Waite Marshall, Olive McClintic, J. Frank Pruett, Jr., and James N. Wooten. The total number of graduates from all departments was twenty-two.

The meeting of the Alumni Association was attended by fully one-third of the older graduates, and a deep interest was shown by them all.

Two additional professors have been elected for next year. Hon. T. E. Shirley, president board of trustees, will take the field immediately in behalf of Add-Ran. He will in a short time clear the school of the comparatively small debt, and work along the line of endowment. The progress of the institution during the past year has increased the price of property on this side of the city, and many new houses are being built to supply the demand. An increase of 100 students is expected next year, and arrangements are being made to accommodate them. The brethren over the state are pleased with the work of the last session, and all are gratified at the present condition of the institution.

E. C. Snow continues his duties as acting president and his fitness for the leadership of the faculty is recognized. Prof. A. F. Armstrong, formerly of the N. W. C. College, has been elected to a chair of science, and Jacob Embry, of Kentucky and Johns Hopkins Universities, takes charge of the work in English literature. Mrs. Isabel Ingalls will teach vocal music, and W. B. Schimmelpfennig, graduate of Berlin Conservatory, becomes director of the College of Music. Miss Ida Root Gordon takes charge of the department of oratory. FRANK H. MARSHALL.

George C. Christian.

"Fallen on Zion's battlefield a soldier of renown, Clad in the panoply of God, in armor stricken down."

Shortly after four o'clock, Lord's day afternoon, June 2, 1901, Hon. George C. Christian at his home in Eureka Springs, Ark., and in the presence of his devoted wife and faithful friends, passed peacefully to his final rest. George Clark Christian was born in Todd county, Ky., in February, 1841. In 1863 he moved to the state of Illinois and located at Bloomington. Here he entered newspaper work for a time. Soon afterward he engaged in the practice of law, and in 1866 moved to Matamora, Ill. Here he met and married Miss Persis Lemon, the daughter of Dr. George C. Lemon. This was a most happy union, reaching over a period of thirty-five years. Shortly after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Christian moved to Chicago, where Mr. Christian rapidly distinguished himself in the practice of law, and became one of the foremost members of the bar. His superior powers of brain and heart made him a felt force in whatever cause he entered. Since 1882 he was much engaged in the political field, always bearing aloft the banner of the Prohibition party. He was once the nominee of his party for the legislature and afterwards state chairman for five years. In 1884, at Pittsburg, he placed in nomination John P. St. John for president. He traveled over a large part of the United States making speeches in behalf of the ticket. His faith in the ultimate success of prohibition was deep and abiding.

Failing health led him to seek some quiet retreat where he might build up the depleted energies of his weary body and mind. In 1889 he moved with Mrs. Christian to Eureka Springs, Ark., where he continued to live till the end came. The change of climate restored him in great measure for a time, but some four years ago he entered the decline that terminated finally in his death. In his new home at Eureka Springs he at once became identified with the interests of the city. No worthy cause but touched a responsive chord in his heart. He loved the church with a constant love. Much of his best thought was given to the little congregation on the hill. Who that has ever heard him in the prayer-meetings, at the communion table, or in the social worship can ever forget his helpful, instructive, spiritual talks His prayers were as if he talked face to face with the Father. The current of spiritual life flowed deep and strong in him. He loved the grand old hymns, "I love thy church, O God," "More holiness give me," "Forever with the Lord," "All hail the power of Jesus' name," and such hymns as these afforded a medium through which his great soul poured itself out in praise to God.

He knew how to be a friend and a support to the pastor. His words of counsel, his sympathy and his constant interest in all the trials and experiences of a minister's life lifted many a heavy load, and made glad the weary way. In his home he was an ideal husband, and filled every nook and corner with Christian joy. The end came after weeks of patient suffering. In the holy calm of a Lord's day afternoon his spirit left its tenement of clay to dwell forever in the "city of the King." Funeral services were conducted at the home by Rev. J. H. Fuller, pastor of the church, assisted by the writer. The body was then sent to Fayetteville, Ark., where, after appropriate services by the Masonic order, it was laid away beneath the sod. With his dear wife we exclaim: "Good-by, dear, but only for a day." D. W. MOORE.

Western Pennsylvania Letter.

The semi-annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society, held at Uniontown, Pa., May 14-16, was in every way considered one of the best ever held by the society. Notable among the fine papers read was B. L. Kershner's on "Ministerial Relief," and another by E. P. Wise, of Somerset, on "Education." C. L. Thurgood, of the Central, Pittsburg, preached the convention sermon. It set a fast pace for the convention.

At present the W. P. C. M. S. is extending aid to ten mission churches. Within the last six months in support of this work $1,333.74 has been raised. This is the report of J. A. Joyce, of McKeesport, the financial secretary. Forty-three churches took the Thanksgiving offering last November, and $691.85 was raised in this way. Within the last six months the missions report an increase of 244 members.

A splendid evangelistic spirit pervades all of our churches in western Pennsylvania. Notable among the great victories has been the establishment of a church at Wilkinsburg, as already reported in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. F. M. Rains will dedicate the house at this place June 16.

The mission at Turtle Creek, where R. J. Bamber is pastor, deserves special mention. The house of worship was dedicated Feb. 28, 1900, and at present they have 91 members. This church is situated in the very heart of the Westinghouse air brake mills.

H. C. Saum, of Belle Vernon, reports a paper campaign for each family. By good fortune their remaining debt of $3,500 is costing them only four per cent.

Earle Wilfley, of New Castle, reports a vigorous campaign at Mahoningtown. Fred A. Nicholls, the western Pennsylvania evangelist, conducted it. About 26 members were secured in a four weeks' meeting. Two lots have been purchased and a house will soon be erected. A lot has also been bought at Elwood City.

W. M. Long is pastor at Monessen. The work began here Jan. 20 of this year. There are now 35 members.

T. E. Cramblett and E. A. Bosworth, our two "globe trotters," are back from the Orient. Both have given us most interesting accounts of their trips. Each one vies in magnifying the seasickness of the other.

J. A. Jayne, pastor of Observatory Hill Church, has been holding his services in the Carnegie Hall, Allegheny, for some time. This is due to remodeling their house on the hill. Night after night he has had from 1,300 to 1,400 people present. As a result the hall has been secured for a three weeks' meeting in January.

C. H. Plattenberg, pastor at Uniontown, reports a new pipe organ. This young and hustling pastor not only keeps his work moving on vigorously at home but manages two missions, one at Hopwood and another at New Salem. This is more than our rally cry. Our cry is one mission for every regularly organized church. And just now we are starting a new rally cry, "One new mission Bible-school for every church this year.

W. H. Hanna, Washington, has resigned and will set sail for Manila, Philippines, June 29. We will surely miss him and his estimable wife. Wherever he works he is vigorous and loyal.

C. L. Thurgood, of Central, is assisted by Miss Elsie Taylor, a most devoted worker in the Sunday-school. They have a trio over there just now that is hard to beat. And when you add R. S. Latimer, the veteran president of the W. P. C. M. S., who has been for a long time the Bible-school superintendent, you have a quartet the like of which is not to be found very often.

At present there are two churches without pastors. One is at Homestead, J. Grinstead having resigned some time ago. The other is at Indiana, where the State Normal School is situated. D. M. Kinter, who has resigned, goes back to Kirksville, Mo.

In closing this letter let me say just a few words about the monthly meeting of our C. W. B. M. auxiliaries and preachers. The last one was held at our new church at Wilkinsburg June 3. More than 150 were present from all parts of western Pennsylvania. These monthly meetings have been conducted for a number of years and much of the enthusiasm in our work has been generated at them. After a long trial we can commend it to any section where churches are near enough to make it go.

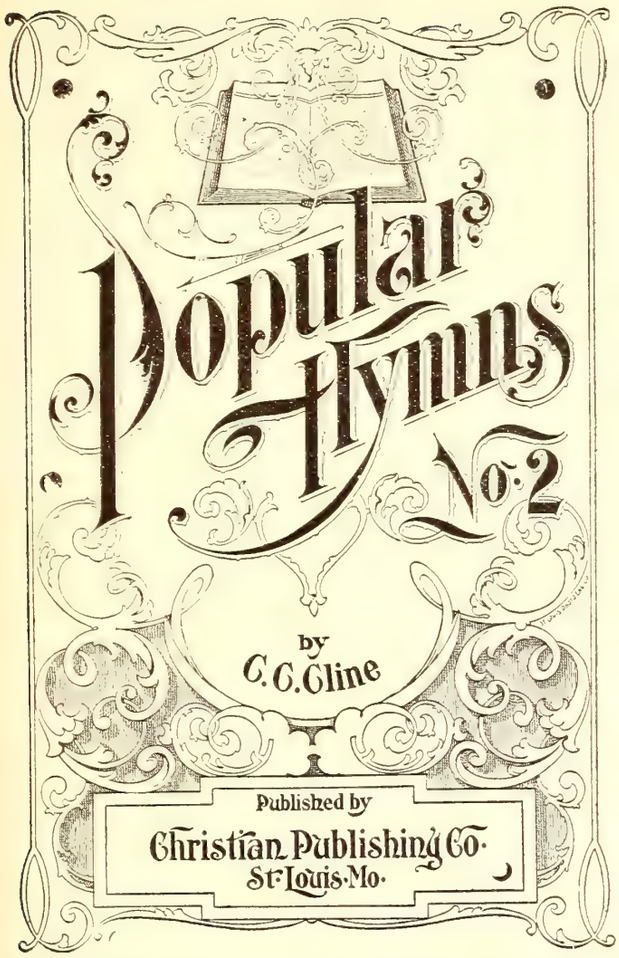
O. H. PHILIPS.

Braddock, Pa.

Michigan.

There is no better field in America for the display of Christian heroism than Michigan. In this prosperous and cultured state there are not more than 10,000 Disciples, scattered over the state in one hundred weak churches, all making heroic struggles to plant our plea.

The state missionary convention, recently held with the Central Church at Detroit, brought out examples of zeal and sacrifice on the part of the pastors of these struggling churches worthy of the pioneer days of our movement. Indeed these are the pioneer days in a large part of the state. For example, in the northeastern part is an area over one hundred miles square, comprising seventeen counties without a single Church of Christ and very little religious influence of any kind. There are hundreds of villages and towns without even a Sunday-school. In this vast uncultivated field Bro. R. Bruce Brown is struggling alone, trying to gather the people together and resist the encroachments of the Mormon elder who has recently entered this waste district. Bro. Brown is already meeting with success and deserves the recognition and encouragement of the brotherhood.



The Michigan missionary society is doing what it can to meet the demands of the field. The recent convention was full of the promise of better things. Wherever churches are being planted they are finding fields white unto the harvest. The society has wisely seized upon the important centers in the state. Already it is witnessing the establishment of the cause under its fostering care in such cities as Saginaw, Bay City, Kalamazoo and Traverse City. Through the labors of such men as H. N. Allen, H. H. Haley and T. P. Ullom, our cause in these places is being brought rapidly to the front. Grand Rapids, under the leadership of F. P. Arthur, is setting an example to cities in states where our brotherhood is strong. Though the church to which he ministers is by no means strong, it has within the last year opened up two missions in the extreme ends of the city, one of which has already employed a pastor and will soon be a self-supporting church.

The sessions of the Detroit convention were full of zeal and determination to make an onward movement all over the state. Under the leadership of Prof. G. P. Coln as president of the board and D. Munro as corresponding secretary the coming year promises to be the best in the history of the church. There is no better field for missions than Michigan and no more inviting prospect for a young preacher who is willing to sacrifice.

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning. The rich variety and power of the solo and special song department, selected specially for his use in revivals, will be joyfully received.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos, with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed, unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Popular Hymns No 2. contains 256 songs.

Iowa Notes.

The Southeast District Convention at Sigourney last week was, in some respects, the best of the series. The attendance was larger, there being over 125 present that enrolled and there was a larger representation of preachers and churches than at either of the other conventions.

The officers for the ensuing year are, F. L. Moffett, president; J. C. Reed, of Delta, vice-president; A. F. Sanderson, secretary and treasurer; J. P. McKnight, Bible-school and C. E. superintendent, and M. Hedge, member of nominating committee for state convention.

Thus closed the series of district conventions and I believe one of the most satisfactory series ever held. The enthusiasm for state missions and Drake University was apparent in every convention, and there is a feeling that these great interests should be pushed to the front.

The advancement of all other missionary enterprises will be measured by the success of state missions and Drake University, and we are glad that the brethren are finding it out.

Three-fourths of our missionary year has passed, and there remains only three months until our state convention at Cedar Rapids, Sept. 9th. Has your congregation sent in the apportionment for state missions? In case you have not done so, will you not see to it at once. If you cannot send in the full apportionment, send an offering at least. The work needs the help of all. We are planning to enter some promising mission fields, but we must keep within our means.

Fred Macey has accepted the work at Spencer. Fred graduates from Drake this commencement and we are glad that he has located in Iowa.

The congregations at Brooks and Essex are co-operating in the employment of L. H. McCoy. Bro. McCoy comes to us from Illinois and has the full endorsement of the brethren where he has labored. We welcome im to our state.

D. S. Domer, of Pleasant Plains, Ill., has accepted the work at Brandon and Oak Grove for half time at each place. Bro. Domer is another Illinois man who comes to us with a good record.

I am on the ground at Moravia ready for the battle to-morrow. A few brethren and friends have erected a church building here at a cost of $2,500, about $600 of which is yet unprovided for. A few loyal souls, without the aid of a pastor or church organization, have erected a good house of worship. We hope to have a good congregation here in the near future.

There were three confessions at Braddyville last Lord's day.

Four Iowa churches will be visited by prospective pastors June 9.

A. F. Sanderson is in a meeting at Houston, Tex.

W. E. Harlow is in a meeting at Chariton.

H. C. Patterson is holding a meeting at Sigourney. There were three confessions and one from the Baptists Thursday night.

The Audubon church was dedicated last Lord's day. The morning and evening sermons were preached by Prof. Lockhart and the sermon at 3 P. M. by E. C. Whittacre, of Exira. The writer solicited the pledges and dedicated the building. We secured the money needed to pay the debt and had a good surplus for shrinkage. Bro. A. A. Holmes is the pastor in charge. He is a young man of promise who recently came to us from the Baptists.

With two exceptions our missions are in a flourishing condition, and the two are not discouraging by any means.

First Fruits of Children's Day.

The first reports from Children's day are full of encouragement:

St. Joseph, Mo.: Raised $200 for Children's day.—C. M. CHILTON.

Chicago, Ill.: First Christian Sunday-school hopes to send $35 for heathen missions. Pretty good for a Sunday-school averaging about 58 in attendance.—MRS. J. M. DAWSON.

Youngstown, O., (Third): Apportionment $5; raised $13.46.—ALANSON WILCOX.

Pittsburg (Knoxville) Pa.: Our apportionment was $5; raised $22.38.—JOHN H. GOFF.

Dayton, O.: Children's day collection $302.58.—A. C. STOLZ.

Salem, O.: Very stormy day but offering reached $135; think it will yet reach $140.—WALTER MANSELL.

Louisville, Ky.: Our school (Clifton), gave $25 last year; apportionment this year $25; raised $77.25.—J. S. HILTON.

Philadelphia, Pa.: Raised for Children's day offering $129.26. (First Sunday-school). We were apportioned $75 and endeavored to raise $100.—V. B. BRECHT.

Huron, Kan.: We more than doubled our apportionment.—M. J. HIBBS.

Roanoke, Ill.: More than trebled our apportionment.—B. H. SEALOCK.

Time, Ill.: We raised more than twice our apportionment.—R. K. ROBINSON.

New Franklin, Mo.: Our apportionment was $15; amount raised $16.90.—J. M. SETTLE.

St. Augustine, Ill.: Sunday-school raised $15.85 more than apportionment.—L. MAUD WARNOCK.

Waterloo, Ia.: The Sunday-school at this place made no offering last year. We passed our apportionment this year.—H. D. WRIGHT.

Bellflower, Ill.: Children's day passed off gloriously and the collection amounted to $62. Thirty children raised $1 each; apportionment $40.—JOHN H. SWIFT.

Evangelistic.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, June 5.—Am in a meeting here with Bro. H. Elliott Ward. Forty two additions to date. Mrs. Princess Long will begin singing for us Sunday —B. B. BURTON.

ENGLAND.

Southampton.—The Church of Christ recently celebrated its 27th anniversary, when Bro. W. Durban, of London, preached the sermons in a most acceptable manner. He also lectured on the Wednesday evening following, on "Sicilly: The Pearl of Islands." The report of the secretary showed 26 additions to the church during the year, 15 by baptism; all at regular services. The treasurer's report was very satisfactory. The year was begun $30 behind and closed $30 ahead: $425 was also raised during the year to free the church of all floating debts; the sum of $500 is in the treasury at present raised during the year to be paid on the mortgage debt. Two pledges were taken, amounting to $1,875 to be paid when the remainder of the $4,200 debt is provided for. Self support and freedom from debt are assured —LESLIE W. MORGAN.

IOWA.

Albia, June 3.—Two confessions at prayer-meeting lately, and one confession just before dedication not yet reported. Bro. Allen Hickey, formerly pastor here, preached morning and evening yesterday.—R. H. INGRAM.

Bedford, June 5, 1901.—Two more splendid accessions to the church here last Lord's day, making twelve in the last four weeks. There have been two hundred and fourteen added during my four years here, and sixteen thousand dollars raised for various purposes. I have notified the church that I will not remain a fifth year, and will close my work with them not later than July 15, 1901.—J. WILL WALTERS.

Clarinda, June 3.—Children's day was a great day with us. House would not hold the crowd. Gave the program "Better Days" and it was good. Collection $222.18. This is the best that we have ever done. It was accomplished by having the classes strive as classes to do the best they could.—WM. ORR.

Des Moines, June 5.—Have just returned from a meeting in Houston, Tex.; was with the good people there 12 days. The church was greatly revived, 27 added, about $700 raised on the debt, money subscribed for pastor's salary and other current expenses and a strong pastor called.—E. W. BRICKERT.

Des Moines, June 6, 1901.—Our children's program at Grove Center was a great success. Collection $20. Two baptisms recently.—V. F. JOHNSON, 1358 24th St.

Martelle, June 3.—Martelle raised her apportionment for foreign missions in Bible-school yesterday. Fine day. Splendid program.—SAM. B. ROSS.

Tingley, June 3.—Have had six added since coming here in one month. Work starts off nicely.—E. J. WRIGHT.

ILLINOIS.

Jeffersonville, June 4.—Meeting at Jeffersonville was very well attended Saturday night and Lord's day. One young man made the confession and I baptized him into Christ. Church work generally very good through southern Illinois.—LEW D. HILL, Exchange, Ill.

Toluca, June 3.—The Toluca S. S. raised $40 Children's day for foreign missions. This is the largest amount ever raised by this school for missions.—A. R. ADAMS, pastor; J. D. BALL, superintendent.

INDIANA.

Fort Wayne, June 5.—Two additions last Lord's day, one by primary obedience and one from the Baptists. Five since last report. —ZACH A. HARRIS, minister W. Creighton Ave. Church of Christ.

KANSAS.

Erie, June 4.—We had a happy day here last Lord's day. At the morning service I preached a special sermon to the children and three young people from our Bible-school made the good confession. This makes 13 added here since I last reported. At the evening service the children gave a very fine exercise to a packed house, at the close of which we received a very liberal offering for missions. —CLAUDE O. MCFARLAND.

Highland, June 6.—Recently we have had five baptisms, all from the Sunday-school. Children's Day offering $25. Am on my second pastorate with Highland church; from 1895 to 1898 half time, 1900 to 1901 full time. We are building up steadily, but slowly. We are overshadowed somewhat by the Presbyterian Church and university located here. We are at peace with ourselves and all the world.—JAMES MCGUIRE.

Kansas City.—Sixteen accessions here yesterday.—J. V. COOMBS.

Kansas City, June 8.—Closed meeting at Hume, Mo., with 12 added.—ELMER T. DAVIS.

Leavenworth, June 3.—We had quite a revival here yesterday. Twenty additions; three by letter and 17 by confession.—S. W. NAY, pastor.

Pawnee Rock, June 3.—Yesterday Bro. J. G. Slick, of this place, dedicated the new church at Macksville, Kan. Large audiences at dedication; $650 asked and $821.50 raised in about fifteen minutes. Church starts off with high spirits. Bro. Slick will preach half time for them. Five added by statement and one by confession.—J. W. RATCLIFFE.

Reserve, June 6.—Our Children's Day exercises were quite a success. The offering amounted to $83.65. At the close of the sermon on Sunday evening there were three confessions.—MELANCTHON MOORE.

MISSOURI.

Asherville, June 8.—Meeting closed; 12 additions including three already reported.—FRED R. DAVIES.

Billings, June 4.—I have just closed a ten days' meeting at Bristow, I. T. Two young ladies, one Catholic, one C. P. and one M. E. were baptized. One M. E. and four others took membership and three more gave their names the last morning that they would take membership, making 13 in all. This is an excellent little church and doing good work. Two additions at Billings last Sunday.—F. J. YOKLEY.

Fredericktown, June 3.—Our meeting with Brother George McGee is eight days old, with 32 added and crowded houses.—R. L. MCHATTON, 1911 Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

Fredericktown, June 10.—Our meeting of two weeks with G. F. McGee closed last night with packed house. Fifty persons were added to the church, pastor increased to all time, and a fine influence in all directions.—R. L. MCHATTON, 1911 Broadway, Kansas City.

Galena, June 3.—One by letter yesterday.—O. W. JONES.

Hume, May 27.—We are in a meeting with good interest. Two baptized last week.—ELMER T. DAVIS.

La Belle.—Our Children's day was a success. We raised our attendance from 100 to 120 and collection from $5.96 in 1900 to $25 29 in 1901. Five members of our school joined the $1 league. The program ran through morning, afternoon and evening with crowded house. Bro. Coil, our pastor, is doing much to strengthen our people.—R. MINTER, superintendent.

Savannah, June 3.—One confession here yesterday. One funeral since last report.—A. R. HUNT.

NEBRASKA.

Dewease, June 3.—One addition here yesterday by confession. Many could not find standing room last night at children's exercises. Bro. and Sister Menzies were with us

The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

last week at Ox Bow and inspired our hearts with their excellent sermons. They will sail for India about Aug. 1.—E. W. YOCUM.

Ulysses.—One added recently at Harvard. The new house is going forward. South Omaha is having additions. They are pushing the building plans. The state board will meet Monday, June 10, at the Lincoln Y. M. C. A., which will be the last meeting till the one on Monday of the convention week. As usual there will be more calls to answer than we can in any way satisfy. I am hopeful that we will go up to the convention with a much more satisfactory report this year than last. Already the receipts are in excess of those of last year, and there seems to be quite a steady interest in mission work. We are attempting to arrange a meeting at North Platte. Atwood and wife are resting in Kansas. They will be ready for work any time now. Isaac Clarke visited Maple Creek recently, and has arranged to give them a short meeting, and hopes to get them at work again. They were to proceed at once to repair the church house. This is a result of the No. 3 convention work. There is prospect of a meeting at Valley in the not distant future. This, too, is No. 3 work. Children's day was observed at Ulysses on June 2, and was successfully carried out with a delightful program. No. 6 churches please take notice that the convention will be held at Waco on 18-20. This is a new congregation and will be greatly encouraged by seeing so many of you.—W. A. BALDWIN.

OHIO.

Columbus, June 3.—W. 4th Ave. Church. Three hundred and sixteen at 20th Century Bible-school Rally yesterday; collection $10.62; average attendance last month 232. In the evening the school rendered the best Children's Day exercises ever given here. Two added by letter at morning service. The pastor will preach the memorial sermon to Dennison Lodge, I. O. O. F., June 16.—M. E. CHATLEY, pastor.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Coyle.—On Lord's day, June 2nd, the new house of worship at Coyle, O. T., was opened for worship and dedicated to Almighty God. It was a day of very great rejoicing. The giving was generous, and all seemed greatly delighted to have the Christian Church have the first house of worship in the magic young city. We remain for one week to preach to the people and to set in order the things that are wanting. Our next dedication will be at Akron, O., June 16.—L. L. CARPENTER.

Guthrie, May 30.—Prof. C. E. Millard was with us three weeks (I should say two weeks as the third was a complete rain out) recently in a meeting. He led the singing and gave us solos and illustrated songs each evening. Prof. Millard has remarkably fine command of his voice and never fails to charm his hearers. His illustrated songs of evenings were especially fine, and by request were, many of them, repeated several times during the meeting. It is no trouble to secure a good hearing with Prof. Millard as an assistant in a meeting. No church need hesitate to secure his assistance for a meeting, fearing that anything of a trashy or frivolous nature will be introduced. This he will not do. All of his work is on a high moral and spiritual plane. He illustrated his evening songs with a powerful dissolving-view stereopticon that gives them a charm and beauty impossible of attainment otherwise. His power for good over the vast numbers that heard him cannot be estimated. Our church was greatly pleased with his work, as well as the large numbers not connected with the church. There were several additions to the church and would have been more, we think, had it not been for the fact that we were completely rained out the last week. I take great pleasure in commending Prof. Millard to any church for a meeting. He is pre-eminently the pastor's helper.—J. T. OGLE.

Norman, May 28.—Two confessions and baptisms at last Sunday's services. This church has one of the best Endeavor societies in the territory. Good Sunday-school and prayer-meeting.—A. B. CARPENTER, pastor.

Shawnee, May 27, 1901.—There were seven additions here yesterday, making over ninety since January 1.—JOHN H. MCQUERRY.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, June 5.—Bro. Z. T. Sweeney began a meeting with us May 9 and continued for three weeks' preaching each evening to a large audience. We were forced to go to the gospel tabernacle for the concluding service where about 5,000 people gathered in a union service to hear the sermon on "Why I am not an Agnostic." Vine St. Church has added 50 souls to her number and the membership is greatly stirred. All the Christian churches of the city will reap great good from the meeting We have 14 congregations here and we feel nearer to them now because of the fellowship in this meeting. We are better understood because of this meeting. Our own faith in our plea is stronger and we are better fitted for work.—W. E. ELLIS.

TEXAS.

Austin, June 6.—There were seven additions to the Central Church last Lord's day. Five of these were by confession and baptism. We now have additions almost every Sunday.—J. W. LOWBER.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, June 3.—Four added here yesterday—two from another communion, one by baptism and one by statement. All heads of families.—W. H. BAGBY.

VIRGINIA.

Roanoke.—I have just closed a meeting with W. S. Hoye at Beaver Creek, Md., which resulted in eight additions, making 25 accessions to the church there in May.—CEPHAS SHELBURNE.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wyatt.—I closed my meeting here on May 29 and organized a church of 41 members. June 5, I begin at New Matamoras, O., another mission field.—JAMES W. ZACHARY.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, June 8.—Nine added since last report, making 73 in all. One addition last Sunday.—C. M. KREIDLER.

Sunday-School Literature.

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

The Two Words.

One day a harsh word rashly said
Upon an evil journey sped,
And like a sharp and cruel dart
It pierced a fond and loving heart—
It turned a friend into a foe,
And everywhere brought pain and woe.

A kind word followed it one day,
Flew swiftly on its blessed way;
It healed the wound, it soothed the pain,
And friends of old were friends again;
It made the hate and anger cease,
And everywhere brought joy and peace.

But yet the harsh word left a trace
The kind word could not quite efface;
And though the heart its love regained,
It bore a scar that long remained;
Friends could forgive, but not forget,
Or lose the sense of keen regret.

Oh, if we could but learn to know
How swift and sure one word can go,
How would we weigh with utmost care
Each thought before it sought the air,
And only speak the words that move
Like white-winged messengers of love!

Drifting With the Current.

By M. LaFay Gestrue.

"May, what are you going with that agent for? Don't you know he is a fast fellow? People will soon say of you, 'Any fellow can go with her!'"

"Oh, you are so cranky. I like a fellow a little fast. People's say don't bother me. Go with a fellow not afraid of his dimes and you will always have good times! A fellow afraid to spend a cent and a girl who gets scared at a word and turns up her nose at a cigar fairly suffocate me. Sometimes I wish I had as much sense as you have but then I believe I have the best time." So spoke May Gregory in reply to Anne Ross.

"People's say don't bother me very much either, if I know I am doing right. But your conscience is superior to your conduct and I wish to credit you as having superior motives. That Mr. Gendy does not care a fig about you or any other girl in this town. Can you not see it? I prefer to be cranky and will live and die an old maid before I would ever go with just anybody. A fellow a little fast will soon give you the same reputation!" said sensible Anne.

"We'll see some day. Time is the best observer," said May airily.

May was a girl who preferred to glide along and have a good time, shifting all responsibilities upon others. Anne was a jolly girl but there was a strong characteristic of seriousness which made her cautious and kept her from the danger line. She was more popular than May, but never regarded herself as popular at all. May thought she pursued the right course and was most popular indeed. All the young men knew her, every stranger who came to town was introduced to her. She always had company, attended all the traveling entertainments, frequently made the acquaintance of many of the entertainers. Another thing, she delighted to honor the wealthy, sit at their feet, sing their praises to every one and imply that she was on the most intimate terms with them. Poor girl! Oftentimes they were no credit to her or any one, her song of praise was because she put wealth versus character. May might regard wealth as a license but she met many who did not agree with her.

Anne preferred congenial souls for her most intimate friends, preferred those associates whose circumstances would not embarrass her own tastes or exhibit her father's poverty. She desired to be helpful as well as to be helped. All gentlemen treated her politely, the wealthy and unwealthy, the educated and uneducated. But Anne never interpreted this in a vain way. She was more apt to underrate herself.

Both girls started into school at the same time, belonged to the same church, lived in the same neighborhood. The first year in high school work ended May's schooling, dresses, beaux and parties claiming her attention. Anne went on and completed her high school course, May thought her very foolish indeed and was soon gay in society. "Poor Anne, she is so selfish!" said May often to her mother. Anne finally passed out of her mind.

May splurged on in social gayeties for several years just to her notion and soon made the reputation Anne had warned her against. She had a gentle, forgiving spirit. There was nothing bad about her except her reputation but she had unfitted herself for good society, usefulness in serving others, in making a home, by the foolish disposition of chasing after mere idle pleasures, drifting with the current, a giddy interpretation of having a good time. The tastes she had cultivated made her unhappy in any other society than the frivolous.

By and by she went to the city to visit an aunt and made similar acquaintances. Others would have been repulsed, as Anne was. She met "a fellow a little fast" and wrote home that he was just the one—Mr. Walter Byrd. She thought he had wealthy connections and he thought she had. Both based their opinions upon the "airs" each put on—an opinion previous to an acquaintance.

In a few months May returned home to prepare for her marriage. Walter was to visit her once, which he did, and May entertained at the home of a friend. "The friend desired so much to do so that she was prevailed upon to yield!" So there was a little gathering of May's friends at the Thompson's, a wealthy family whose daughter Mildred was just as frivolous as May, and who, by the way, made May the guest of honor all the week that Mr. Byrd was in town. The final date of the marriage of May Gregory and Walter Byrd was announced. The Gregorys did not meet Mr. Byrd, they were out of town.

The marriage, however, occurred at Gregory's, and let it be said to their credit, was not an elaborate affair. They were not wealthy, neither was Mr. Byrd, as was soon known. They never kept house, or boarded, but visited—drifted—back and forth between his people and hers.

The events of their two years of wedded life would make an interesting story, illustrating the folly of just living for a good time, a suicide of their best natures, lives without a purpose.

To-day Walter Byrd is in a large city hunting work of an easy character to support himself. May has an uncle in business who gives her sufficient work to clothe herself, and Grandma Gregory takes care of the baby. Walter and May are not divorced but this is the life they are living

It is hardly necessary to chronicle the fate of Anne Ross. She graduated from the high school, taught school and was a great help to her father. When he died she was her mother's mainstay, a blessing to her. She is a happy girl whose life has had in it a noble purpose. Her ideal of a man is one of unsullied name, stability and moral worth. There are such.

Are you living just to have a good time? Remember May Gregory. To toil, to dare, to do, to struggle, comes in the life of endeavor. That is the happy life.

Why The Whistle Blew.

A leading railroad lawyer, who has had much to do with human nature, says to a Detroit reporter: "Never cross-question an Irishman from the old sod." And he gave an illustration from his own experience.

A section-hand had been killed by an express train and his widow was suing for damages. The main witness swore positively that the locomotive whistle had not sounded until after the whole train had passed over his departed friend.

"See here, McGinnis," said I, "you admit that the whistle blew?"

"Yis, sor, it blewed, sor."

"Now if that whistle sounded in time to give Michael warning, the fact would be in favor of the company, wouldn't it?"

"Yis, sor, and Mike would be tistifyin' here this day." The jury giggled.

"Very well. Now what earthly purpose could there be for the engineer to blow his whistle after Mike had been struck?"

"I preshume thot the whistle wor for the nixt mon on the thrack, sor."

I quit, and the widow got all she asked. —Youth's Companion.

Puts the "Ginger" In.

The Kind of Food used by Athletes.

A former college athlete, one of the long distance runners, began to lose his power of endurance. His experience with a change in food is interesting.

"While I was in training on the track athletic team, my daily 'jogs' became a task, until after I was put on Grape-Nuts Food for two meals a day. After using the Food for two weeks I felt like a new man. My digestion was perfect, nerves steady and I was full of energy.

"I trained for the mile and the half mile runs (those events which require so much endurance) and then the long daily 'jogs,' which before had been such a task, were clipped off with ease. I won both events.

"The Grape-Nuts Food put me in perfect condition and gave me my 'ginger.' Not only was my physical condition made perfect, and my weight increased, but my mind was made clear and vigorous so that I could get out my studies in about half the time formerly required. Now most all of the university men use Grape-Nuts for they have learned its value, but I think my testimony will not be amiss and may perhaps help some one to learn how the best results can be obtained. Please do not publish my name."

There is a reason for the effect of Grape-Nuts Food on the human body and brain. The certain elements in wheat and barley are selected with special reference to their power for rebuilding the brain and nerve centers. The product is then carefully and scientifically prepared so as to make it easy of digestion. The physical and mental results are so apparent after two or three weeks' use as to produce a profound impression. The Food can be secured at any first-class grocery store.

The Evening Trains.

The first train leaves at 6 P. M.
For the land where the poppy blows,
And mother dear is the engineer,
And the passenger laughs and crows.

The palace car is the mother's arms;
The whistle, a low, sweet strain;
The passenger winks and nods and blinks,
And goes to sleep on the train.

At 8 P. M. the next train starts
For the poppy-land afar,
The summons clear falls on the ear,
"All aboard for the sleeping car!"

But what is the fare to poppy-land?
I hope it is not too dear;
The fare is this—a hug and a kiss—
And it's paid to the engineer.

So I ask of Him who children took
On his knee in kindness great,
"Take charge, I pray, of the trains each day,
That leave at 6 and 8.

"Keep watch of the passengers," thus I pray,
"For to me they are very dear;
And a special ward, O gracious Lord,
O'er the gentle engineer."—Exchange.

"I Trust You."

I was only twelve years old, and, I think, the youngest and most successful pick-pocket and thief-in-general in Brighton. I had been driving a brisk trade for four years, and had never been "nabbed," nor even, I believe, suspected. I had a round, rosy, innocent-looking face, and very good manners, when I chose to assume them.

One wet, dreary day in October I found, like Othello, that for the time being my occupation was gone; it was late in the afternoon, the shop-keepers had put up their shutters, the very few people in the streets kept my hands out of their pockets by keeping their own in.

I was lounging against the railings in Albert Street, feeling rather down in the mouth, when a door on the other side was opened and a clear, ringing whistle attracted my notice. A young man stood on the steps, holding some letters in his hand. I dashed across and touched my cap.

"Can you post these for me?" he inquired. "I am sorry to send you in the rain, but there is no one here to take them, and I dare not go out myself, as I am not well." I noticed then that he looked very ill. He was tall and slender, not more than twenty-four years of age, but his face was white and thin, with a bright crimson spot in either cheek and his large, clear gray eyes shone like stars; the blue veins stood out like cords on his temples, and the long, thin hands were almost transparent. He had a thick plaid wrapped round him, but he shivered in the damp air.

"I'll post them, sir," I said quickly.

"Thank you. Here's a shilling for you. And will you also run round to Mr. Gordon's—the vicar of St. John's Church, you know—with this little packet?"

"Certainly, sir." But all my professional cunning could not keep the delighted grin from my face. That packet contained money. Mr. Gordon might bless his stars if he ever saw it.

I think the beautiful eyes read my thoughts. The invalid's thin, white hands rested lightly on my shoulder, and he looked me straight in the face.

"I trust you, my boy," he said gently.

"You may, sir," I answered promptly, as It ouched my cap again.

He put his hand to his side with a look of pain as he turned away.

I hurried off on my errands.

"I'll be hanged if I can grab the tin now!" I said to myself as I dropped the letters in the post-box, with that gentle "I trust you" ringing in my ears.

"No cove ever said that to me before, and I'm blest if they had reason to; but here goes to old Gordon's."

I got a job that kept me all the next day. When it was finished I ran round to Albert Street. I wanted to tell the man who had trusted me that for the first time in my life I had been worthy of trust.

With a far greater pain than I felt when my father was taken to prison for breaking a policeman's head, I saw that all the blinds were drawn. With the boldness of a street Arab I ran up the steps and rang the bell. A sour-looking woman opened the door.

"What do you want?" she demanded.

"Please, can I see the gentleman that lives here?"

"No, you can't; he's dead."

"Dead!" I cried, bursting into tears, regardless of the passers-by.

"Come inside, boy, and tell me what is the matter," said the woman.

I sobbed out my story, and begged her to let me just look at my friend.

"What is the matter?" inquired a gentle voice. And I turned to see a young lady with fair hair and gray eyes dimmed with weeping.

"This boy wants to see your brother, Miss Graham," said the landlady, briefly; "he says he spoke kindly to him yesterday."

"At what time?" she asked eagerly.

"Late in the afternoon, please, miss," I sobbed.

She glanced at the woman.

"Perhaps he was the last one darling Claude spoke to," she said, trying to steady her voice.

"Very likely, miss, for when I went into his room at half-past five he was quite unconscious, and never recovered, as you know."

"Come here and tell me what he said to you," said Miss Graham, gently.

I repeated all I had told the landlady.

"So like him!" she murmured, with tears in her eyes. "And you would like to see him? Come with me, then."

She led the way upstairs to a quiet room where lay the lifeless form of the only man who had ever spoken kindly to me.

He lay as if asleep, the fair head turned a little to one side, the white hands folded in a natural position on the lifeless breast, and on the calm features rested the peacefulness of that repose which "God gives to his beloved."

My tears fell fast as I gazed at the sweet face. "I wanted to tell him that I kept my word," I sobbed, "but now he will never know."

The bereaved sister laid her hand on my arm. "Ask God to prepare you to go where he is going, and then you can tell him."

"I will," I answered, checking my tears. "Please, miss, may I just kiss him?"

She nodded and I kissed the cold, rigid lips which only a few hours before had uttered that gentle "I trust you, my boy."

"I'll starve afore I'll steal again," I said, as I followed Miss Graham from the room.

Hermann Outjuggled.

Hermann had the reputation of being the most skillful juggler of his day. His feats were marvelous. But they are as simple as addition when compared with the wondrous juggling of Rome in making "converts" (?) and in manipulating statistics.

How Rome makes converts is illustrated by a story from Hartford. A young Jew in that city wished to marry an Irish Roman Catholic girl. Mary was willing—on condition that he become a Roman Catholic. Levi consented, and he and Mary went before the priest, who threw a few drops of water on Levi and said: "Now you are a Catholic." He then married the couple.

A few months afterward the priest called upon the couple one Friday and found them sitting down to dinner, with roast chicken on the table. "Why, my children!" exclaimed the priest, "this is Friday! You should not eat meat to-day!" "O, father!" said Levi, "sit down with us and have dinner."

The priest again expostulated, when Levi exclaimed: "I'll make it all right!" and dipping his fingers in a bowl of water, he sprinkled the chicken, and turning to the priest said: "Now, father, that is lobster!"

This is just about the way papal converts are made.

How they are unmade—or rather, how Romanists are made Protestants, is illustrated in the case of little Micky Mulloy. The priest met him and said: "Micky, have you prayed to the Virgin to-day?" "No, father," replied Micky. "Why not?" asked the priest. "Well, father," said the boy, "I read in the New Testament that when Jesus was a boy Mary lost him for three days—couldn't find him anywhere. So I guess I can't trust a woman who lost her own son; I will trust in the Lord himself for salvation."—American Citizen.

About Christian Science.

The opinions of Mr. T. J. Hudson, author of "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," about Christian Science are sure to be interesting. Mr. Hudson's book explains and defends the system of mental healing called suggestive therapeutics, but that is a very different thing from Christian Science. Writing on this subject in Everybody's Magazine he says:

"Among the numerous causes which unite to swell the ranks of Christian Science there is one which seems to be of almost universal application, and that is the astounding lack of the power of logical induction in primitive minds. Thus, the founder's book iterates and reiterates that her theories are demonstrated by facts of everyday experience. What facts? Why, the fact that people who believe in her theories are healed by other people who believe in her theories. This is re-enforced by the Scripture quotation, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' This is the sum total of the inductive logic of Christian Science. I have said that it is the logic of primitive minds. Thus the American savage, whose theory of disease is that the patient is beset by evil spirits, effects his cures by frightening away said evil spirits by means of hideous noises and a diabolical make-up. The best authorities tell us that the Indian medicine man's record of cures equals that of the M. D's or the C. S. D's. Doubtless the savage regards this as demonstrative of the correctness of his theory; and the Christian Science logician must admit it, for 'by their fruits ye shall know them.'

"The most astounding of all the manifestations of the atavic tendencies of Christian Science consists in the practice of fetishism, practically in its primeval purity. Many such practices are revealed through private sources, but I will confine myself to one or two of those that are already notorious. First, then, the founder's book itself is a fetish. In the first place, it is worshiped as of divine origin, equal, if not superior, in authority to the Bible. Again, the book is fervently believed to be itself invested with the divine power of healing. The authority for each of these beliefs is found in the book itself. Its author's claim to divine inspiration is boldly stated, and the faithful are informed that a devout perusal of its pages will heal their diseases. Accordingly the truly good Christian Scientist reads it in an ecstasy of holy joy, and some of them have been known to sleep with it under their pillows. If this is not fetish worship, will some unprejudiced student of comparative theology tell us its legitimate classification?"

An Easy Job.

The story is told of a young man who once wrote Henry Ward Beecher a solicitous letter. This young man was anxious to find "an easy job."

The following was Beecher's reply:

"You cannot be an editor; do not try the law; do not think of the ministry; let alone all ships, shops and merchandise; abhor politics; don't practice medicine; be not a farmer nor a mechanic; neither be a soldier nor a sailor; don't work; don't study; don't think. None of these are easy. Oh, my son, you have come into a hard world! I know of only one easy place in it, and that is the grave."—Sabbath School Visitor.

Just How Much?

"I would do anything to get an education!" said Joe, savagely thumping the down sofa pillow till a fine, fluffy dust flew from seams and corners.

"Just how much would you do, Joe?" said practical Uncle Phil, interestedly. "As much as Elihu Burritt?"

"How much did he do?" inquired Joe. "Was he a boy without a chance?"

"No, indeed!" said Uncle Phil, who never sympathized with whining Joe's way of looking at things. "As many chances as you have, or any other boy with brains and ten fingers. Had to work at the forge ten or twelve hours a day, but that didn't hinder him from working away in his mind while his hands were busy. Used to do hard sums in arithmetic while he was blowing the bellows."

"Whew!" said Joe, as if he, too, saw a pair of bellows at hand. "How old was he? Older than I am, wasn't he?"

"About sixteen, when his father died. By and by he began to study other things. Before he died he knew eighteen languages, and nearly twice that number of dialects. All this time he kept hard at work blacksmithing."

"I don't have to work as hard as that!" said Joe after a while, with a shamefaced looked that rejoiced his uncle's heart.

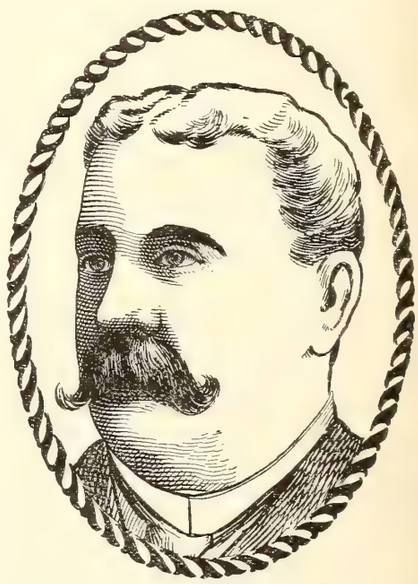
Joe was a farmer's son, and in busy times there was a good deal for a boy of his age to do. So far he had not been spared to go away to any preparatory school to "fit" for college. So he had faint-heartedly and sulkily given up the thought of going there. Somehow, Uncle Phil's words had put things in a new light.—Exchange.

Composition on Breathing.

A boy, 14 years old, who was told to write all he could about breathing in a composition, handed in the following:

"Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath, we would die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait until they get out-doors. Girls kill the breath with corsets that squeeze the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I had rather be a boy so I can run and holler and have a great big diagram."

Mr. Beecher's Wit.



On one occasion, as Mr. Beecher was in the midst of an impassioned speech, some one attempted to interrupt him by suddenly crowing like a cock. It was done to perfection; a number of people laughed in spite of themselves, and Mr. Beecher's friends felt that in a moment the whole effect of the meeting, and of Mr. Beecher's thrilling appeals, might collapse. The orator, however, was equal to the occasion. He stopped, listened till the crowing ceased, and then, with a look of surprise, pulled out his watch. "Morning already!" he said, "My watch is only at ten. But there can be no mistake about it. The instincts of the lower animals are infallible." There was a roar of laughter. The "lower animal" in the gallery collapsed, and Mr. Beecher was able to resume as if nothing had occurred.—Young People's Paper.

Advance Society Letters.

Jennie Hollandsworth, Bismarck, Ill.: "I guess you have my name mixed up; I am not Bobby Black. Bobby Black does not live around here. I think Lola Cox's plan (for the children to write short pieces for our page) a good one, only I don't believe I can write anything. Do you mean stories we have read, or real incidents of our lives?" (Made-up stories, or real incidents.) "I can't quite come up with Francesca Taylor in reading books. I am 13." Blanche Greer, Akron, O.; "I suppose it is too late for my guess but I will send it anyway. We should not try to do everything for the prize we are to win. I think the tramp no other than Edgar Brown. We dedicated our new church June 2nd. It is right across from the old one. It is small but beautiful, and when one looks upon it a thrill passes over them as they think of the rude buildings in Washington's day. This thrill which I have mentioned is one of awe and reverence in regard to freedom of worship. My name is not Green, but G-r-e-e-r." Bernice Picket, Boulder, Col.: "While up on the mountain last summer, I read your book, 'King Saul.' I liked it very much." (Thank you.) "I have not joined the Av. S. I have thought of it several times but never got down to it." (Please come down and join.) "For my poetry I expect to read Paradise Lost." (I tell you now, Bernice, you have selected a tough one. There are few poems in our language better; but if you are not an old woman—of course you may be, I do not know—you will find it discouraging, I am afraid. However, you may have the right turn of mind for the poem. And I always say, if Milton could live to write it, surely we can pull through comparatively uninjured.) "Where can we find quotations?" (Select any good sentiment from a book by a good author.)

Maude Snow, Crete, Neb.: "Bessie Young (13) and myself wish to join the Av. S. I am 18. I am preparing myself for a teacher "(ah, the fun in store for you!) "and I think the Av. S. will be very helpful." (It is contrary to my custom to print reports but I give the following as an incentive; and perhaps I shall give at least one every month.) Orrell Fidlar, Terre Haute, Ind.: "Well, the time has come for me to send in my report; I have enjoyed the work very much. I read the biography of Alex. Campbell by T. W. Grafton and a large history of France by Charlotte M. Yonge." (By the way, children, who has read Heir of Radcliffe by this same author?) "Poetry; Vision of Sir Launfal, Lady of the Lake, Bitter-Sweet and many short poems by Paul Laurence Dunbar." (Who has read anything by Dunbar? He is the negro poet; writes for the Saturday Evening Post, etc.) "By the way, I heard Mr. Dunbar the other evening. He can read his poetry as well as he can write it. I think he is a colored Riley and that is saying a great deal, because Riley is one of my favorite poets." (The Gobelins will git you—remember that?) "Bible—from first into Luke. Quotations—" (All are given, but have not space for them here; wish we had.) "Some books I have read: Little Minister, Kentucky Cardinal and Aftermath—the last two are fine, Allen brings in so much about nature—Wide, Wide World, Sentimental Tommy—" (Have not space to give all. However, have room for another she names,namely);"I enjoy 'Pete' so much. There isn't enough at a time, we just get a good taste. If my guess isn't right, I think I will have to buy Shem." (Good for you; you buy it!) "Mamma said when she first began to read the Children's Page that she knew you were a teacher. My two brothers are teachers, my sister and sister-in-law are ex-teachers. I know you are not like the teachers I know." (Poor lot as a rule; I am proud to be an exception.) "I wish you would have your picture put in the EVANGELIST some week. I know we would all be pleased. Well, I must stop. I pity you if you have to read many such letters as this!" (I have decided to go on a vacation trip and I think that will bring me around all right, and I shall get over it in a week or two, down at the old farm. The college has closed for this session, and I am going to a farm where there are ponds with rafts on them—one is a big pond with an island in the middle, and a tree on the island; and a squirrel lived under the tree the last time I was acquainted with him. I shall pole myself over on the raft and see if he is still at home. And I shall fish from the end of the raft—and not catch anything, either, unless I have better luck than I did last summer.)

Mattie Upton, Houstonia, Mo., sends me a little pressed bouquet tied with blue thread. It makes me happy to look at it, because it is a thought of me from the heart of a friend.

Melvin Leddin, Ospur, Ill.: "I write to tell you that unsigned letter was from Melvin Leddin and not from Sallie Tucker. Our new member, Turney Brown, has thrown up his society work." (I regret that the work disagreed with Turney. Some stomachs are naturally delicate.) Wakefield, Ky.: Bessie (13) and Nancy Green (11) join the Av. S. Mayme Elder, Hematite, Mo., does not think it will be hard to keep our resolutions. Her favorites are In His Steps and Ben Hur. She guessed Nap was Mrs. Morris' husband. Ethel Mae Taylor, Harlan, Ia.: "My favorite books: Scottish Chiefs, Little Men, Little Women, Jo's Boys, etc. I think 'Pete' just capital." Mary Emily Day, Sparta, Mo., forgot once to keep her resolutions, but she began anew the very next morning. On her birthday she received Wonders of the Sky, by Russell, Paradise Lost and a dish. I would like to eat some lemon-ice out of her dish; I think that is better than ice cream, but I suspect you don't. Edith Foote says she thinks Pete should have told the truth when her mamma asked her where she had been. I myself think she ought to have been ashamed of herself. Edith is 9; she prefers "Pete" to "Red Box Clew." J. Halbert Erb, Clarence, N. Y., thinks Nap murdered the owner of Linda May's dog. Floyd E. Morgan is 14. He says: "I think Nap is the man who loved Mrs. Morris, and couldn't get her and he came and asked for money to get even with her." Floyd lives in Carlisle, Ia., Alice C. Terrell, Unionville, thought Nap was Pete's father or uncle. But I have concluded to print no more guesses since the mystery has already been explained and it will be made plainer next week. Who got the prize? That is what you all want to know. It is now time for you to know. If you are good at "Tit, tat, toe," you will understand me when I say that Jack got the game. In other words, nobody guessed correctly. I am glad. It saves me just half a dollar. The two who came nearest wrote as follows: Henry S. Bagley, Mabelvale, Ark.: "I think Nap knew some secret of Mrs. Morris', and to keep quiet, wants that amount. He is no kin to her but they will reform him and he will marry Miss Dollie. Edgar will marry Miss Jennie." As you are not required to guess who become the happy brides of Nap and Edgar, it matters not whether Henry was right or wrong. If he had just added that Nap was a tramp pretending to be Mr. Morris' brother, he would now possess a copy of Shem—and a very good book, too! Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark.: "I think Nap is Mrs. Morris' husband's brother." If she had only said he pretended to be, instead of was, Shem would go to her on the morning train from Albany. Nearly everybody else thought Nap kin to Pete or to Mrs. Morris, or her old sweetheart. We learn that Arkansas raises good guessers as well as good sweet potatoes. Honor List—Mattie Upton (9th qr.); Orrell Fidlar, Delight Shafer, Decatur, Texas, (11th qr.); Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky., (9th qr).

Next week we will all go out and hunt for Pete, who is lost, you may remember.

The Divine Family.*

TEXT: "Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."—Eph. 3:15.

The mid-week meeting is in many churhes more like a family gathering than any other service. It is a meeting for mutual exhortation and encouragement. Love, sympathy, confidence prevail. But even if the majority of the church are assembled, it is but a small part of the great family, the household of faith.

Unity.

There is a close and vital union existing among the children of God. Men of the same class, of the same political opinion, or of congenial tastes may form a society; but a family is formed by generation. We do not choose our parents, or our sisters or brothers. We are born into the family, and there is therefore a natural affinity existing between the different members. We are united one to another by virtue of a common parentage. Opinions, tastes, talents and predilections have nothing whatever to do with it. If we love Him that begot, we shall love also them that are begotten (1 John 5:1).

Is there not here a fruitful lesson for those who plead for the reunion of the divided household? How can we be divided, if we are all alike the children of one Father? It may be that we can best promote fellowship and unity among the estranged and scattered disciples by recognizing what already exists—a common Fatherhood. Do we not still say, "Our Father," and do we not mean the Father of all our brethren?

Diversity.

A family is characterized by diversity as well as unity. There are diversities of talent and inclination. One son engages in merchandise, another in manufactures, another in medicine. One daughter goes to the academy and becomes a musician, another takes up literature. And so they separate, each following a special bent, but in the midst of diversity, their unity is not lost, nor at all impinged. In the church we find the feminine and the masculine type of character. The masculine glories in conflict; it finds its arena in contending for practical righteousness, not in genuflections, nor in the quiet, passive state of constant worship. If men are not attracted to your church, inquire whether the church stands at all for the masculine type of Christian character.

There may likewise be differences of cult, or the forms of worship, without any sacrifice of union. Among Protestants, certainly an elaborate ritual will never find favor; but as spirituality deepens, the worshipers will require dignity, solemnity and richness, as well as warmth, in their public worship. The church can surely maintain its unity, in spite of such diversities as are found in almost any human family.

All sections of the world, east, west, north and south (Luke 13:29), and all races and kindreds and tribes and tongues, are to be found in the divine family. The black and the brown, the yellow and the white, the rich and the poor, souls from every conceivable state of culture and social condition, constitute this great family. Students of sociology will find eventually that social solidarity is impossible through any other agency than the gospel of Christ.

The Name.

The name of Christ glorifies this family, but it does more, it constitutes it. "There is none other Name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Let us not use the Name in a superficial sense, but as indicating character and the energy by which that character is attained. Then the charm of other names will lessen, and they will lose their significance and therefore their value, and the family will be one in Name.

The Absent Members.

"In heaven and on earth," present and absent; by this language we are again assured that the departed are not dead, as is sometimes foolishly taught. They live no longer in the body; they are absent from the body, but, in the expressive language of Paul, that means that they are "present with the Lord!" There are few churches but have an honorable roll of these absent members. Cherish their memory. They rest from their labors, but their loving and fruitful works do follow them. This lesson teaches us the common Fatherhood, the common humanity, and the common sacrifice, by which it is secured and maintained. May our watch-words be, "Unity" and "Peace."

Prayer.

May we come to Thee, our Father, without unbrotherly feelings toward those of the family from whom we are separated by things adventitious and temporary. Rather may our hearts be filled with love and peace and joy, as we consider the great number of the saved; as we witness the growth of the divine family. Give us a closer unity in every congregation, and among all denominations, until at last every barrier is removed and every divisive agent destroyed, and we are indeed and in truth one in Christ. Amen.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Leading Paper for the Young People of the Christian Church.

W. W. DOWLING, EDITOR.

WHAT IT IS.

Our Young Folks is a SIXTEEN-PAGE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY, and is devoted to the welfare and work of the Young People of the Church of Christ, and is a first-class journal in every particular, having for its contributors the best writers of the day along its particular lines of work.

WHAT IT CONTAINS.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS contains, among other valuable features, the following special departments:

I. The Picture Gallery: First-class pictures of prominent Ministers, Sunday-school Superintendents, Endeavorers and other Christian Workers, with biographical sketches.

W. W. DOWLING.

II. The Church: Short, pointed articles on First Principles and Practical Duties; Talks on the Midweek Prayer-meeting Topics, and Notes of Church Doings.

III. The Sunday-School: Full Expository, Illustrative and Practical Notes on the International Texts, that will afford teachers and older pupils all the aid needed in the study, teaching and application of the Sunday-school lesson, which makes it, in the opinion of our foremost Sunday-school workers, the best Lesson Help in existence.

IV. The Y. P. S. C. E.: Expository Notes on the Y. P. S. C. E. and Junior Prayer-meeting Topics for each week, with Illustrative and Practical Applications and Quotations, that will help young Endeavorers to take an active and intelligent part in the service. Also notes, news, queries and answers, and practical articles on all phases of the Endeavor work.

A New Heaven and a New Earth.*

We have reached the end of the story of our Lord's ministry, as told in the New Testament Scriptures. We have followed him from the cradle to the grave, and from the open tomb on Easter morning into the opening skies, where he has been crowned Lord of lords and King of kings, and the Eternal High Priest of humanity. We have listened to his voice as he spoke to the persecutor, Saul, and to the beloved disciple, John. We have listened to his declaration, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forever more." It is fitting that these lessons should conclude with a picture of the new heaven and new earth, for these are the fruit of his ministry of grace unto men.

When the Babe of Bethlehem was born men knew almost nothing of heaven and but little of earth. Few of the peoples on the globe had any knowledge of the eternal Father or any conception of spiritual things. Even the chosen people, Israel, cherished carnal ideas of God and held vague and shadowy notions of the future life, which gave little of solace in sorrow or hope in death. This world was almost equally a mystery, and the thought of human brotherhood had been born in but a few of the loftiest minds. The earth was filled with human monsters, as were the heavens with superhuman. The pitiless gods of the pagans looked down from the skies upon a race of equally merciless men. The race waited for one to come who should draw away the veil from the face of God, placed there by the depravity of man, that his goodness and glory might shine down into human life and transform it. Whatever the book of Revelation may signify besides, it assuredly presents us with the vision of this glorious consummation. It shows us an exalted humanity, lifted onto the throne of God in the person of the Son of Man, and enjoying an intimacy of fellowship with the unseen that can only be expressed in terms of closest earthly relations.

It is unnecessary to discuss whether the vision embodied in our present lesson is that of an experience only to be realized in the future life, or one whose beginnings at least are to be enjoyed in the earthly life. Certainly its full consummation is reserved for a day yet to be. But it may be that the Church of Christ has it as her sublime mission to bring about that spiritual regeneration of humanity which shall result in the new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. We are given in our lesson some of the characteristics of this new condition which make it worthy of the supreme ambition of the soul.

With the passing away of the first heaven and the first earth it is said that the sea shall disappear. The sea was, to the ancients, a symbol of unfathomable mystery, of insuperable obstacles, of impassable bounds. What lay beyond its dreary wastes they never expected to know. Its awful perils they dared not brave far from shore. If other worlds lay beyond no communication could be had with them. In the new spiritual condition of man, as wrought by the gospel, these limitations will be removed. Life will be fuller and freer; the whole earth but one estate throughout whose ample bounds all God's family may freely roam, finding home anywhere that duty leads, because the Father and his children are there. Already we are beginning to see the promise of this freedom and fellowship, though yet restricted and marred by our folly and sin.

The splendor of this new life is represented by a glorious city, the New Jerusalem, descending unto earth, whose beauty and happiness could be set forth by no other figure than that of the chaste and happy bride coming with glowing face and throbbing heart into the presence of her loving husband. The true glory of this city, as of every other, is in its dwellers. Buildings and streets, commerce and wealth, cannot make a great or happy city. Noble and unselfish citizens, seeking the common good and aspiring to highest ends, these make a city great. Hence we have omitted from our lesson the description of the walls and streets, the foundations and gates, and are shown its atmosphere of holiness, its fellowship of sympathy, its illumination of truth. God dwells with men and identifies himself with them as a Father. He dries the eyes of the mourner, banishes death, with all the mourning and crying and pain that attend it in human experience, and causes life to flow freely as a fountain for all them that are heirs through Jesus Christ. All such are to be known as children of God and are to inherit all things.

No visible temple will there be, for the universe will find its supreme power and privilege of worship in the immediate presence of God and the Lamb. Sun and moon are no longer needed to lighten the way of men, for infinite truth and grace shall flood the path of the just as it grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Unto its glory the nations shall all contribute in the measure of their ability, bringing into the holy city all that they have wrought of the true, the beautiful and the good. Kings shall count it their highest honor to be permitted to add in the least to its splendor by their gifts; and he shall be least in that day who has done nothing toward the furnishing of this home for the redeemed. All time shall contribute to its perfect enrichment, and within its portals can nothing that defileth penetrate. No guards are needed at its gates, which stand open through the eternal day, over whose horizon no shadow of coming night ever hovers. Evil shrinks from approaching this blest abode whose unsullied holiness repels sin by its very whiteness. They who enter in have already been enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, their names recorded on the white page of mercy with the crimson blood of the dying Savior. And from that sweet and wholly satisfying home they shall never care to wander again, for there is naught in all the universe any more to tempt them from the side of him whom their hearts have found to be perfect goodness and love.

May it be ours, who have thus so long been following the Lamb wherever he leads us, to bear some humble share in bringing in the better day, and the new heaven and earth wherein dwelleth perfect righteousness and peace. May we have a right to enter in through the gates into the city, and may the welcome of the loving Lord greet us at the threshold of that better country.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 23.

How Temperance Would Help Transform the Earth.

(Rev. 21:1-7.)

The earth is full of wrong and groaning and misery and pain. One of the fruitful causes of agony in our world is intemperance in drink. And yet with all this misery, we look forward to a time when this old world shall be better. Nay, we can even expect that truth and righteousness and goodness shall, in the end, triumph, and the earth be transformed.

Truth is eternal, falsehood finite. Right is eternal, wrong finite. Shall there not come a time, then, when truth and righteousness shall be triumphant and falsehood and wrong shall be no more?

When we think of the numbers who, even now, and even in our own acquaintance, are suffering from the influences of intemperance, we can conceive of what a change would follow if its evils were removed. Our topic does not assume that all the evils of the world are due to intemperance. It does not declare that the banishing of intemperance would transform the earth. It merely claims that if intemperance were cured, this would help to change the complexion of affairs. There are other evils just as great, no doubt. But there are few.

Here is a man who for months, even years, has been living a temperate life. He has built up a good business. His people believe that their past woes are over; and all seems happy. But one day he falls again. All the business that has been the result of years of patient labor is gone in a week's debauch. Customers forsake the poor fellow. Family is in need. Daughters are made to blush, sons to hang their heads in shame, wife is sleepless and her nerves shattered and her health undermined. What an old, old story this is!

Suppose these men should all straighten up, just for one year, what an effect upon the world! Men now idle would be at work. Firms now tottering would grow strong. Families now in want, and worse yet, in mental anguish, would be blessed.

Transformations are not accomplished in a hurry. Those who believe that the passing of a law will usher in the millennium are reckoning without their host—human frailty. There is but one way to achieve this reform and that is by the slow process of human regeneration. Make men better, stronger, abler to resist all sorts of temptation; and the reforms will follow.

The great business corporations and the employers of labor and the necessities of business are doing much to combat the evil of intemperance. It is fast coming about that the drunkard, or even the hard drinker, can get no work of any importance. The more relentlessly this law of business acts in the shutting out of inebriates, the better. It is working a vast deal more effectively than most statutes of prohibition have been found to work. A sober, industrious civilization is a surer cure for intemperance than legislation. A sober, honest, transforming Christianity is the surest cure of all.

A GREAT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Young Man from Middlefield

By MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

THIS ENTRANCING STORY of twenty-six chapters ran as a serial in the columns of OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, and was followed with absorbing and ever-increasing interest by the many thousands of readers of that weekly journal. It relates, in the popular author's most charming style, the trials and triumphs of a plain young man from the country, who left his father's farm and went to the great city to fill a position in the lumber yard of his uncle. In his new surroundings he came into contact with a variety of people, every way different from the plain, honest country folks with whom he had formerly associated; but in the midst of his new surroundings, with their many temptations, he maintained his Christian integrity and lived up to the motto he had adopted, to "Make Christ First in Everything."

His good influence soon began to be felt in his uncle's family, among his fellow-workmen, and most of all among the young Christian Endeavorers with whom he associated, whose society was in due time revolutionized.

EVERY YOUNG PERSON should read this charming volume, and it should at once find a place in every Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school Library.

SIZE AND PRICE.—One handsome volume of 257 pages, beautifully printed and substantially bound in cloth, price 75 cents per copy, prepaid.

Christian Publishing Co., 1522 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo.

...OTHER THINGS GROW IN SUMMER...

Why Should Not The Circulation Of The Christian-Evangelist

It is not mere idle talk when we say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is better than it ever was. This is claiming much, for it has always been the exponent of first quality among the religious periodicals of the Current Reformation.

Our Readers have Helped to Make the Christian-Evangelist What It Is, and We Are Depending Upon Their Aid in Improving It Still More.

We are quite certain that our readers believe that individual lives would be better, homes would be happier, and the power of the church would be many times multiplied if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read in every home represented in the church. It is upon this ground that

We Ask for the Hearty Co-operation of Every Reader in this Mid-Summer Effort to Double the Circulation of the Christian-Evangelist.

How are we to accomplish this result? Those whom we are most desirous of reaching do not know the helpfulness of our journal. They must become acquainted with its good qualities. Sample copies accomplish this in a very limited degree; it takes several months for one to become interested in and attached to any particular class of reading. Therefore,

We Offer the Christian-Evangelist for the Six Months Beginning July 1, 1901, and Ending December 31, 1901, for Only Fifty Cents.

If you are really interested in this question of good literature, you may induce every family in your congregation (and many of your neighbors who are not church members) to invest fifty cents for twenty-six weeks' reading of the very best quality. Of course, we shall lose money on all such subscriptions, but

These Are to be Considered as Trial Subscriptions and are to be Discontinued Promptly December 31, 1901, Unless Renewed at the Regular Price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents a Year.

The justification of this very generous offer is the fact that those who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for six months will not desire to part with it after that time, but will renew as regular subscribers. Circulating religious literature is as truly missionary and evangelistic as preaching from the pulpit. Therefore,

We Call Upon Pastors, Sunday-school Superintendents, and all Others Actively Interested in the Advancement of Christian Teaching Among Us to Engage With Us in the Present Effort to Increase the Knowledge, Piety and Zeal for Good Works of Those With Whom They Have Influence. Who Will Send Us the Largest List of Trial Subscribers?

Two-cent postage stamps will be accepted in payment, but the best way to remit large amounts is by Postoffice Order, Express Order or Draft on St. Louis, Chicago or New York.

APPLEGATE.

Chas. R. Applegate and Elizabeth (Minglin) Applegate were born in Hubbard, Trumbull county, Ohio. The former was born June 17, 1832, and died at Scotch Grove, Ia., April 11, 1901. The latter was born Dec. 16, 1835, and died May 27, 1901. He was baptized by Elder Benj. T. Perkey, when about 11 years old. She by Elder W. S. Hayden when about 18 years of age, uniting with the Church of Christ in Hubbard, Ohio, both living consistent Christian lives until the day of their death. They were married June 18, 1858, to which union were born four daughters, all of whom survive them and were present at the death of both parents. They mourn, but not as those who have no hope. He was the youngest of a family of eight, two of whom only remain, Jas. S. and the writer. She the youngest of eleven children, three of whom survive her. They removed to Iowa in April, 1865, settling on the farm where they remained until the day of their death. The funeral services were conducted by Elder J. P Martindale, of Greeley, an intimate friend of the family, in the presence of a large and sympathetic audience of friends and neighbors

LESTER.

Elder James Lester, on May 2nd, departed this life at his home in Williamsville, Ill. At the time of his death he was in his 79th year, and for nearly 50 years had filled the office of elder with honor to himself and with profit to the church. He was a faithful and devoted Christian. He "fought a good fight" and "kept the faith" until his work on earth was finished. He leaves his aged wife and eight children to mourn his departure, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the old church where our brother had worshiped for many years. May the Lord bless his family.

W. W. WEEDON.

WALTER.

Mrs. Ella Walter, wife of S. M. Walter, was born in Adams county, Ill., May 11, 1857, and departed this life May 25, 1901, at the age of 44 years and 14 days. Sister Walter was married to Bro. Walter, April 4, 1880. To them were born seven children, two of whom died in their infancy. In early life the deceased was a member of the M. E. Church, but with her husband joined the Christian Church at this place nearly two years ago. From early life she had been active in Christian work. She was a good wife and mother and neighbor. The bereaved and friends and this church confidently believe that she has gone to the reward of the faithful. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of neighbors and acquaintances.

Merchants' Exchange Saloon

Is the sign over a well known saloon of our city. I stood a Sunday or two ago on the opposite side of the street, when I was approached by one of the many beggars to be found at any time on our streets. He was white-haired, stoop-shouldered, blood-shot eyes, scarlet nose and cheeks, foul teeth and breath, matted beard, soiled clothing, protruding knees and feet and elbows. He asked me for one dime. It has been a custom of mine never to give money away, but to always have the applicant earn it in some way. I said: "If you will tell me the full list of articles that saloon has to exchange I will give you the dime." He looked at the sign and then looked knowingly at me. "Mister, do you want to know jist what they have?"

"Yes, sir, that is what I said."

"Well, sir, I can tell you what they have exchanged with many a poor man like me. Beer for your change, wine for your silver, ale for your wages and whiskey for your gold; the poor farm for your home, disrespect for your respect, dishonor for your honor, falsehood for your truth, bad principle for your good, turmoil for your peace, sorrow for your joy, tears for your smiles, heart-aches for your laughs, hatred for your good will, envy for your love, bankruptcy for your business, need for your abundance, poverty for your luxury, despair for your hope, hunger for your bread, want for your wealth, the beggar for your citizen, the tramp for your gentleman, the hobo for your scholar, the vagrant for your minister, the bum for your statesman, rags for your silk, soleless shoes for your calf, filth for your musk and rosewater, dirt for your cleanliness."

He looked at his hands and continued, "Drunkard's nose for your beauty, bloat for your youth, decayed teeth for your sound ones, a foul breath for your sweet, swollen lips for your healthy ones, pain for your ease, wounds for your caresses, vile profanity for your prayers, moans for your songs, curses for your fun, the stone for your fireside, adultery for your chastity, vice for your purity, the harlot for your mother, the courtesan for your wife, the street-walker for your sweetheart and sister, the negress for your bride, the pick and spade for your position, ball and chain for your freedom, the jail for your liberty, ah, night for your day, clouds for your sunshine, dust and vermin for your flowers, stench for your ointments, and orphans for your fathers, widows for husbands, divorces for weddings, betrayals for the honeymoons, the woods for the homestead, bare floors for the carpets, old furniture for the new, broken crockery for the silverware, cast-off clothing for the window glass, a pigsty for your lawn, the mortgage for your farm. Ah, more, infanticide for parental care, abortion for your unborn, crime for your mercy, blood for your affection, the beast for the man, the fiend for the woman, the brute for the human, death for life and hell for your heaven. These are most all the wares they have to exchange." He bowed, thanked me and went his way. But with me he left a knowledge of what the Merchants' Exchange Saloon has to exchange.

What is the Church?

GILLESPIEVILLE, O., May 15, 1901.

BROTHERS:—May I "speak out in meeting" if I don't talk too long? Where there are so many deserving to be heard, it would not be right for me to be tedious.

After listening to the aged Lamar on the "Mystery of Sin," and to B. B. Tyler on "How to address plain people" so as to help them, one finds it not very easy to speak or write so as to interest the higher critics!

The "Washington" Brother has interested me very much—perhaps because he has treated on a theme quite familiar to me. "The church," he says, "was originally a unit," and he proposes to tell "how the church divided." If, as the writer says, "it was the will of Jesus Christ that his church should ever remain united," and if Jesus "prayed for the unity of his flock," surely his will was granted and his prayer answered. It is not, then, "his church" that has been so much divided up into conflicting parties.

Christ's church is "one" and embraces all who have been grafted into "the Vine"—all who have been enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, and who hold to him as the HEAD of the great spiritual fraternity. If, as the brother says again, "all the divisions in the church have been brought about by men departing" from the right way, then let all come back to primitive simplicity and purity.

I would not say the divisions are "in the church;" but there are separations from the church, consisting of sects, parties, denominations, no matter for what purpose organized.

The writer refers to CHURCH HISTORY. But this so-called "church history" is mainly the history of denominations, and denominations are not churches, but parties attempting to regulate the faith and practice of congregations of Christians.

Brothers and sisters in Christ should dwell together in unity; and all who thus live according to his will and prayer are ex-officio members of Christ's BODY, the CHURCH, founded on the "Rock." That church cannot consist of fractions of denominations, branches of the church, or aggregations of sects, but only and altogether of whole-souled Christians, spiritual-minded disciples of the blessed Jesus.

Let us all speak the "same things," or things that harmonize, and let there be no sects or sectarianism among us. Let the Lord's Prayer be answered, and may the Lord's will be done. W. PINKERTON.

IT is only when we view human nature in the light of the Cross that we can realize man's true dignity and place in the universe. Why the Cross, with all its suffering and shame, and why, indeed, the incarnation which lies behind the Cross, if man be not a being of supreme value in the sight of God? Not only so; but when we remember that He who hung upon that Cross was the truest and divinest expression of manhood which the world has ever seen, it gives us a new conception of the amazing possibilities of humanity. On the other hand, how awful a thing is sin that it should require the sacrifice of the incarnate Son of God! But there stands the Cross as a witness forever to the truth that the man who has sinned need not despair, but that, coming in prayer and penitence to God, he may receive forgiveness and new strength for the conflict. It is a witness, too, to what God can do for a human soul by filling it with His glory and strength. It is only when we reproduce the life of Christ in our own lives, and find in the Cross the solution of all our problems, and the way of escape from all our difficulties, that the truth of the whole story of Christ's life and death finds its deepest confirmation. O, the infinite possibilities of a soul that has caught the meaning of the Cross, and makes the law which underlies it the rule of his life!

A BOOK WORTH $10,000

Are you keen for a bargain? If you had an opportnnity to purchase something for the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value, would you close with the offer? We think you would. WHAT IS YOUR LIFE? a new volume by W. J. RUSSELL, is easily worth $10,000 in cold cash to anyone who will faithfully study it and follow its instructions. You can buy the book, however, for $1.00, which is the one-hundredth part of one per cent of its value. The scope of the book is clearly shown by the chapter titles, which are as follows:

I. What is Your Life?
II. The Value of Time.
III. The Body and Good Health.
IV. Intellectual and Moral Culture.
V. Character Building.
VI. Value and Power of Enthusiasm.
VII. Business Life.
VIII. Christian Citizenship.
IX. Casting Shadows in Life.
X. Words That are Golden.
XI. Good Books and Good Reading.
XII. How Shall We Amuse Ourselves?
XIII. Love, Courtship, Marriage.
XIV. What is a Christian?
XV. Life's Great Guide-Book.
XVI. What Think Ye of Christ?
XVII. Golden Steps Heavenward.

In all the 316 pages of this book there is not a dull line. The author is a master of choice English. He has made frequent use of story, incident and illustration. The most striking feature of the book, after its practical common-sense, is its readableness. Begin a chapter, and you will finish it; read the chapter, and you will read the book.

The volume is one of the handsomest ever issued by us. It is most tastefully bound in cloth, stamped in gilt, contains seventeen chapters and 316 pages, and the price is One Dollar, postpaid.

The Reformation of the XIXth Century

Being the first complete, authentic, adequate history of the beginnings, development and progress of the Disciples of Christ that has ever been published. It stands without a rival, in a class by itself. This work, which has been long expected, has just been issued, and has been hailed with delight by all those who have an intelligent, active interest in our great cause. The chapters devoted to the beginnings and early history of the movement are especially valuable, being written by men who were intimately associated with Campbell and the "fathers," and who were, themselves, actors in those early events and scenes. This history was published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during 1899, but has since been entirely revised, rewritten and amplified.

CONTENTS.

These two great books, the one dealing with our principles and the other with our history, are properly companion books, and should stand side by side in the library of every one who cares to comprehend "our plea." They should be placed in every home among the Disciples of Christ. There can be no question but that these are the most important volumes in all our distinctive literature, and we believe we are justified in feeling proud that we are the publishers of two such splendid works. Both works were planned and edited by J. H. GARRISON, editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We especially urge every preacher, who has not already done so, to speedily obtain both of these volumes. Again and again have we heard preachers say of The Old Faith Restated, "It has helped me more than any other ten books I possess." The second and later work is equally valuable. Both are large, handsome volumes, of 456 and 514 pages, respectively.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxviii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, June 20, 1901. No. 25.

Current Events.

The Cubans Yield. By a vote of 16 to 11, the Cuban Constitutional Convention has accepted the provisions of the Platt Amendment and incorporated them verbatim et literatim into the constitution. The long protracted opposition gave way when every pretext for delay had been exhausted and when the Radical members of the convention had played to the gallery at sufficient length in attempting to pose as the defenders of their country's liberty against the aggression of a foreign foe. The role was never an easy one and probably few persons, except the less intelligent of the Cuban Radicals, were deluded into believing that Cuban liberties were at any time in danger from the demands of the United States. The acceptance of the Platt Amendment does not mean that American troops will be immediately withdrawn from the island. The act of Congress requires that a stable government shall be established, based on a constitution embodying these provisions, before the withdrawal of the troops. The provisions have now been embodied in a constitution, but the stable government is yet to be built upon this foundation. It is still the duty of the United States to preserve order in Cuba until a government has been organized and inaugurated to which this function can be safely entrusted. It may be as much as a year before this can be fully accomplished. There has been much unwise newspaper talk recently about annexation as Cuba's ultimate goal. It may be that this will eventually come about, but it can come only at the desire of the Cubans. Obviously they do not desire it now and they can be only alarmed by having this prospect presented to them at the present time when they are enthusiastic for independence.

Who Pays for Our Commercial Supremacy? We have all done our share of rejoicing, during the past few weeks, over the increasing tokens of America's commercial conquests over her European competitors. We have heard the confessions and complaints of British and German manufacturers and have rejoiced—not at their loss, but at the gains of our fellow countrymen. But anon there comes a rumor that the victories of American commerce and industry in the foreign field are won by selling articles cheaply abroad which are sold dearly at home; and this rumor saps the enthusiasm of the plain citizen, "the man in the street," who is willing enough to rejoice in his neighbor's success but does not like to be called upon to carry the whole burden of its cost. American machinery is winning its way in Europe because it is cheaper than its competitors. But perhaps its makers could not afford to underbid their rivals if they were not able by being protected in this country to sell more dearly in our own markets. One wonders whether it is not a misplaced enthusiasm which rejoices at the victories of American steel in Europe at $300 a ton while the enthusiast himself is paying $450 a ton in this country for the same protected steel. Our bosoms swell with patriotic pride as we note how European manufacturers are being pushed into the corners before the advance of America's commercial armies, but it sometimes occurs to the plain citizen, whose only direct connection with these triumphant industries is that of patron, that he is furnishing all the sinews of war and getting nothing out of it except the privilege of hurrahing and swinging his hat. Mr. Schwab, president of the steel trust, recently admitted before the Industrial Commission that his company does sell goods abroad cheaper than at home and defended the practice. The Commission has decided to take further testimony from leading manufacturers on this point.

An Undiplomatic Criticism. The Russian Minister of Finance, M. DeWitte, has recently given forth an undiplomatic statement of his opinion of Secretary Gage's motive in ruling that a countervailing duty must be collected on Russian sugar imported into the United States to offset the alleged bounty paid by the Russian government on exported sugar. He thinks it was all due to undue influence by the sugar trust. So experienced a diplomat as M. DeWitte ought to know, as apparently he does not, that it is bad form for a high official in one government publicly to express uncomplimentary opinions about the motives of a high official in another government, especially since he has no better facilities for knowing those motives than has any one else at a distance of 7,000 miles. Furthermore, to attribute Mr. Gage's act to the undue influence of any trust seems to us not only undiplomatic, so far as M. DeWitte is concerned, but superfluous. The law requires the levying of a countervailing duty on all goods enjoying an export bounty. The only question is, Does the refunding of the Russian internal revenue tax on sugar constitute a bounty? There are at least enough good reasons for thinking it does to prevent any but a malicious critic from impugning the motive of such a decision.

Is It a Bounty? When a government adopts a protective tariff, its purpose is to compel foreign producers either to keep their goods at home or to export them at a disadvantage. The disadvantage resides in the necessity of demanding a price higher by the amount of tariff than the same goods bring at home. If the United States imposes a tariff of, say, one cent a pound on sugar, it means so far as Russia is concerned that we do not want Russian sugar sold in the United States at the same price that it is sold for in Russia; that we want to protect our own sugar producers from Russian competition by raising the price of the latter's product at least one cent a pound. But part of the cost of producing sugar in Russia is the internal revenue which every manufacturer must pay, and this enters into the determination of the price. If this tax is refunded in the case of sugar that is exported, the concession tends to nullify any import tariff which any other country may levy on sugar. If the manufacturer of Russian sugar escapes a one-cent-a-pound internal revenue tax by exporting his product, and encounters a one-cent-a-pound import duty on bringing it into the United States, it will be a matter of no consequence to him whether he pays the amount to his own government or to ours, and the price of sugar will be the same in both countries. The essential feature of a bounty on exports is that it affords an inducement to export goods by making it possible to sell them cheaper abroad than at home. The Russian measure which Mr. Gage has interpreted as a bounty certainly has this characteristic. Whether our sugar trust needs protection is another question and one which it is not the business of the Secretary of the Treasury to decide. The law gives it protection and it is his business to see that the law is enforced.

American Divorces in England. Again has a divorce scandal turned up in the ranks of British aristocracy and this time America is very closely concerned because the divorce was obtained in this country. The divorcee, having remarried, is being tried for bigamy. Earl Russell, member of the House of Lords and representative of one of the oldest families of British nobility, established legal residence in Nevada a year or two ago, obtained a divorce under the laws of that state and subsequently married an Englishwoman who had also obtained a Nevada divorce about the same time. The Earl has been arrested on a charge of bigamy and is now undergoing a preliminary trial. If indicted by the grand jury, he will have the right to be tried by the House of Lords instead of by a common court, an event such as has not occurred for forty years. The trial will not merely determine the legal guilt or innocence of an old reprobate who happens to be socially and politically prominent, but may lead to a consideration of the general question of recognizing divorces which have been granted in states and countries where the laws are notoriously lax in that particular. The recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, which have been widely commented upon, were a reaffirmation of the general validity of a divorce granted by a state in which the divorced parties had legal residence. In other words, no state can dispute the validity of divorce proceedings in any other state, except on the ground that the latter had no jurisdiction in the case. The question is now raised whether one country shall hold itself bound to recognize divorces granted in another whose divorce laws are so lax as to furnish an inducement to all who have wearied of the bond of matrimony. Earl Russell could not possibly be prosecuted for bigamy in this country, but it may be that the courts of Great Britain will not feel bound to recognize the decrees of the Nevada courts as we are in all states of the Union. In any case, the laxity of our divorce laws and the grave need for uniform federal legislation on that subject will be much advertised by these proceedings against a British peer.

The Last Filipino General. The surrender of Gen. Cailles, the last insurgent Filipino of any prominence, which was prematurely reported a week or two ago, has now become a reality. Gen. Sumner has been negotiating for the surrender, and reports that the preliminaries have been arranged. Cailles is collecting his men, and they will surrender in a body. There are still scattered bands of insurgents here and there, but this surrender removes from the field the last leader of any prominence. Emilio Zurbano has proclaimed himself successor of Aguinaldo and "governor of Tabayas and the Philippines," but Zurbano is considered a sort of comic opera bandit who may have certain points of picturesqueness but need not be seriously reckoned with as a factor in the military situation. The judges of the Supreme Court of the Philippines which were appointed last week by the Philippine Commission, have been inducted into their offices with the simplest possible ceremony. A movement is on foot to make English the language of the courts in the Philippines instead of Spanish as at present. This will doubtless come sooner or later, but it is reported that the majority of the foreigners are at present opposed to it.

Private Losses in the Transvaal. The commission appointed by the British government to make investigations and recommendations touching concessions and various other business matters in South Africa, has reported its opinion that the government is not under obligation to make good the losses of foreign stockholders who held shares in the Transvaal railways which have been largely destroyed in the course of the war. These roads were owned by the Boer republics until shortly before the war began. Then, with a double purpose of raising money to carry on the war and of giving Europe a financial interest in their side of the impending struggle, the shares were put on the market in Germany and Holland. Naturally the German and Dutch investors are incensed at the recommendation that their losses be allowed to go without compensation, and strong efforts are being made to enlist the governments of Germany and Holland in a protest. On the other hand, it is pointed out that the sale of the stock was virtually an act of war, since it was a means of raising money to carry on the war. And it is pointed out that, at the end of the Spanish-American war, the United States assumed neither for itself nor for Cuba the debt with which the island had been burdened by Spain, though the Cuban bonds were in private hands like the shares of the Transvaal railroads and were also secured by mortgage of the Cuban customs. The case presents some features which are not to be decided offhand, and it might be wise to give the Hague tribunal an opportunity to pass upon it.

The Tribunal at the Hague. Though much fun has been poked at the Czar's peace conference and his dream of substituting arbitration for war, still the conference formed plans for the organization of a permanent tribunal and in accordance with these plans the court has been gradually organizing itself until the present time. It has now been announced that, by the appointment of the fifty-fifth and last member, the court is complete and ready to do business. From the beginning Germany has not been considered a friend of the enterprise and has held out against recogizing the power of this tribunal. But recent expressions of the German chancellor, Count Von Buelow, and the foreign minister are construed as indicating an acceptance of the Hague tribunal as a proper court of arbitration for certain classes of questions. The tribunal has jurisdiction, of course, only over those questions which are specifically referred to it by the interested parties. This falls far short of entirely substituting diplomacy for war but that event must of necessity come gradually. If the high character of the court is maintained and its decisions bear the marks of impartial justice, international public opinion may within a generation develop to such a degree that refusal by any power to refer a dispute to this court for decision will be equivalent, in the eyes of the nations, to a confession that it is in the wrong and will unite all civilized powers against it. The employment of force by all the nations against one to compel it to arbitrate would no more be war in the present sense of that term than the show and exercise of force by a squad of policemen in overpowering a single lawbreaker is a prize-fight. The Hague arbitration tribunal has great possibilities before it, if its friends do not get impatient to see the last step taken in a day and will give public opinion time to grow, and the world may yet honor the name of Nicholas II, supreme commander of the greatest army in the world, as the promoter of perpetual peace.

No Third Term. As was expected, President McKinley has issued a statement declaring unequivocally that he will not under any circumstances be considered as a candidate for the presidency in 1904. It is well that the President takes this sensible view of the matter, for the prejudice against the third term is probably too deeply rooted even to have allowed him the nomination, and nomination would have meant defeat. Besides, there are too many men in the party who feel that they have waited long enough and are anxious to try for their first term. An incomplete list of Republican aspirants or possibilities includes Vice-president Roosevelt, Gov. Odell of New York, Senators Foraker and Hanna of Ohio, Cullom of Illinois, Lodge of Massachusetts, Spooner of Washington, and Fairbanks of Indiana, Judge Taft and the Secretary of the Navy, John D. Long. The friends of Roosevelt and Fairbanks are the most active in giving an early start to the booms of their respective candidates. So long as every boy born in this country from Maine to California has it impressed upon him in youth that he is eligible to the presidency and may get it some day; and so long as every politician who is elected to even the humblest state or federal office can see in dreams the finger of manifest destiny pointing the path to the White House—so long it is improbable that party discipline will ever stand the strain of seeing one man put into the presidential chair for the third time. Such a result could only follow a most extraordinary dearth of candidates—and if there is anything which the Republican party has plenty of at present, it is candidates for 1904.

Brevities. Andrew Carnegie has received the degree of LL.D. from Glasgow University. If a degree was all he wanted, he might have saved his ten million dollars. There are institutions in this country which will furnish an LL.D., D. D., or any other kind of a degree while you wait for $7.50—discount for cash.

Six states have already made appropriations for their exhibits at the World's Fair of 1903. Missouri $1,000,000; Illinois $250,000; Kansas $75,000; Colorado $50,000; Arkansas $40,000; Wisconsin $25,000.

The Chinese indemnity question is apparently not so nearly settled as was believed a week or two ago, when it was announced that 450,000,000 taels had been agreed upon as the amount. There is some probability that the matter will be placed in the hands of the Hague arbitration tribunal and if so there is a possibility that the amount may be still further reduced in accordance with the ideas which our government has advanced from the first.

It is a curious and interesting coincidence that the purchase price paid to France for the Louisiana territory, fifteen million dollars, is just the amount provided by the nation, the city of St. Louis and private subscriptions to pay for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. A careful study of the development of that territory during the past century will reveal the fact that the taxable value of its property has increased more or less. The territory which was bought for fifteen millions now has an assessed valuation of more than six and a half billion.

Last Friday was the one hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of the adoption by Congress of the present design for the American flag, which has been changed since 1777 only by the increase in the number of stars. It is perhaps impossible for an American to judge impartially of its beauty. But no loyal citizen ever saw it on foreign soil, side by side with the flags of European nations, without feeling deep gratitude to his fathers, not only for giving him so great a country for a native land, but also for choosing so beautiful an emblem for its banner.

Our Message to the Churches.

Having pointed out in a previous article the fact that, as religious reformers, we had a message to the churches, and indicated the spirit in which the message should be delivered, and what should be our attitude toward the churches for whom our message is intended, we come now to consider very briefly the nature of the message itself.

1. The first feature of our message, chronologically considered, and perhaps first, too, in the order of importance, is that concerning the divisions in the church of Jesus Christ. In substance this feature of the message to our brethren of the dispersion, scattered abroad in the various ecclesiastical organizations, is this: Divisions among the people of God, of the kind which have marred the unity of christendom for centuries, are contrary to the very genius of Christianity, whose dominant principle is love; are opposed to the explicit teaching of Christ and of His apostles; are unnatural, in that they divide the children of a common Father and disciples of a common Lord from each other's fellowship, and are highly prejudicial to the best interests of the kingdom of God, in that they weaken our resources and are a stumbling-block to the world. We have pointed out Christ's prayer for the unity of His followers, to the end that the world may believe on Him, and have urged, for the love of Christ who loved us and gave Himself for us, that we heal our divisions, put away our alienations, and love and treat each other as brethren. We have never urged that it is either desirable or practicable to organize a huge ecclesiasticism, after the manner of the Roman Church or of any other ecclesiastical organization, which should comprise all believers. Rather our contention has been that we should be so united to Christ, in life and service, and fellowship, that we would be united to each other in the same way, co-operating as Christian brethren in all worthy religious enterprises. While we have believed and held that the local congregation, with its local bishops and deacons, harmonizes more with the examples of church organization furnished in the New Testament, and with that simplicity which is in Christ, yet absolute uniformity of organization is not believed to be essential to unity or even advisable, since organization should be adapted to the local condition and needs of any given church. While not insisting therefore on uniformity of organization or methods of administration, it is believed that all systems of hierarchy which entrench upon the liberty which we have in Christ and violate fundamental principles of Christ's teaching are not only preventive of Christian unity but subversive of that simplicity and equality which are essential to the best interests of the church. We have asked, therefore, that these anti-scriptural additions to New Testament Christianity and church organization be abandoned in the interest of unity and of greater efficiency.

2. Another important part of our message to the churches relates to the subject of human creeds. We found the human mind in bondage to these statements of doctrine whose authors had no divine sanction or authority for imposing their opinions upon their fellow Christians. We have claimed that as the church lived, prospered and triumphed during the first centuries of its existence without these human formulations of doctrine as tests of fellowship, so it can live and prosper and triumph to-day without such formulations of doctrine. Moreover, it was added that many honest, sincere people are kept out of the churches and away from Christ because of the existence of these creeds to which they cannot subscribe. It was pointed out that these creeds did not serve the purpose for which they were originally intended, namely, to keep heretics out of the church and preserve its unity, but on the contrary, they have kept many good people out of the church, and have caused and are perpetuating divisions in the church. Is it not reasonable, therefore, that they should be abandoned, since the purpose for which they were adopted has not been realized?

3. But the above was only the negative side of the statement concerning creeds. The positive part of our message on this subject was and is that we have no need for human creeds, seeing that we have a divine one furnished us in the New Testament which is amply sufficient for all the purposes of a creed. This creed, or confession of faith, is the Messiahship and divine Sonship of Jesus of Nazareth. It was on this truth, as confessed by Peter, that Christ said he would build His church. Paul said to the Corinthians when he had heard of their incipient divisions under various leaderships, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Upon this foundation the church was originally built, and on that foundation it rests to-day. Other foundations may be torn away and the church would remain, but this foundation removed and the gates of hades will have prevailed against it. Our message to the churches then, concerning creeds was and is an appeal to them to surrender, as bonds of union and communion, all human formulations of doctrine, which may be used simply as educational statements, and to unite upon "the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."

4. It was in harmony with this view of creeds that our message emphasizes the fact that faith, in the New Testament sense of the word, is belief in a person, not in doctrines about a person. The faith of which the New Testament predicates salvation is faith in Jesus Christ and not in any set of doctrines relating to him. To accept Christ, it is held, means the acceptance of whatever He taught and involves obedience to all that He has commanded. The distinction between faith and opinion, or between faith and knowledge, was thus sharply drawn. It was held to be essential to salvation from sin to believe in Christ, but that the learning about Him was a matter of knowledge to be gained afterwards in discipleship under Him. This distinction proved a great relief to thousands of burdened, anxious souls who were willing to confess Christ, and obey Him to the best of their knowledge and ability, but who were confused about the doctrinal speculations and contradictory theories of the creeds. They now saw their way clear to become Christians without committing themselves to a doctrinal basis which they either were unable to comprehend or, so far as they were able to comprehend it, were unwilling to accept. No more important step has ever been taken in the history of religious progress since the establishment of Christianity in the world than this restoration to its rightful place of the New Testament confession of faith, and the distinction between that faith and the doctrinal statements which largely make up the creeds of christendom.

Other features of our message must be postponed until next week.

Missouri Bible-school Convention.

The thirty-first annual convention of the Missouri Bible-school Co-operation was held June 10-13 under the large hospitality of the great church at Sedalia. It was not an exceptionally large convention; there were about 300 delegates aside from the entertaining church. Comparison of the program, the spiritual tone and the practical value of this convention with preceding conventions would not be to the point. They are all good. The very fact of a state gathering of Bible-school workers indicates a wholesome condition of public sentiment with regard to this part of the church's work.

There were many things deserving commendation: the enthusiastic spirit; the encouraging reports of numerical increase; the effectiveness of our evangelists in establishing new schools and churches and in increasing the membership of both; the inspiring eloquence and contagious zeal of many of the speakers. These were all prominent features which gave value to the assembly. If we have a word of criticism to offer it involves no lack of appreciation of these matters, but only the judgment that a conference of Bible-school workers should present some other features which were not notably present in the convention at Sedalia.

In the first place, it seems to us that there might be a vast economy of time by eliminating all speeches which are designed to point out the value, need and importance of Bible-school work. It would surely not be a violent assumption to suppose that every one who goes to the trouble and expense of attending a Bible-school convention already agrees that the Bible-school is a good thing; that it is helpful to "the home, the pastor, the church and the community." Speakers to whom such topics are assigned are forced to thrash over much old straw. Some of them exhibited conspicuous ability in this direction. They did admirably well a thing which scarcely needed to be done at all. Reports of past work, glorification over past improvements, and a lively appreciation of the value and importance of the work are all conducive to enthusiasm; but enthusiasm is only one among several qualifications of a Bible teacher, and the quickening of zeal is only one function of a Bible-school convention.

The Bible-school is fronting problems which must be solved in the near future—problems of method, of the arrangement of lessons, of the grading of pupils, of the training of teachers. These are problems which confront educators in every sphere. They are serious and must be seriously considered. A district association of public school teachers which would meet for three days and talk joyfully of the importance of their calling and the necessity of public school education and arouse enthusiasm for their work, would, of course, accomplish some good; but no one would for a moment consider that it was seriously approaching the real problems which it ought to consider. Enthusiasm is not less necessary in the public school than in the Bible-school and an intelligent understanding of the principles and methods of teaching is not less needed by those who teach the Bible than by those who teach arithmetic. The enthusiasm of our Bible-school conventions is good. May it never grow less. But it is too time-consuming and it needs to be supplemented by more practical considerations.

It would probably be admitted on all hands that the greatest problems now confronting us in regard to the teaching of the Bible are those of securing more perfectly graded and more closely connected lessons; of perfecting the grading of the school so that pupils will pass from class to class in continuous and orderly progress; and of securing better trained teachers. Not one of these topics was touched upon in the whole course of the convention, though one speaker barely mentioned the matter of grading.

The conviction is forced upon us that our Bible-schools are more effective as an evangelistic than as an educational agency. It is very true that the ultimate object of the Bible-school is to present Christian truth in such a way that it may enter into the heart and become effective in the life. But this involves more than evangelism. If it did not, we might as well dismiss the pupils from the Sunday-school as soon as they have joined the church. If the convention was weak on the side of practical consideration of educational methods, it only reflected the condition which is prevalent among the schools. They need to be made in a far truer sense institutions of learning.

If what has thus far been said be taken as a criticism, an exception must be made in favor of the Primary Department and that part of the convention which was devoted to its interests. In general, the primary teacher is the most effective and best trained teacher in the school. A general impression has gotten abroad—fostered, perhaps, by the idea of kindergarten training—that, while anybody can teach an intermediate class, it takes special training to teach a primary class. The session of the convention devoted to this work was, for the most part, practical and meaty and primary teachers who were present found in it something to take home besides enthusiasm. The exercise conducted by J. N. Dalby with a portion of his class of 175 tots was highly conducive to this result.

W. F. Richardson gave a magnificent evening address culminating in an appeal for the state work. It may be doubted whether the public appeal and the taking of pledges in this fashion added one dollar to the treasury which would not have come otherwise. When a delegate comes to the convention instructed to pledge a certain amount for his school, even Bro. Richardson's eloquence can scarcely alter it. Our national conventions have learned a better way and the state convention might profit by the example.

Among the resolutions adopted by the convention was one recommending that every school in the state make an offering for the work at Jacksonville, Fla., on or before the first Lord's day in September. A Mrs. Nation resolution was also passed stating that, "while not formally approving her methods," yet "inspired by her example," we renew our war on the liquor business. There was no considerable protest either from those who do "approve her methods" or from those who are not "inspired by her example." The vote was languid to the point of inaudibility.

The singing was said to have been better than at any preceding convention in this state. W. D. Pittman's chorus choir was a success. The Sedalia church has a good pipe organ and an organist who is an artist.

The absence of the older men from the convention was much commented upon. It was an assembly of young men and women.

The Bible studies by C. A. Young, of Chicago, and Burris A. Jenkins, of Buffalo, president-elect of Kentucky University, were helpful.

The following figures may be of interest: We have at present 1,350 Bible-schools in Missouri with 110,000 pupils. 68 schools and 20 churches have been organized during the past year by our secretary, H. F. Davis, and our four evangelists, Giddens, Havener, Wood and Schultz. We have 400 Endeavor Societies in the state with 14,400 members who gave $11,300 last year for church work and missions. There were 400 additions to the church last year from among the associate members. We have 114 Junior societies with 2,960 members.

C. M. Chilton, who was president of the convention this year, is succeeded in that office by J. B. Jones. The next convention will be held at Maryville, Mo.

"Polite Life."

Methodists have recently been resenting the comment that their system of doctrine and discipline is better adapted to the farm and village than to the city, and that henceforth they will have difficulty in holding their own in the centers of population. The chief point is not that there is an actual numerical loss in their membership, but that people who rise in the world find Methodism irksome; in other words, that there is "a tendency for the richer Methodists to stray into other folds, where the prevailing ideas and manner of life are more congenial to their aspirations.

This is doubtless true, and the loss of richer members who stray into other folds is not peculiar to Methodism. Almost every religious body feels it, except the one or two "other folds" whose chief business in life is apparently to gather in the richer members who are seeking a religious environment "more congenial to their aspirations." For instance, says Harper's Weekly, "Methodist discipline inculcates, and even requires, in church members, a degree of abstinence in the matter of beverages which is apt to be irksome to persons who follow the ordinary temperate usages of polite life in the concerns of eating and drinking." We may be wrong, but we have been in the habit of thinking that the church has a higher mission than that of adapting itself to the "prevailing ideas and manners" of "polite life," particularly in the matter of beverages.

The church, to be sure, has no right, by crudity and ugliness, to offend the sensibilities of men of taste and culture. There is no reason why the forms of religion, those matters which are of purely human device, should not become more civilized, more beautiful, more artistic, as the tastes of men become more highly cultivated. There is no virtue in ugliness, though much virtue may accompany ugliness; and boorishness is a mask and not a mirror for religion. Let our religious manners be as perfect as the social manners of "polite life." But the improvement of taste does not involve a relaxation of morals. The churches which constitute the potent religious forces of our time are not those which condone the vices of their richer members to give them, at any cost, an atmosphere "congenial to their aspirations."

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of the popular delusions in which people indulge is that if they could only get rid of work and give themselves up to making themselves comfortable, life would be delightful. But, as a matter of fact, few experiences are more unsatisfactory than the direct, conscious effort to make one's self thoroughly comfortable. It is a Saturday half-holiday let us say, and the thermometer shows a decided tendency to reach the century mark. It is easy to think that if one were at home, under the shade of his great oaks, swinging in a hammock, or lying on the grass, he could steep his whole being in a sea of rest and defy the soaring disposition of the thermometer. So he gathers up some magazines and papers and betakes himself to the favorite spot in his lawn where the shade is thickest, and proceeds to—make himself miserable! He is sure to be thinking of himself under these conditions, and of the temperature, and to be abnormally conscious of the numerous little discomforts which any one can conjure up if he is on the lookout for them. If one must endure the heat, it were far better to have some task for hand or brain to occupy the mind and call it away from himself and the weather. Physical comfort, like the higher form of happiness, is best obtained when not made the direct object of search. Selfishness is a failure, as a rule of life, even in the matter of promoting one's own well-being.

Those who sleep late these glorious summer mornings miss the calmest, coolest, purest and most beautiful part of the day. The birds know this and wake right early and sing their sweetest songs ere the rough noises of the day come on with their discords. There is a freshness in the air, a beauty in the sky, a strange mingling of light with the receding shadows of the night, a glory of color in the east, as the sun advances, coming forth from his chamber, later, rejoicing as a strong man to run a race, all of which are peculiar to the early morning hour. The dew upon the grass and leaves is heaven's benediction upon the sleeping earth. All nature seems to welcome the coming light. The dew sparkles with delight, the flowers lift their heads, the leaves move lightly and tremble as with expectancy, and the chorus choir of bird-songsters greets its coming with the sweetest notes they can raise. "Hail to the light!" seems to be the spontaneous exclamation of nature, waking from the slumbers of the night. How natural that light should be used in the Bible and in all literature, as well as in our common speech, as the symbol of truth! What a different world this would soon be if all men welcomed the light of truth as nature welcomes the light of the sun! Why do they not do so? Some "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Others have received a little light, have gotten the eyes of their understanding adjusted to that, and do not wish any more. Others still are afraid of the light lest it destroy the faith! This is like a man traveling in the darkness at night by the dim light of the stars, fearing the sunrise, because it may necessitate a change of route! But as we write the sun, which had already sent his first beams of light across the sky when we began, has now risen above the horizon and has illumined yonder cross on the church with his golden rays—symbol of that gospel whose light is advancing into all lands, waking the slumber of ages and preparing the world for its bridal day.

The local committee at Minneapolis, having in charge the interests of our national conventions next October, are working with a zeal, enterprise and practical sagacity which is itself a prophecy of success. All the signs point to a great convention. It is the first visit of our national convocation to the great northwest. We owe it to the people of that section to go in large numbers, by way of indicating to them the strength of our cause elsewhere. It is a part of the country worth seeing, if there were no other attractions. The twin cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, the beautiful lakes thereabouts, are worth a trip across the continent to see. The air in Minnesota in October will be a tonic to all who inhale it. And then it is our "First Twentieth Century Convention," as the committee advertises it. It will not do to start the century with an inferior or commonplace convention. We must be there in great multitudes from all the states—and shall we not have representatives from Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the far-off Philippines? By all means plan a trip to Minneapolis next fall. The railroad rate of half fare invites a large attendance. If you cannot take a summer vacation and go to the Minneapolis convention too, then postpone your vacation till autumn and take it in Minnesota. We prophesy a great convention.

So far as we are able to read the signs of the times in our own Zion, they are full of hope. There is an unmistakable emphasis and an awakening interest among us on the subject of education. Nearly all our colleges are increasing their endowment and their equipment, raising their standards of scholarship and are vindicating their right to live and to receive a generous patronage by the quality of the work they are doing. The formation of the American Christian Education Society is itself an indication of the growing appreciation among us of the value of education as an essential factor in any great and worthy religious movement. We may reasonably expect from this organization a new stimulus to the work of education resulting in a higher degree of scholarship in our ministry and a large number of educated men in other callings who will give dignity and power and wise leadership to our work in the coming years. The missionary spirit is steadily on the increase, and our missionary offerings are taking more the form of a fixed habit and are less subject to the fluctuations of zeal resulting from special appeals. Our churches in the cities are organizing their forces for a more united and effective effort, and city evangelization is destined to form an important feature of our operations within the next decade or longer. Better church buildings, a better order of church worship, a higher degree of efficiency in the work of training the young, a clearer understanding of the nature of the work we have been sent to accomplish, together with a well-defined tendency to get hold of the profounder truths of Christian life and experience, are among the encouraging indications which prophesy a great future. All these tendencies should focus themselves in the great national assembly which is to gather at Minneapolis in October next, and should find such expression as will enable all spectators to know where we are, what we are and why we are. It is especially appropriate that this first convention of the twentieth century should be representative of the best thought, the holiest purposes and highest aspirations of this latest of the great reform movements in the church.

Notes and Comments.

The last meeting of the trustees of Missouri Bible College held at Columbia was the most encouraging one in the history of our effort to establish Bible instruction at the seat of our state university. The securing of $50,000 endowment gave the trustees a solid basis on which to stand to plan for larger things. The lot adjoining the one we had previously purchased for the Bible College on the north, and which contains a two-story dwelling, was purchased, and the dwelling will be converted into a temporary Bible College building until we get ready for putting up the permanent hall on the lot adjoining the campus. This is conveniently located to the university buildings, and will make it possible for many of the students to attend the Bible lectures who could not otherwise do so. Arrangements are being made to put one of our strongest and best men at Columbia, beginning with next autumn, who will be expected to do the chief part of the work of instruction. Brother Moore, the present Dean, will retain his relation to the institution, but will give his time largely to some literary work which he has in hand. The friends of this enterprise who have from the beginning realized the vast importance of supplementing the academic and scientific instruction given at the university with biblical instruction, feel more encouraged with the outlook than ever before, and they solicit the earnest co-operation of every disciple in the state who believes that no education is complete without a knowledge of the Bible.

Drury College, Springfield, Mo., held its twenty-eighth annual commencement exercises last week. A feature of special interest was the formal laying of the corner stone of Pearson's Hall, a new building which, with its equipment, is to cost about $50,000 and is to be devoted to science. Dr. Pearson, of Chicago, gave half of this amount on condition that the other half be raised outside. President Homer T. Fuller, who has exhibited untiring zeal and great financial ability in his administration of the institution, has succeeded in complying with the condition of the gift and the beautiful hall is now in process of erection. This will make eight buildings which stand upon the beautiful campus of forty acres in the northern part of the city. Addresses on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone were made by the mayor of the city of Springfield and the editor of this paper. The commencement exercises throughout were of a high order of excellence. No institution in the state is doing a higher class of work than Drury, and it is proving a vast blessing to the intellectual, moral and religious life of the people of the southwest. It is conducted on undenominational lines, though the institution is pervaded by a very decided Christian spirit and influence. The institution is blessed with a very capable faculty and an able, enterprising and deeply interested board of trustees. The plant, as it now stands, with its endowment fund, approaches a half million dollars, but it needs and will doubtless receive additional endowment to enable it to meet its growing needs.

The Presbyterian General Assembly assures us by unanimous vote that such doctrines as the damnation of non-elect infants dying in infancy are not really in the Westminster Confession, and that the ancient creed needs only to be properly understood to be perfectly consistent with the love of God for all men and with modern humane ideas. If so, what a pity the statements of the Confession were so ambiguous that even Calvinists mistook its true import until so recently. There was Michael Wigglesworth, a representative theologian of two centuries ago, who put many of the Westminster doctrines into verse in his "Day of Doom," a poem which enjoyed immense popularity in New England throughout the eighteenth century. The great Judge on that last day thus replies to the protests of the non-elect infants who objected to being punished when they had never had a chance to be either good or bad:

"You sinners are, and such a share
As sinners may expect,
Such you shall have; for I do save
None but my own elect.
Yet to compare your sin with their
Who lived a longer time,
I do confess yours is much less,
Tho' every sin's a crime.
A crime it is; therefore, in bliss
You may not hope to dwell:
But unto you I shall allow
The easiest room in Hell."

Some recent statistics state that in the year 1600 the Christian nations ruled over a little less than 8 per cent. of the inhabited surface of the earth, while in 1894 the Christian nations ruled over more than 85 per cent. of the earth's area. This shows that the Christian nations are those that are aggressive and fit to survive in the struggle for existence. Unfortunately, this immense extension of Christian dominion does not indicate the wholesale conversion of the inhabitants of the 80 per cent. which has passed from pagan to Christian control, but means rather that Christians have been getting dominion over pagans. We can rejoice in the virility which the Christian Powers have thus exhibited, but there is room for regret that some of their expanding operations have not furnished a more creditable commentary on their professed religion.

LA MEXICANA By Orpha Bennett Hoblit

For several years the attention of the people of the United States has been directed toward the former Spanish colonies of the old world and the new. It is an interest born of great pity and fostered by a greater sacrifice, and therefore it has reached to the nation's heart. It does not fade, nor will it, so long as those lands have need of us. That editors have appreciated the extent and intensity of this feeling is manifested in the amount of space which, in the columns of all periodicals, has been given up first to the war, then to our later relations with these quondam subjects of Spain. Perhaps of all the numerous articles treating of different phases of the subject none have been more widely read than those which have told of our new proteges themselves. No paragraph, however trivial, that speaks of their personal appearance and dress, their language, customs and manner of life and habits of thinking, has failed to find its readers, for we feel instinctively that only as we learn to know the people can we solve the problem of our relation to them.

Such articles come with a peculiar force to the American residing in Mexico. Reading of those distant islanders he had but to step into the street to hear their language, and often to see dress and customs reproduced in the lives of his Mexican neighbors, so that many of the scenes described on the printed page became to him a reality.

However, it is a likeness with a difference that gives hope for the future of our new dependencies. Here, too, in Mexico, is a people who suffered years of oppression at the hands of Spain, and among whom Spanish influence prevailed and is still dominant, but who, under a free government, are growing out of ignorance and superstition, poverty and indescribable degradation up to intelligence and prosperity. What may not be hoped for the West Indian and the Filipino, freed, assisted and instructed by the most advanced of the nations of the earth, if Mexico, hampered and unaided, has developed so far in less than one century? It is in this thought of the close kinship of these people and of the possibilities that lie in the path of each that this sketch of Mexican life is written.

Here, as elsewhere, we may best judge our neighbor when we see him where he is most at home. Here, as elsewhere, the condition of the women of the nation is the criterion of its progress.

At the outset one is impressed with the impossibility of making general statements. Class distinctions are still strong and the gulf is wide that separates the highest rank of society from the lowest. In dress, in manner of life and thought, even in physical characteristics and in speech, the differences are many. However, the reason for them does not lie so much in the acknowledged fact of the greater admixture of Indian blood among the lower classes as in the differences in environment and education. There is caste, but it is based largely on circumstance. The aristocracy is one of wealth and culture, not so much of race and native intelligence. Among the high officials of state are dark countenances that tell of Indian ancestry, while one's serving-man may have the face and bearing of a genuine child of Spain.

Here is encouragement for the West Indies and the Philippines, where much the same conditions of society exist, for circumstance is a creature that may be conquered. Already in Mexico the bridge is slowly building across the gulf of separation. Peace and enlightenment have called into being a large and constantly growing middle class, at once the hope of the degraded poor and the anchor of safety of the rich. Into it, thanks to the increasing prosperity of the country and the present excellent system of free education, the lower class is merging, though slowly, almost imperceptibly, and, on the side toward the rich the line of demarcation grows daily fainter and more broken. But that there yet remains much to be done before the ideal is attained is evident when we look at the condition of the poor.

The best place in which to study the Mexican women of the poorest class is in the street, which is practically her home, although she has a lodging place somewhere which she calls her "casa." It is a low, dark hovel, located, perhaps, on some filthy street in the outskirts of the town, though just as often it may stand in close proximity to the residences of the rich, for the Mexican slum is not confined to any particular quarter. Less than a stone's throw from a mansion may lie a group of huts that tell better than words of the wretchedness of their occupants. No material is too mean for the composition of these dwellings. Cane stalks and old boards, scraps of sacking, tin and sheet-iron, waste material of many sorts, enter into their construction. Roofs of thatch cover them and the floors are of hard earth. It is fortunate that Mexico is pre-eminently a land of sunshine for these hovels offer little protection from rain or the chilly northers of winter. A self-respecting American pig might scorn such shelter, but hundreds of families in Mexico lie down at night in these places surrounded by chickens and dogs and sometimes pigs and goats, with only a blanket or a rush mat between them and the hard earth floor. Other furniture there is none except a few jars and dishes of the native pottery, the stone metate for grinding corn, and the charcoal brazier for cooking. However, outside the hut are sometimes seen small flower gardens, jealously fenced in and carefully tended, the gay blossoms testifying mutely to that love of the bright and beautiful that is so rarely absent in a woman's heart.

Housekeeping is of the simplest character. In the morning the father wraps his blanket, which is also his coat, about him, and the family eat their scanty breakfast, scooping up the frijoles with the folded tortillas, and finishing the repast by eating the tortillas themselves. Even here guests are neither rare nor unwelcome, for hospitality is a law of the Mexican's nature and he will cheerfully share his last tortilla, confident that his neighbor will not refuse him when he stands in like need.

Sickness, as may be supposed, comes often to these dwellings and is met with an indifference born of ignorance. Even smallpox has no terrors, though many a dark face bears its scars. Teas made from orange leaves or herbs and purgatives are the favorite remedies. Circular bits of orange leaf pasted on the temples are a cure for headache. The death rate, especially among the children, is high. Every day brings to the cemetery gate the pitiful funeral processions — the little cheap, blue coffin, with its white crosses, borne on the shoulders of two men and followed by the father and his friends. Sometimes the priest is present, if the fee is forthcoming, but oftener without any religious service the little form is hid away in the earth of the dreary cemetery to rest for a time in its rented grave, until the space is claimed by some new arrival. The mother mourns at home as her child is borne away, and truly mourns. Nowhere does maternal tenderness seem more beautiful than as manifested in the lives of these poor women. The children swarm in their homes, such puny, wretched little beings, it seems a marvel that one should ever survive. The mother, too ignorant to know how to properly feed and clothe them, and too poor to do so if she had the knowledge, is, nevertheless, a loving, indulgent mother. However weary and distressed she may be she is seldom impatient with her little ones. Harsh words and blows are practically unknown.

Her surroundings are not conducive to cleanliness of person or dress or modesty of manner—two virtues that are sadly lacking among this class of Mexican women. With regard to marriage, however, the priesthood is in a manner responsible for the state of affairs which exists, a fee being charged for performing the ceremony that is beyond the means of many. Occasionally (as happened recently in one Mexican city) special commands are laid upon the priests to marry couples free of charge and there many a sorry pair avail themselves of the privilege of making their union a legal one in the eyes of the church.

From the comfortless, noisome interiors of their homes the sunny street is a refuge and Mexican women of this class often work outside the door, grinding corn between two stones and cooking the masa, thus prepared, over the charcoal fire, or preparing tamales, envueltas and enchiladas, for sale in the market. They wash clothes in the open air by the stream side. They go about a great deal carrying heavy burdens on their heads, their babes in their arms or slung across their shoulders in a fold of the reboso. They are faithful attendants at the services of the church, but too often are also found in the corner shops where a few glasses of mezcal soon reduce them to pitiful heaps of drunkenness. They all, young and old, smoke, and it is not uncommon to see a young man and his dulcinea on a bench in the plaza, sociably taking puffs, turn about, at the same cigarette. On these same benches all the little drama of courtship may be played out before the eyes of the world, for none of the restrictions of society such as hamper the rich are binding on the poor.

Women of this class are rarely handsome being, as a rule, short and stocky of figure, of swarthy complexion and coarse features. Their hard life early gives them a sad, hopeless, brutish expression, and the old women, bent and withered, with skinny hands and faces, seamed with suffering, are truly pitiable. Their dress is remarkable chiefly for what it lacks. Underclothing is often wholly wanting. Many are barefooted, or at least stockingless. The calico shirts and loose sacque are usually tattered and dirty, but the reboso—a long scarf of blue cotton cloth—covers a multitude of sins in the way of rags and grime and serves at once for hat and wrap, pocket, basket and cradle.

Morally and mentally much is lacking in these women, but though the picture looks dark something may yet be said in their favor. They are faithful servants and not unappreciative of kindness or gifts. Indeed they often try to show their gratitude by making some slight return, the favorite offering being one of the long-legged chickens so much in evidence in their homes. They drive sharp bargains, but one excuses trickery when he remembers that a penny to them means a dinner.

This is the darkest side of Mexican society. Gloomy as the outlook is it is not hopeless. The light shines out to the poor from the public schools, and their children and their children's children have before them a brighter future than was theirs. The movement is forward toward better homes, greater cleanliness, fewer vices and more industry. Little by little they are climbing up toward the position now held by the respectable middle class.

Already the grades between the two are innumerable. Here and there we may chance upon a hut poor and bare but clean, and where the domestic animals do not dispute possession with the family. Now and then we may find some attempt at furnishing and comfort, even ornament. Again, we may see houses of one room perhaps, but still substantial houses of adobe or sillar in which the daughters sit at work with their needles or at the sewing machine (paid for, we may be sure, in installments), though the less skillful mother may still be at the water side rubbing the clothing clean upon the stones in the old fashion. So up and up, from rank to rank, until we reach the station of that most charming creature, the Mexican woman of the middle class.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

"The Spiritual Side of Our Plea," is a good book. It contains 394 pages and bears the imprint of the Christian Publishlishing Company, St. Louis. There are eight chapters with the following headings: "Authority in Matters of Religion"; "Without and Within"; "The Letter and the Spirit"; "The Real and the Formal"; "Alexander Campbell on Remission"; "The Word and the Spirit"; "Alexander Campbell on the Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law."

When you see the word "Pentecostian" in a book, you may know that the writer is a Disciple. This is their word. It cannot be found in any dictionary of the English language. It is a word not found in any other writings than those of the Disciples of Christ. The word is in "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea." By this we know that the writer is "one of us" and that "Our Plea" is that of the Christian Church, or Disciples of Christ.

This book is well worth reading. It has not been hastily written. There was deliberation in its preparation. Long has the writer thought on the questions discussed in his volume. The writer is a man of mature mind. He is a scholar and a thinker. Recent years have brought to him leisure and opportunity for meditation on the great themes of Christianity. In this volume there are the ripe thoughts of a cultured, serious Christian gentleman.

The title of the book is infelicitous. "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea" is provincial. It seems to carry with it the implication that the book is to be read by a class. No one who is not of "us" would be drawn to this meaty volume by the title. There is much in a name. The writer apparently thought alone of "our brethren" when he was at work on this book. For them alone it seems to have been written. If this was the purpose of the author, i. e., to write a book for "us as a people" alone, the title is not objectionable, but a book of this character, from the brain and pen of "one of our scribes," ought to be read by "our denominational brethren." It would do "the sects" good to read this work.

There is a mild tone of the controversial in the volume which, to say the least, does not increase its value.

Doubtless some readers of "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea" will be shocked to find on page 176, the affirmation that "there cannot be found better examples of mere logomachy than there is in the debate between Mr. Campbell and Mr. Rice on the design of baptism and the operation of the Holy Spirit." As an illustration the writer quotes two paragraphs as follows:

"Faith unites us spiritually to Christ and gives us an interest in the plan of salvation, baptism is the external ordinance by which we become visibly united to him and bound to devote ourselves to his service. Baptism is the external sign, faith is the internal grace. The latter unites us to Christ really, the former connects with him formally; but the piety of the heart is, in the Word of God, always represented as the great matter. . . . There is a vast difference between the sign and seal of regeneration and regeneration itself, and between the sign and seal of remission and remission itself. The believer is first pardoned, and then receives the sign and seal. Baptism is a pledge, so to speak, that God will forgive the sins of those who comply with the conditions set forth in his Word. But the sign or seal is not the thing or document, nor essential to it."

"The outward act, then, is but the symbol of the transition, inward and spiritual, by which our souls are bathed in that ocean of love which purifies our persons and makes them one with the Lord. . . . All outward ordinances (and all ordinances are outward), prayer, praise, the Lord's day, the breaking of the loaf, fasting, etc., have each a peculiar grace or intercommunion with Christ in them. . . . Each of these is a symbol of something more spiritual than itself. Prayer is but the embodiment of something more inward than the heart. But without these symbols spiritual life, health, comfort, can never be enjoyed. Hence to enter the sanctum sanctorum, the inner temple of spiritual enjoyment and Christian life, baptism is essentially necessary, preceded by a vigorous faith and genuine repentance and fixed resolves of obeying from the heart the mandates of the Great King."

Who is the author of the first paragraph? Who of the second? What is the difference in thought between the second and the first? Between the first and the second? Which is which? Who is who? What is what? Mr. Jones follows the quotations with the remark that "it will require both a logical and a theological genius to so diagram the foregoing sentiments of these two disputants as to make their vital differences manifest."

In 1823 Mr. Campbell engaged in a discussion with Mr. McCalla in which, concerning baptism and remission of sins, he said:

"The water of baptism, then, formally washes our sins. The blood of Christ really washes away our sins. Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed; yet he had no solemn pledge of the fact, no formal acquittal, no formal purgation of his sins until he washed them away in the water of baptism."

The author of "The Spiritual Side of

Our Plea" takes the ground that to this position—the position that there is an actual and a formal remission of sins—Mr. Campbell adhered to the close of his life. Real remission is granted on the conditions of faith in Christ and reference toward God: formal remission is bestowed in baptism.

Probably the most interesting chapter in the book is that which is entitled, "The Letter and the Spirit." As an illustration read the following:

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "How brief these words"—says our author—"how comprehensive their import, how profound their significance, and yet how flippant the manner in which they are sometimes preached, accepted and dispensed! Faith, we say, is the 'belief of testimony.' 'If you believe the historical facts that George Washington lived and wrought and died, can you believe the historical facts that Jesus lived and wrought and died and arose from the dead?' In this superficial way the superficial preacher often proclaims what he calls the Gospel. 'Yes,' says the unsophisticated hearer, 'I have always believed those facts of history.' 'Then,' says the preacher, 'you have faith, come along and be baptized and be saved; the Savior says: He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; take him at his word, obey and claim the promise.' 'But I don't feel like it now,' says the honest man. 'Don't feel like it!' exclaims the preacher, 'You must not be governed by feelings—feelings are no evidence of pardon or acceptance with God.'"

"Gentle reader, did you ever hear a preacher talk that way? What a caricature of the gospel! What a travesty on religion!"

Do the foregoing quotations whet your appetite for this book? I hope so.

"Our Plea" is from first to last profoundly spiritual. This fact ought to be made to stand out so that all men may see and appreciate it. Next week, probably, the Lord willing, I may say something more on this subject—the spiritual character of our plea.

Manliness in Preaching.

By Stephen J. Corey.

Preaching is a divine art; it is also a manly one. Christianity is not a sentiment but a service. Ours is no languid, dreamy, delicious religion—a stroll in a shady arbor here, and a song with the heavenly choir there. It has the smell of battle about it. It wears armor and wields a sword. Its waiting is activity and its rest enterprise. Thrice pernicious is that conception of Christianity which would make it but an added luxury to our epicurean nature. Christ bore the cross, should we ride in state?

A very human saint lay dying. Loving friends surrounded his bed. One, too sentimental, said hoping to comfort him in his last hour, "You will soon be with the angels." The old man, with a new luster in his eyes, struggled to his elbow and replied, "I don't care for angels, I want to see folks." The old Christian hero but added his voice to the universal testimony of the soul—the demand for a manly Christianity.

The incarnation did not stop with Christ; every preacher must be a man of God. True piety is a vigorous, robust thing. It has to do with affairs as well as meditations. The preacher speaks for Christ—very God of very God, but the manliest man who ever lived. He must proclaim a manly gospel in a manly way.

The day has passed when a preacher is a man of power because of his office. He must be if he would influence. It is not the cut of the minister's coat which now gives authority, it is the cut of the man inside the coat. The fact that one speaks through the authority of Christ only makes it the more imperative that one live the life of Christ. Only as the herald of the Truth, in true manliness, speaks forth the manly gospel, can he be mighty with the hearts of men, and eliminate the spectacle of a sham battle with sacred weapons.

Courage comes only through conviction. The man who exemplifies the manliness of preaching is the man who is convinced of truth. He speaks with authority. He is the man who thinks for himself. He is not the echo of other men, but stands or falls to his own Master. He searches the Scriptures and seeks to tell men what they teach, without regard to old doctrine or new doctrine, but for the truth in Christ Jesus.

True manliness sympathizes with men; it knows their lack. The preacher who possesses it will not pack his prayers with dogma and theological intricacies and forget the ache in the people's hearts. He will live in their daily tasks, feel their struggles and strike straight at the hearts of living men. His message will not glance high or stop short. It will reach all classes because it will be shot through with the common needs of men. He will be all things to all men. To him a heartache will be the same whether in the breast of a king or under the coat of a peasant.

Christ is the measure of man's capacities. In him is manliness found. Let no man say this is the language of poetry or dream—"Behold the man."

The preacher must have a manly message. Humanity has an ear for the war tocsin. Away down in the depths of the human soul, hidden from the gaze of men, where only in his best moments does the man himself ever go; down below the cowardice, the sensuality, and the selfishness, is that which responds to the trumpet call. It takes a message pregnant with conviction, conscience, and courage, to reach these depths and awake men to action. The gospel is a manly message. As one standing before the statue of Apollo Belvidere instinctively rises to full height so before the living gospel of Jesus Christ, one stands erect in true manfulness. Far too many listen to the gospel as only a message to soothe their fears. They forget it is a bugle summoning to conflict.

The message to transform the lives of men is not simply æsthetic and rhythmic with poesy. It strikes deeper and gets at the very marrow of life. This is a comfortable age: let us take care that our gospel does not also become a luxury. Christ does not summon all to be homeless and destitute, but there is a meaning in the words: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Christ did not come to startle the world. This saying is no wild caprice; it is the genius of the gospel.

A manly message deals with essentials. It has to do with men's needs. It sees sin and fights it. In such a message the fall of man is not a mere accident to be condoned and almost congratulated. It is an awful fact. It is not simply a theological dogma to be discussed, but a terrible reality. Men are lost but they may be saved. The downcast face may be turned heavenward and made all aflash and aflame with victory. To the man with such a message there is a fearless abandon. He is never endangered by that most pathetic thing which Jesus our militant commander ever sees, a minister of the gospel in mimic contest, fighting the devil with a buttoned foil. To him it is a real battle, and to the death.

Let us get our commission from Jesus. What was his temper when he walked by the sea of Galilee and said to the hardy fishers: "Follow me"? Did he say: "Come, follow me and I will make you happy—your life will be a delightful, luxurious thing"? No! But rather that clarion voice echoed o'er the glinting sea: "Come on men, drop your nets. Come off that little sea and I will put you on the ocean. Drop your nets, you are only catching fish—I will teach you the harder task, you shall catch men."

As we look on the fields white already to the harvest, what a need for manliness in the ministry to-day! How God calls for great-hearted, stalwart-minded men! Men who hate lies and despise cant. Men who know the religion of Jesus Christ to be a real thing, and knowing that can do battle.

Owe No Man Anything.

By W. H. Book.

A Christian will be honest; and an honest man will pay his debts if it takes the coat from his back. A man who does not value his word as much as he does his bond has learned but little of the doctrine of Christ.

A church that will promise to pay a preacher a certain amount for work done and then refuse to pay every cent is a dishonest, defunct, Christless church and its church record should be buried in the nearest potter's field and upon the tombstone should be written, "Died of rascality."

How many times have evangelists held meetings with good promises of pay; but when the time came to return to his home he found himself with but little of the amount in hand and a promise to send the rest soon! But it never came! Often we find preachers who have the reputation of never paying any debt contracted. In one of our large cities one of our preachers went to a printer with a desire to know how much he would charge to print a number of tracts. The printer informed him that it would cost $10. Then the man told him that he was a preacher and wanted the work done. Imagine his chagrin when the printer told him he could not then do the work, for his experience had taught him that preachers would not pay their debts.

In another large city a preacher had some work done and when he went to settle for the debt contracted, the publisher expressed himself as being greatly surprised and said he had found preachers slow to pay, and further that one preacher had beat them out of quite a good deal. In one of our churches a man who at one time was an active church member, but who now seldom comes into the church, says that a preacher got him to endorse his note and then refused to pay and would not even answer his letters and that he would now have the amount to pay. These preachers are in good standing and are preaching for good churches.

Brethren, these things ought not so to be.

Owe no man anything.

Why Christians Should Know About Missions.

By Hugh McLellan.

Every Christian should be informed on missions for the following twelve reasons:

First. In respect to his own intelligence.

Christian missions is a world movement, and for that reason no one can consider himself properly educated or even ordinarily intelligent who is ignorant of world missions. It is a reflection on one's own mind to neglect so great a theme.

Second. Because of the success of missions.

The records of this movement are as fascinating as any romance in the marvelous success which has attended it. It is the thing which succeeds that interests modern men, and nothing in the long lapses of history shows such brilliant and permanent success as Christian missions.

Third. For the spread of the ideas for which the Christian stands.

Every Christian is a witness to the gospel, a witness to its truth and a witness to its saving power. When we confessed Christ we committed ourselves to his work. We took our stand for the principles of his kingdom. Now it is only natural that we should be interested in the things for which we stand and anxious that the Christ who saved us should save others. He is a poor Democrat who does not spread his democracy, and he is a poor Christian, poor beyond compare, who does not spread the gospel that saved him.

Fourth. Because of the timeliness of missions.

The principles of the gospel of Christ are the ideals for our day. The spirit of the kingdom is the spirit of the times. The ancient enemies of Christianity are beginning to tire in their long battle against the truth, and the eyes that have long been shut against the light are opening and blinking with a new illumination. Heathenism and idolatry are out of date, behind the times. The leprous rags of Oriental superstition are being cast off and exchanged for those clean garments, in the putting on of which men put on Christ. Slowly but surely the organizations of heathenism are disintegrating under the subtle influence of the spirit of our day, which spirit is becoming more and more the spirit of Christ's kingdom.

Fifth. Because missions is the chief business of the church.

The church was commissioned to preach the gospel to the whole world. Under this charter it does business. Everything else is a side issue. All other ministries are "mingled with respects which stand aloof from the main point." The church should certainly understand its chief business.

Sixth. Missions is the debt laid upon the church.

It was in no quixotic spirit that Paul said, "I am debtor both to the Greek and to the barbarian," or "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Is the church less obligated than the apostle?

Seventh. To prevent a wicked pride.

We are apt, as we look around on our local work, to become wickedly proud of our wealth and society, our architecture and our music. It is only when we look beyond and see the vastness of our work and the vastness of our neglect that our real insignificance and unworthiness dawn upon us.

Eighth. To have fellowship with the heroes of the gospel.

We should have fellowship with our missionaries. There is no division in our work, for we are all workers in the world field. This fellowship is deepened by a study of the peculiar character of each mission and a sympathetic interest in each missionary.

Ninth. Because the gospel is the world's greatest need.

There are thousands of institutions and plans whose end is the amelioration of men. Most of them have gospel ideas in them. Many of them have borrowed the good things of the kingdom and have forgotten to give due credit for the loan. What the world needs is not a half-way scheme, but the gospel and the whole gospel. The gospel is the hand-book of philanthropy and reform. When the world "receives him into the ship, immediately it will be at the land whither it goes."

Tenth. To hasten Christian union.

It will be a long time before the denominations of christendom get together in a harmonious unity through exhortations to Christian union. The unity of thought is afar off. The unity of effort is here. There can be a union of Christian forces for the evangelization of the world; and thus, first united in unselfish effort, the world will wake to find itself unified in faith and love. The problem of Christian union is not to be solved on the religious platform but on the mission field.

Eleventh. To save the home churches.

A church which is losing interest in missions is losing life. Missionary effort is our vital breath. If we deny we die. It is only by giving our life we can save it. "Give" and "Given" are the Siamese twins linked together in an indissoluble bond. When "Give" dies, "Given" is dead.

Twelfth. To give the church of God vision.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." The mission field is the roof of the world. There the watcher sees the length of rivers and the trend of continents. There the clouds are below the feet and not above the head. There nothing intervenes between the eye and the eternal blue. So it is on the mount of sacrificial service; above the plain, above the hills, above the small things; in the rare air, unsoiled by the rack of worldly interests, with the world below and God above, that the watcher sees the flow of that river of righteousness gleaming through the shadowland, broadening into that brighter land and reaching to greet God's land which, flooded in light, lies away from the mount of vision. It is from the view point of missions that we learn church history and see the world's destiny.

Verbatim et Literatim Religion.

By C. B. Carlisle.

In our patriotic speeches on "Decoration Day," we say that what America does, how she does it and why she does it, will henceforth make the political, the moral and the economic referendum of all the nations. Then, to illustrate the thought, we lift our country into view, as a Christian personality, there in China, which, but for America's what and how and why, would have been blotted from the map. To all intents and purposes, the nations, in this affair, followed the spirit and the teachings of Americanism "verbatim et literatim."

Shifting the thought from national to spiritual affairs, what Christ did, how he did it and why he did it, ought to make the religious referendum of every man. Within the acreage of one of Christ's sentences, I find this thought of "verbatim et literatim" religion: "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." What of all these speculations? What of all these creedal statements? What of all these metaphysical propositions? "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

Christ never defined anything to be believed in. He simply took his disciples to the question of his own and the heavenly Father's personality, "Ye believe God, believe me." Not by any motion of hand, not by any look of eye, did Jesus Christ ever intimate or suggest that a mental assent to a proposition or a series of propositions was to be either a test of any virtue, or any part of the religious character of a man. When you take religion out of a personal transaction with Christ, a daily meeting and dealing with him, as a personal Savior and friend, and put it into definitions of any sort, creed, discipline, articles of faith, catechism or ritual, you cannot defend it. Not only that, but you may be putting before an applicant for church membership a something which that soul, through ignorance or a superstitious belief, will come to depend upon, instead of trust in a personal Christ.

No definition comes between you and your friend. This mystery of personality and of personal relation is the charm of human life, the ground of all our trust in one another. To me, it is the vital germ of religion. Christ himself is my creed. His character is my code. It is unthinkable to me that any one can religiously love a definition; can religiously love an idea. Back of the religious instincts and love there must be a personal object. There is but one religious personality—Christ. He says "Follow me."

Christ religiously loved a personality—the heavenly Father. "Follow me" "verbatim et literatim." We know what Christ said about love, and what he did with it. Follow him here, "verbatim et literatim." We know what he said about forgiveness, and what he did with it. Follow him here, "verbatim et literatim." So all along the diapason of human conduct and character. He said "I do always the things that please him," the heavenly Father.

In the record of his life we see what Christ did; we see how he did it; we see why he did it. It is not thinkable to me that if Christ's way of being Christian and religious was not the right way, the heavenly Father would say to us, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." Men want the gospel of this Christ. They want Christ, the old-while Galilee teacher in brown serge; not an ecclesiastical or theological Christ, that they must see through a creed or some theological statement, but the divine-human Christ, who was tempted in all points as we are, who clears our moral vision, who reveals our weaknesses, and shows us the way to strength and deliverance, the Christ whose righteousness pieces out our unrighteousness and gives us welcome to the "place prepared."

What Most Interests Me Now

By J. S. LAMAR

XV.—The Crucifixion.

There are numberless ways in which men die, and we might suppose that any one of these could have been chosen by Christ, that he might thus have died, been buried, and have risen again. This would embrace about all that most people see in the gospel preached by Paul (1 Cor. 15:1-4). If the idea of sacrificial blood be included in the conception, it is still evident from the typical sacrifice of Isaac that by the commandment of God he might have been "slain for us" by loving hands moved by tender, sympathizing, trustful, obedient hearts. And nowhere in the ancient Scriptures had an acceptable offering to God been associated with murderous hate and malignancy in the slayers. There must be a meaning, therefore, in the crucifixion itself deeper than is usually seen, diviner than we have ever appreciated. May God specially help me in the treatment of this most sacred and solemn theme.

I have already, in a previous chapter, emphasized the fact that the world was at its worst when God sent his Son into it, and that this was true of both Jews and Gentiles. They had sunk so low and become so Satanic in their opposition to true holiness and its Author, and were thus the very children of the devil, that if the Son should reveal to them now the character and requirements of the Father, they would be ready to put him to death. This he had foreseen from the beginning, and for this he had waited—making known through his prophets that when man became thus desperately wicked and prepared to go to this dreadful extreme, he would deliver his Son into their hands that they might kill him; that he would do this for their sakes, thus revealing that the depth of his love could reach to the deepest depths of their sin, so that in the light of this manifest grace they might see their true character and state and be brought to repentance. In harmony with the above I quote a passage or two: "Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye by the hands of lawless men did crucify and slay." Again, "For of a truth against thy holy servant Jesus, both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles and the peoples of Israel were gathered together to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel foreordained to come to pass."

Let it be particularly noticed that though the action of these men coincided with the divine purpose, and was utilized for the accomplishment of that purpose, it was absolutely unconstrained and free and was most wicked. It was prompted by the spirit of evil and sin, the prince of darkness, the ruler of the darkness of this world, the adversary of God. The men engaged in the deed were his willing agents, actively and maliciously doing his will and accomplishing his purpose. This was one side. On the other was infinite love, doing nothing, but exhibiting only, if I may so say, its passive side. Up to this crucifixion period the love of Christ had been active—laboriously, earnestly active. He had been constantly engaged in doing good—healing the sick, feeding the hungry, raising the dead, showing mercy to the fallen, encouraging the faint-hearted, teaching the truth, warning the headstrong and hard-hearted, and tenderly pleading with all the weary and heavy laden. But at last when it was manifest that the more perfectly he exhibited the character and life and work of God, the more embittered were his enemies and the more determined to kill him, he bade a weeping farewell to Jerusalem and left their house desolate. Active divine love had failed. If they were ever to say "blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," it must grow out of a love "that passeth all understanding"—a love that passively yields itself up to suffer with Godlike patience for the sake of the very people who hate it, and to suffer this at their hands. The people were ready and clamorous to inflict the suffering even unto death—he was ready, for their salvation and that of the world represented by them, to endure it. And now Satan's cunning is to measure itself with God's wisdom; infernal hate to engage in deadly conflict with divine love. The crisis of the world, seen of old, and foretold from the beginning, is here at last—"Father, the hour is come, glorify thy Son that thy Son may glorify thee."

There is nothing, perhaps, more wonderful, certainly nothing more noteworthy in the crucifixion and its attendant circumstances, than the perfect oneness of the Father and the Son in the manifestation of what I have called the passive side of the Divine Love. When Christ was arrested in the garden, uncalled-for indignity was cast upon him and base insinuations as to his guilt, by coming upon him with soldiers and an armed mob in the middle of the night, as though he were a thief or some dangerous desperado. He felt it, and rebuked them for it. But though he could wield the power of God by his will, and though legions of angels were ready to obey his call, he offered no resistance. And during all the shameful proceedings that followed—the buffetings, scorn, mockery, the crown of thorns and the clamorous demands to crucify him—it was the same. God was silent, no hand was stretched forth for his rescue and Christ submitted without a murmur and was led as a lamb to the slaughter. And amid the unimaginable agonies of the crucifixion with its accompanying jeers and unfeeling taunts, there was no thought of turning back, no call for the divine power to rescue him, but only "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." They know not, and unless I suffer on to the very end, they will never know; unless I give up my very life to them and for them they will never know the depth of divine love—never realize the awfulness of their guilt and thus be brought to repentance and salvation.

Thus Satan, the arch-deceiver, in stirring up wicked men to accomplish his purpose, had deceived himself. God in permitting him and them freely to do their worst, had accomplished his own best—had achieved the object contemplated from all eternity—precisely the thing which his hand and counsel foreordained to come to pass. This brings into view a problem the solution of which to mere metaphysics is very difficult. How can the human will be really free, and at the same time, coincide with divine and absolute foreordination? Viewed in the abstract, the question might well puzzle us, but in the concrete, as seen in the crucifixion, the difficulty is much relieved. If we glance back at it for a moment, having this problem in mind, the following points will be manifest:

1. The parties who crucified the Christ acted of their own free will.

2. God not only did not command nor constrain them to do it, but he forbade it, and through his Son labored faithfully by argument, pleading, warning and earnest appeal to induce them not to do it. It was consequently opposed to his will and could not, therefore, have been ordained by him.

3. They reached a point in malevolence and rebellion from which without taking their lives or their freedom, they could not be kept back from their purpose.

4. As to do either of these would have destroyed them as men, God showed the estimate he put upon human freedom by allowing them to take the life of his Son rather than destroy it.

5. Free will is naturally and necessarily limited in its operation to human conduct, and here it was allowed full play up to its utmost limit. When it had put the Son of God to shame and suffering and death, it could go no further.

6. Beyond this limit was the region in which God's power and foreordination were displayed.

7. He had foreseen from the beginning that if allowed to exercise their freedom, they would put his Son to death, and he had predetermined or foreordained that when they did he would bring to pass consequences which they had neither foreseen nor desired, and which they were wholly unable either to produce or prevent—the resurrection of Christ—the abolition of death—the destruction of him who had the power of death—and the bringing in of everlasting life and eternal glory. All this will be made sufficiently apparent by reference (in the Revised Version) to Acts 4:27, 28, compared with 2:23 and 3:18.

And now in view of the whole subject of Christ's death, as exhibited and set forth, it is for the reader to say whether he really thinks that Christ died in order to make his Father willing to save sinners, or whether it was not rather, as I believe, to reveal and demonstrate that the Father forever was and always is merciful and gracious and ready to forgive, and at the same time to furnish the crowning proof that in this merciful disposition, as well as in essential nature and eternal purpose, the Son and the Father were One.

It is with something like a shudder—a sort of heartquake—that I remember the theological food upon which in youth and early manhood I was fed. The Father was represented as an angry God, while condemned and guilty sinners stood helpless, hopeless and trembling before him. He unsheathed his sword of divine justice to take vengeance upon them. With uplifted hand and unpitying eye, his almighty arm made the dreadful and merciless thrust at the quailing and guilty wretches—when Christ in compassion interposed his own person and received the deadly stroke of divine justice in his own heart. This, as I was told, appeased God's anger, satisfied his justice, and all was well!

If I have learned nothing else in life, I am thankful to know now that God is love; that he so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son; that the Son freely gave himself to do his Father's will; that the Son is not to be honored above the Father, but that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father.

New York Letter.

By S. T. Willis.

The opening of the Hall of Fame at the University of New York on the afternoon of May 30 was an occasion long to be remembered. Not so much for what was said and done on that occasion as for the significance of the institution itself. Senator Chauncy M. Depew was the orator of the day, and most eloquently and wisely did he perform his duty. Large numbers of distinguished men and women were in attendance. The occasion was one for reflections on human greatness and the achievements of those whose names are recorded in the Hall of Fame. They are in the order of the merit accorded them as follows: Washington, Lincoln, Webster, Franklin, Grant, Marshall, Jefferson, Emerson, Fulton, Longfellow, Irving, Edwards, Morse, Farragut, Clay, Peabody, Hawthorne, Cooper (Peter), Whitney, Lee, Mann, Audubon, Kent, Beecher, Story, Adams, Channing, Stuart, Gray. At some other time I may write a "study" of the votes in analytical detail for it is a most instructive investigation. But suffice it to say now that in the Hall of Fame, unlike the Hall of Statuary at the National Capitol, authors, preachers, inventors, scientists, teachers and other civilians occupy niches of fame as well as soldiers, sailors and statesmen.

The material side of this institution is beautiful—a semi-circular structure, five hundred feet long, partly surrounding the New York University Library, the Hall of Languages and the Hall of Philosophy, the lower portion is devoted to a museum and the upper story, which is a colonnade, will contain the bronze tablets inscribed to the memory of those voted to places of honor. The panels of stone are seven feet in length by two and a quarter in height. The bronze tablet is set in this panel, completely filling it. Upon this are inscribed the name, the year of birth and death, and below a saying of the person commemorated, carefully selected from his writings, in order to present some important aspect of his character. Next to the Hall of Languages is the "authors' corner," next is the "teachers' corner" and further on, one quarter around the curve, are the scientists.

At the north end of the hall is the corner devoted to the statesmen, next to them the jurists and then come the soldiers and sailors. The seventh section, planned to include all outside these six divisions, is marked by the Latin word septimi, in which the philanthropists, Peter Cooper and Geo. Peabody, and the painter, Gilbert Stuart, are honored. The selection of the names of men and women for this Hall of Fame will cause interest in the history and achievements of the persons so honored and so it will prove strongly educational in its nature and influence and in consequence will be inspirational to the youth of the land.

Some time since a distinguished Presbyterian minister of Brooklyn said no one would submit to immersion without pressure. We have not heard of any one's being coerced into submission to immersion, but a Methodist preacher a few days ago in Reading, Pa., announced that he would give a $1 gold prize to each child brought to him for baptism (?) on a certain day. At the appointed time the preacher made an address, took from his pocket a purse containing gold coin and proceeded with the performance. Nine young mothers stepped forward with infants in their arms and had their offspring christened and the minister placed a coin in the hand of each child. The gold pieces were returned to the church officers who will deposit the same in banks and the books will be given to the parents. The money is to remain in bank, he says, at compound interest until the children are of age, when it will be turned over to them. In explanation the preacher said, "This is no new thing, over 1900 years ago the Magi sought the child Jesus and presented him with gold, frankincense and myrrh. What I did was strictly in accord with the teachings of the New Testament." Is not this as senseless an application of Scripture as you could imagine? Those who advocate pedobaptism certainly must be hard pressed for material when babies must be purchased for the ceremony by a promise to endow the children with a bank account.

One of the new fashioned phases of the modern up-to-date city church (so some people think) is the church nursery where the babies may be cared for while the mothers of the congregation attend the services. Certain churches in Brooklyn have had such an enterprise and think that it works well. And now the idea has crossed the Hudson and invaded New Jersey on its march westward. A Baptist congregation in that state is trying it with satisfaction. The plan is to have some good woman who understands how to take care of babies select a corps of young lady assistants, and during the morning service once a month take charge of all the babies in the families of the church in the lecture room while their mothers attend the services in the auditorium. This certainly is a good thing to do when the poor tired mother cannot otherwise go to church.

Much feeling is being engendered against George D. Herron and his blatant, blasphemous defiance of the laws relating to the inherent sanctity of the marital relations. This man claims that in leaving his wife who, competent witnesses say, was loyal, devoted and true, and in living with a younger and wealthier woman as his wife he has a perfect right to do so, on the ground that the wealthier woman is his "affinity." She being his "inspiration" he is justified, in his own opinion, in breaking both the law of God and of man. His theory is: Man is justified in leaving his wife and his children and assuming the marital relation with another whenever he is aware that his marriage is a misfit or when he fancies that another woman is his affinity. He and the woman with whom he is now living assumed their present relationship in this city a few weeks ago without any ceremony, secular or religious. They simply announced to some friends one evening that henceforth they would live together as husband and wife, because they chose each other. But even worse than this perhaps is Mr. Herron's avowed intention to give himself to the teaching of "social freedom." It is his purpose it seems to put himself at the head of a society to advocate and practice the doctrine which will destroy the church, society and the state just in proportion to its success. The press and pulpit cannot be too strong in condemning this evil.

How Busy People Should Study Missions.

By Mrs. Helen E. Moses.

Busy Christians should study missions because as persons with work to do, with tasks to finish, they should fit each and all into the will of God. "Having first given themselves" should be true of every working man and woman.

Busy people are usually sure of but one season for fresh, uninterrupted, forceful study, and that is in the early morning. A period of quiet study in the morning makes a good beginning for an active, happy day. The best opportunities for the assimilation of the information gained grow out of morning study. The facts are in mind for classification and contemplation on the way to the business place, or in the midst of household duties. A day with such a beginning is redeemed from being dull or commonplace, however heavy may be its round of duty. One can work nobly with noble thoughts in mind.

Missions should be studied prayerfully, therefore it is well that the period of mission study should follow the morning "Quiet Hour." Waiting upon God is the truest preparation for studying the divine enterprise of missions.

The study of missions should be systematic. A definite outline of world-wide fields and forces should be first obtained and then particular fields and lines of missionary endeavor should be pursued. Every Endeavorer should have a thorough knowledge of the missionary enterprises of the church with which he is identified. Ignorance of these is inexcusable. An acquaintance with the world fields will help him to see the relation and proportion the work done by his own people sustains to the entire task to be accomplished, and will ever be an incentive to greater activity.

Missions should be studied to be remembered. The facts gained are for use. Recently during a journey from the east we traveled for thirty-six hours in company with a group of capitalists. They knew our country as perfectly as geographers, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, and were planning for the development of its natural resources. The object of their plans was not the good of the country or its people, but the acquisition of riches for themselves. When Christians study the possibilities of the peoples of the earth and plan that they may be won for Christ with the accurate knowledge, the close scrutiny and intense earnestness that marked the counsels of these capitalists, the coming of our Lord will draw nigh.

Missions must be studied in the light of the Bible. To every Endeavorer that is the highest court of appeal. Let him settle the fact with his spirit, that the message of the Bible to him concerning his opportunity and responsibility is final and to be obeyed. This accepted, the way of obedience will always be open. Since Christ has said "Go," to obey will not only be a duty, but a delight, for He has also said, "Lo, I am with you alway."

Punishment Ineffectual.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

It has often been asserted that punishment is a means of causing sinners to repent and leading them to turn unto God. So it is argued that if sinners be not saved in this life they will be saved in the future world through a course of punishment which they will experience there.

The advocates of this theory do not tell us how long the ungodly must be punished in the spirit world in order to induce them to repent, nor do they declare the degree of punishment which will be necessary; they only say that punishment in that world will effect the result which they look for. But this theory is based on fatal grounds. In the first place, the salvation of a soul cannot be procured by any sort of personal punishment. If it could be, then a soul could be saved entirely independent of Christ's sacrifice and intervention.

The sinner would pay for his salvation by the pains of his punishment. In the second place, there are multitudes of instances which prove that the subjects of divine punishment have grown worse instead of better through such experience. It was so with thousands of the Israelites. In the fourth chapter of the book of Amos it is repeatedly stated that the punishment which the Israelites, who had gone far into sin, experienced, did not cause them to return unto the Lord. Here is a passage: "I also have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places, yet have ye not returned unto me saith the Lord." Again God said: "I have smitten you with blasting and mildew; the multitudes of your gardens and your vineyards and your fig trees and your olive trees hath the palmerworm devoured, yet have ye not returned unto me saith the Lord." Again he said: "I have sent among you the pestilence after the manner of Egypt; your young men have I slain with the sword and have carried away your horses, and I have made the stink of your camp to come up even into your nostrils, yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord." Surely if such judgments of punishment would not lead those people to turn unto their Lord, having so much knowledge of his truth and goodness as they had, then it is vain to expect that punishment in the eternal world would cause the ungodly to turn repentantly unto God. But, as I have stated, punishment, in itself, cannot redeem any soul.

Washington, D. C., Letter.

By E. B. Bagby.

The eyes of our people in the east are now turned in the direction of Bethany Beach, and in a few weeks we expect to be in sight of its heaving billows and in sound of its "manifold voices." This new ocean resort, controlled by the Disciples of Christ, is located on the coast of Delaware, ten miles south of Rehoboth, from which place it may be reached by steamer. Word comes that the assembly auditorium is nearing completion, cottages and a new hotel are being built, and everything will be in readiness for the opening, July 4. The governor of the state, F. D. Power, B. A. Abbott and J. W. West are announced as the star attractions for the patriotic service on this day. Peter Ainslie, Ira W. Kimmel, Carey Morgan, Geo. Rutledge, T. E. Cramblett, Charles A. Young, Robt. G. Frank, J. A. Hopkins and W. S. Hoye have been invited to conduct daily religious services for the following two weeks. Beginning July 21, a number of days will be devoted to Chautauqua features, such as lectures, concerts, etc. Earl Wilfley and C. H. Payne, cartoonist, have been engaged. W. E. M. Hackleman will have charge of the music. Tents (half-walled) 9x14, can be rented at $2 per week, and meals served at 25 cents. For information write to R. R. Bulgin, Millville, Del.

The organization of a central board of the St. Louis churches is an expression of a general and growing sentiment that our congregations should exhibit the unity that is proclaimed from the pulpits. We are glad to say that our cause in this city has never been retarded by any unholy strife. The four congregations are a unit in all forms of aggressive work. We find in this not only strength but economy as well. Take the matter of printing and advertising, for example. We unite in the publication of tracts and distribute these by the thousand. Just now we are preaching a series of sermons on the same topics. The people of Washington are having a broadside on "The Old Time Religion" from the thirteen-inch gun in the Vermont Avenue pulpit and the smaller bores in the other churches.

The subjects are as follows:

"How the Old Time Religion Divided the Scriptures," "The Creed of the Old Time Religion," "How Men Got the Old Time Religion," "A Model Case of the Old Time Religion," "Faith According to the Old Time Religion," "Repentance According to the Old Time Religion," "Baptism According to the Old Time Religion," "The Lord's Supper According to the Old Time Religion," and "The Fruits of the Old Time Religion."

Cephas Shelburne and W. S. Hoye closed their meeting at Beaver Creek, Md., with eight additions. I. W. Kimmel reports eight additions at Whitney Avenue the past three Sundays. Among the recent additions at H Street is J. F. Lewis, a converted Jew. W. J. Wright is hopeful of a work begun by this brother. He has organized a large class of Hebrews and spends several hours with them every Sunday opening and alleging that Jesus is the Christ. Among the additions to our working force is Lew Ben, a Chinese Christian who spent two years in study at Milligan College. At Ninth Street there have been twenty-six additions since April 1; average attendance at Sunday-school now over four hundred. Our school will contribute $250 for missions this year.

H. C. Kendrick will be at work with the First Church, Hagerstown, Md., by July 1. Since I knew him at Kentucky University fourteen years ago he has had three successful pastorates, viz., Fort Scott, Kan., Huntington and Logansport, Ind. Bro. Kendrick will prove a worthy successor of P. A. Cave, who is now serving the Third Church, Richmond, Va.

Joys of June-Time.

By John S. Martin.

These are balmy days in June—
O, that they should fly so soon!—
Wheresoe'er our feet may go
There the fragrant roses blow,
And God's sunshine beaming warm
Makes the products of the farm
Spring so lightly from the ground
That one hardly turns around
Ere one sees them leaping high
With a joy to greet the sky.

When the raindrops ceased to fall
Then the sun began to call,
And the answer may be seen
Far and near in living green;
In the young and tender maize—
So responsive to the rays
Of the early morning sun—
Showing life so well begun
That 'twould take some raging storm
Or a frost, to cause it harm.

Now the farmer heedeth not
That the sun is growing hot;
Neither thinks of weeds and clods,
As he ever onward plods,
But is thinking of his corn
Till he hears the dinner horn;
Then with haste do'h speed away
For the solace of the day.
And doth think it fairly earned
Just as butter is when churned.

O, these days of June so fair,
Full of fragrant, bracing air,
How they fill the heart with glee
Bringing peace and harmony!
Although clouds, anon, arise,
They but traverse sunny skies,
And the shadows that they cast
Can but for a moment last;
Long to stay they'd hardly dare
When there's gladness everywhere.

Now the birds and butterflies
Flitting by attract the eyes;
Cheerful noises that abound
Make a most delightful sound;
Gay and madly dancing flowers
Lend enchantment to the hours;
With the perfume laden breeze
Come, in train, the busy bees,
And the ever-constant hum
Tells that summer time has come.

As the reaper with his hook
Steps abroad and takes a look
At the fields of waving grain
Scattered over hill and plain,
Thinks he that the God above
Surely is a God of love;
For the bread once cast away
Has returned again to-day,
Bringing blessings in its van
To the hopeful heart of man.

Now the poet sits and dreams—
Brain is full of lofty themes—
Nature's rhythm in control
Music makes within his soul—
Music that can ne'er be sung
Nor from mortal lips be wrung.
What a mine of wealth is this!
All his heart is full of bliss,
Bubbling o'er with rune and rhyme
Like the soul of summer time.

Current Literature.

Recent Missionary Books.

The most important among recent missionary books of a general sort is A Study of Christian Missions by William Newton Clarke, author of "An Outline of Christian Theology." It is not a book of details, of facts and figures concerning modern missionary enterprises, but considers the broad principles upon which Christian missions rest and by which missionary activity must be regulated. It treats of the general conditions which missions must meet, of the forces which the church has at hand for the work of world-wide evangelization, of the relation of denominationalism to missions, and of the present needs and prospects of the cause of missions. Such a book as this needs to be supplemented by other sources of information in regard to specific conditions, achievements and needs in particular fields; but, when so supplemented, it is capable of being of the highest value as a source both of inspiration and of intelligent understanding of the great field of which it treats.

It is a small book in size, but large in its breadth of view, its catholicity of spirit, its grasp on the really great and vital principles which underlie the missionary aspect of our religion. It would have been more accurately named if it had been called "An Introduction to the Study of Christian Missions." It would be impossible for a class for the study of missions to make a better beginning than by carefully reading and discussing Dr. Clarke's book. Every historical or descriptive book on missions that may be read thereafter will be made doubly valuable by such an introduction. (Scribner's. $1.25.)

Among the many thrilling stories of missionary adventure and devotion, there has not within a decade appeared one more remarkable from every point of view than With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple, by Dr. Susie Carson Rijnhart. It is the "narrative of four years residence on the Tibetan border and of a journey into the far interior." Korea, formerly "the hermit kingdom," but now no longer a hermit, is near and open compared with the land of the Lamas. For utter inaccessibility, by reason both of geographical remoteness, the absence of means of communication and the hostility of natives, no country can be compared to Tibet. Yet this woman lived for years upon the border, made friends with the people, learned their language and customs, traveled among them, gave them the Scriptures in their own tongue, talked to them of the Light of the World compared with which the "Light of Asia" is but a feeble ray in the darkness, penetrated to the interior of that forbidden land, and—greater wonder—returned alive.

Believing that Tibet could be approached from the Chinese side, that is, from the northeast, with less opposition than by the usual and more direct route from India, Mr. Rijnhart, an independent Dutch missionary, and his wife Dr. Rijnhart went far up the Yang-tse River, journeyed overland far past the last station of the China Inland Mission, and established themselves on the Tibetan border at Lusar under the shadow of a lamasery containing four thousand devotees of Buddhism. The record of their dealings with these Buddhist priests, winning their confidence and ultimately residing for several months in their very midst and under their hospitality, is a lesson in patient, wise missionary work. A child was born to them here on the edge of Tibet. Later a journey into the interior was undertaken, to sow seeds of Christian truth among the more savage nomadic Tibetans who dwell in tents on the great grassy plateau, and to approach as near as possible to the capital and sacred city, Lhasa, where none but Buddhists can go on pain of death.

The real hardships began with this journey. The baby died and was buried on a hillside. Robbers were encountered. Perverse and dishonest guides led them astray and deserted them. As a crowning misfortune, Mr. Rijnhart disappeared, evidently murdered by those to whom he had gone to appeal for help. His wife was left alone in a wilderness which would have been far safer if it had been without human inhabitants. For two months did that lone missionary woman journey toward the outposts of settled Chinese government with such aid as she could secure from nomad chiefs and traveling merchants, half of whom were the blackest class of scoundrels. Through these and manifold other difficulties, Dr. Rijnhart at last arrived at a frontier mission point, from which her journey to the coast and to America, though it would doubtless have been exciting enough to most of us, does not seem to her worth recounting.

And all of this is without complaint and without glorification. Events are simply narrated and conditions, whether pleasant or appalling, are simply described with no straining after effect. There is no need for rhetoric in dealing with such eloquent facts. This is modern missions in their most heroic phase. It is typical of the work of those great spirits who can find no such word as "wait" in the Great Commission, who therefore do not tarry for the Powers to "open up" a country for commerce and establish guarantees for the safety of foreigners, but go in and open it up themselves. No Christian can read this book without being a better Christian, and no missionary can read it without being a better missionary. We have long since discarded from this page the well-worn phrase, "this book should be in every preacher's library," but the occasion tempts us to restore it. We will at least say that the Endeavor Society or other organization which has a missionary library ought not to think of being without it.

Incidentally, Dr. Rijnhart gives a large amount of accurate and interesting information about these strange people and their land, as her long residence and intimate acquaintance well enable her to do. (Revell. $1.50.)

The missionary story of Madagascar, the history of civilization in that island from the beginning of the nineteenth century, is told by J. J. Kilpin Fletcher in The Sign of the Cross in Madagascar. The first part of the narrative is given a lively personal interest by being made to center about the fortunes of a certain group of characters who may be considered as typical of the more intelligent natives prior to the entrance of Christian influences into the island. It is not a narrative of personal experiences, but the author has used his materials to good advantage and has produced an apparently trustworthy account, with a good deal of vividness of description and some picturesqueness of style, though not without a degree of prolixity. It is a story of idolatry, superstition, palace intrigue, missionary heroism and martyrdom. With the conquest of Madagascar by the French, the Roman Catholics entered and, by political influence and persecution, reaped much of the reward of the earlier Protestant missionary work. Of the three and a half millions of population of the island, about half a million are now at least nominally Christian. (Revell. 1.00)

Of all native converts in pagan countries, none has become more widely known for good works and for Christian efficiency than Pandita Ramabai, the high-caste Hindu widow. To the many who have seen and heard her in this country, and to the many more whose interest in the work of elevating Indian womanhood and in the missionary cause in general has been stimulated by reading of her life and achievements, Helen S. Dyer's Pandita Ramabai: The Story of Her Life will be a book of intense interest. It would be a better written book and perhaps more impressive to the general reader if the author had been more willing to allow the facts to speak for themselves—they are eloquent enough—and had not supplemented them by so much of exhortation and pious comment upon the wonderful providences of God, answers to prayer and fulfillments of promise. The simple story itself would be as convincing and impressive as could be desired. (Revell. $1.00.)

Food for Memory.

The Kind That Builds Up the Brain.

It is hard to believe that certain kinds of food will strengthen the memory, and yet, upon the condition of the brain depends the character of the mind, and its power to remember, and to exert itself in various ways and a healthy brain can only be maintained by well selected food.

Now we know that daily use of the brain uses up certain parts that are thrown out through the pores to the outer surface of the skin. This waste is natural and must be made up from food.

Grape-Nuts Food was made especially to rebuild the brain and nerve centers. An experience in Chicago will illustrate.

Mrs. G. H. Baber, 528 South Paulina St., writes, "I had a terrible siege of gastritis, my stomach refused everything in the way of food until I got hold of Grape-Nuts. It was perfectly wonderful and marvelous to see the difference, I began to improve at once. I weighed myself at that time and found that I had 118 pounds to my credit. I gained in weight, strength and health steadily and rapidly, and now weigh 160 pounds and am strong and in better health than ever in my life.

I have lately had a seven months' course of vocal instruction and have memorized 58 songs and most of the accompaniments besides several piano pieces. When I started in it seemed difficult to memorize one, but my memory has been growing better every day and I now find it easy to commit to memory without difficulty.

I have taken no medicine, but my steady diet of Grape-Nuts Food has given me strength, health and memory."

Our Budget.

—Summer has at last gotten down to business.

—One can almost hear the corn growing these June days.

—The song of the reaper and self binder is already heard in the land, and waving wheatfields are turned into golden shocks of grain along its path.

—"We are confronted," writes a friend from Oklahoma, "with a tremendous wheat crop." The young territory is always raising a problem of that kind. It is "Ok." sure enough.

—About this time, as the makers of almanacs would say, look out for frequent exits from the city to the country—to the mountains, to the lakesides, to the seasides.

—J. B. Boen, of Seymour, Tex , asks concerning a portable baptistry which he desires to use in connection with their northwestern annual camp meeting. He asks how it is made, what is its weight and what it will cost. Address him as above.

—The Disciples of Christ at Mammoth Spring, Ark., are trying to build a house of worship and to establish a congregation in that town on a permanent basis. They feel unable to build a house without outside aid and will be grateful for any contributions which may be sent to L. P. Fraysher.

—It is not improbable that we may have visions in our vacation days, if we take our religion with us and are in the Spirit on the Lord's day. If all Christians would do this then the summer hegira would become a great missionary movement, carrying the life of Christ into new regions.

—But, as the preacher told us, Lord's day, John took his religion with him to Patmos, or there would have been no glorious visions granted to him while there. It was John, not Patmos, to whom the visions came. Infinitely more valuable in the sight of the Lord was the beloved than the island to which he was banished.

—There is already a gain of nearly 300 in the number of schools contributing to the Children's Day offering and the total gain for the year will probably be 500 or 600. For the week ending June 13 the receipts from Children's Day amounted to $10,380.24, a loss of over $300 as compared with the corresponding week of last year. Schools should send in their offerings promptly to the secretary of the foreign society.

—The fourth annual camp meeting of the Disciples of Christ in northwest Texas will be held near Seymour, beginning July 25 and continuing eleven days. The meetings will be held in a capacious tent and those who attend should come prepared to camp out and enjoy all the benefits of camp life as well as the advantages of a religious assembly. This is expected to be a big thing and those in charge have planned for it on that scale. The principal speakers will be J. H O. Smith and J. B. Sweeney. For information about transportation, tents, camping facilities or anything else, address J. B. Boen, Seymour, Texas.

—The eleventh annual conference for young women in colleges and cities of the middle west will meet at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 2-13, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. Bible study, missionary conferences and the discussion of methods of Christian work among students will be the prominent features of the program. Several well known speakers will be present, including Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall and Robert E. Speer. The attendance last year was more than 400. The plan, the program and the location are alike excellent. Young women who contemplate attending may address Miss Louise F. Shields, 1312 Champlain Building, Chicago.

—J. P. Davis, of Burlington Junction, Mo., recently delivered his lecture on "Tongues," in the interest of the Y. P. S. C. E. at Braddyville, Ia. It was highly spoken of.

—A minister, thirty years of age, unmarried, with ten years' experience as pastor, will take a pastorate or supply for the summer, or will go out over Sundays to places within 100 miles of Chicago. Salary to suit congregation. Address Preacher, 115 33rd St., Chicago.

—The two hundredth anniversary of the founding of Yale College will be celebrated in New Haven Oct. 20-23. It is not so many years since Yale College became Yale University and under the direction of its new president, Arthur T. Hadley, the university spirit has become more perfectly embodied in the institution than ever before.

—A Society of Christian Endeavor at Ahmednagar, India, has some unusual committees: one on street preaching, another on tract distributing and a Sunday-school committee numerous and lively enough to hold fourteen Sunday-schools among non-Christian children on one Sunday morning.

—The congregation at Franklin, Ind., of which C. R. Hudson is pastor, on June 9 had a canvass led by J. T. Sweeney, which resulted in raising $15,000 to erect a new house of worship. This insures the building of a $20,000 structure of Bedford limestone which will be a credit to the community and to the cause. We have sixteen churches and 2,500 members in this county, among which the church at the county seat, Franklin, can with its new equipment more than ever exercise a wise and beneficial influence.

—We are in receipt of the program of Bethany Assembly which will be held at Bethany Park, Ind., July 26 to August 12. The program is far too long to print in full but it is full of interest and those who attend will find it well worth while. July 27 is Children's Day; July 29, 30, Y. P. S. C. E. Day; August 1, 2, C. W. B. M. Day; August 5, 6, Sunday-school Day; August 7, Educational Day; August 8, Home Mission Day; August 9, Ministerial Day. The list of speakers is thoroughly representative and the subjects are attractive.

—The election of Burris A. Jenkins to the presidency of Kentucky University, and his acceptance of the place are recent events which are bound to have an important bearing upon that old and honored institution. We should say it probably means that Kentucky University is about to enter upon a career of greater prosperity and wider usefulness. President elect Jenkins is a young man of fine scholarship, acquaintance with university methods, of splendid ability as a preacher and Bible lecturer, and possesses in a high degree those elements of character which attract both young and old, and that openness to new truth, or to new phases of old truth, which is the truest conservatism. That he should be selected is as complimentary to the institution as it is to him. We congratulate all parties and wish the university a long career of increasing prosperity and usefulness.

—Mrs. Thomas M. Shackleford, of Tampa, Fla., reports progress on their enterprise of purchasing a lot on which to erect their tabernacle for a great meeting. They have $1,500 to raise before the first of July in order to secure the lot. They now have about $700. They have about exhausted their own ability and the liberality of their friends outside in the city of Tampa, and now they look longingly and pleadingly to their brethren elsewhere to assist them by such contributions as they can to purchase their lot. The zeal and self sacrifice with which these few Disciples in Tampa are working and giving, makes a strong appeal to their brethren elsewhere to come to their help. It would be a sad disappointment to them if they should fail in this enterprise. They must not be allowed to fail. Help these women. Address Mrs. Thomas M. Shackleford as above.

—John L. Brandt has closed his pastorate of four and a half years at Valparaiso, Ind. He was compelled to close his work there in May on account of the strain on his eyes, but he feels sure now that in a new field where he would not have to give so much time to study he would be able to resume work. Bro. Brandt could easily devote his whole time to lecturing, but he prefers the pastorate. His lecture engagements will last during the summer, but he will be ready for pastoral work by the first of September.

—A circular letter from Jacksonville, Fla , signed by the pastor of the Adams Street Christian Church, T. H. Blenus, stated that the pastor having been to Cincinnati and conferred with brethren there over the situation in Jacksonville, they have decided to change their location which was too near the location of the First Church. The circular says: "We have secured a full lot a number of blocks farther west in the city. This change, though at the loss of work already started, has met the hearty approbation of those consulted as well as the church, and we therefore now make a strong appeal for aid in establishing our work in this important part of our city. We are stricken, and terribly so, by the late conflagration, but we are alive to the work and only ask those in more favorable localities to help us on our feet again." The circular further states that "aid can be sent either through the Christian Standard, the Home Mission Board of Cincinnati, or directly to the pastor of the Adams Street Christian Church of Jacksonville, and it will be duly acknowledged." While we believe a union of our forces in Jacksonville would have been better, we are glad at least that we are not to have the unseemly spectacle of two Christian churches located within a block of each other. If the city of Jacksonville be rightly divided between the two churches, there is no doubt room enough and work enough for both. The brethren at large now have the facts before them and we trust they will be generous in assisting these stricken churches in getting once more on a working basis.

—J. J. Stevens, a brother of the Carondelet Christian Church of this city, is planning to publish a paper of a unique character to be known as "The Lost Friend." The purpose of the paper, as we gather it from the prospectus, is to make it a medium of communication between those who have lost the address and whereabouts of friends and these friends. The working of the scheme which he has in view involves the co-operation of those who are interested in such a paper with him. The prospectus states that "there are thousands of mothers in America at this hour who are sighing and sorrowing for knowledge of children whose absence they mourn as for the dead. There are likewise thousands of children who know not where mother is. Brothers there are in untold numbers, and sisters, too, whose wanderings have led to separations as absolute as the grave could make " The circular further states that "by the establishment of a great central bureau of information we furnish the remedy. In this one common center all inquiries will meet and the information will be given to interested parties. The establishment of this bureau and informing the millions of people of the fact, is a task of no small proportions. We propose to ask every person to donate one penny for this purpose, and we most earnestly request that you who are now reading this appeal consider that it is made to you individually. Send us a penny, postage stamp or some small contribution to help extend this information to others. For further particulars address the promoter, J. J. Stevens, 5800 Pennsylvania Ave., St. Louis."

—Clark Braden, of Cairo, Ill., was spending a few days in the city this week. He reports the church at Cairo as on the up grade. There will be a ministerial institute in that city beginning July 22.

—The receipts to the American Christian Missionary Society for the week ending June 15, 1901, show but a small increase over those of the corresponding week of last year—the gain being but $186 39. We ask the support of all our friends. There are 2,000 churches from which we expect to hear that have not yet sent in their offerings to this worthy cause of home missions. We plead with our churches to rally to the support of this great work. Send all money to Benjamin L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

—The Emancipator, official organ of the Illinois Anti-saloon League, will commence in the fall the publication, in installments, of the Illinois liquor laws with annotations and decisions of the higher courts. Any pastor in Illinois who is not a subscriber to the Emancipator and is not willing to pay the subscription price of 25c per year, will be entered upon the subscription list for one year free upon sending in a complete and accurate list of all the pastors in his town. Address Wm. H. Anderson, superintendent, and general attorney, Y. M. C. A. Building, Springfield, Ill.

—The annual convention of the first missionary district of Illinois met at Erie, Ill., June 12-14. Special addresses were given by J. Fred Jones and Miss Anna Hale, at the C. W. B. M. session, and W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, on "Our Plea and Our Field." The C. E. session was of especial interest. The C. W. B. M. session showed the good prospects for some of the new auxiliaries. Support was promised for the three missionary churches during the coming year. The Erie congregation was greatly benefited by the convention and the church through its pastor, Lewis P. Kopp, expresses its gratitude.

—The church at Worcester, Mass., welcomed their new pastor, J. M. Van Horn, and his family on the 13th inst. by a public reception at the church. The local papers give reports of the speeches made and of the luncheon served afterwards. It seems to have been a very happy occasion. Bro. Van Horn has closed a very happy and prosperous pastorate at Warren, O., and we are justified in predicting another equally prosperous one in this mother New England church. Bro. V. is one of the preachers who grow richer in thought and get a deeper hold of truth as they get older in age and experience.

—The preliminary announcement of the Kansas University Bible chair for the ensuing term has reached us. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions inaugurated this work in April last. Wallace C. Payne, the instructor, is an A. B. and A. M. of Bethany, a B. D. of Yale Divinity school and a graduate student of the University of Chicago, besides having had considerable experience as a pastor in Philadelphia and in New York City. The object of this Bible Chair work is said to be "to provide instruction of university grade in the Bible and about the Bible for university students and for any others who may wish to avail themselves of this instruction."

—In publishing the appeal of the First Christian Church at Jacksonville, of which J. T. Boone is pastor, we omitted the endorsement of this appeal which was printed upon the back and which escaped the notice of the printer. This endorsement reads: "Thoroughly conversant with the situation in Jacksonville, we give the above appeal our unqualified endorsement. Jacksonville is the metropolis of Florida, and the whole brotherhood is interested in a strong organization and a splendid building." This is signed by R. T. Walker, M. D., President Florida Christian Convention; H. C. Groves, treasurer; W. E. Daugherty, evangelist; G. D. Jackson, W. H. Coleman, corresponding secretary.

—The Ministerial Institute of Oklahoma met in Kingfisher June 6-8.

—The C. W. B. M. auxiliaries of Armington, Eminence and Bethel, Ill., held an all-day meeting with basket dinner at the latter place June 9. It is reported as a highly interesting and successful meeting. A collection of $9 was taken for state work.

—A prospectus has been issued of the Christian Home to be erected at Hot Springs, Ark., the "Carlsbad of America," for the accommodation of health seekers of all churches. Our readers are already acquainted with this worthy plan. The prospectus giving further information may be obtained by addressing T. Nelson Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

—The Globe-Democrat announces an old fashioned religious debate of six days and nights at Minier, Ill., between Victor W. Dorris, Disciple, Georgetown, Ky., and Rev. H. Clay Yates, Cumberland Presbyterian, of Stanford, Ill. The propositions embrace identity of Old and New Testament churches, beginning of the church and baptism, action and design.

—A correspondent of one of the daily papers waxes warm in his defense of the late Professor Herron's recent marriage episode, and cannot understand why all this hue and cry should be raised about a little thing of that kind. "Newport registers something over forty divorces the present week." That of course ought to lend credit to the divorce habit. But the correspondent adds, "If Dr. Herron had been a common debauchee instead of a high minded social reformer, no one would have had a word to say." Perhaps not. How cruel to hold a "high minded social reformer" to a higher standard of morality than the "debauchee"! If the daily paper wishes to vindicate its claim to be an ethical agency, the less of this kind of writing it furnishes the more consistent will its claim be.

—At the St. Louis ministers' meeting last Monday, the preachers stated their plans for the summer. L. B. Coggins will go to North Carolina in August. W. A. Malone will take a month of vacation at some point not yet determined. O. A. Bartholomew does not believe in vacations, and would rather stick close to his wife's cooking than enjoy the best of mountain air or ocean breezes. J. F. Quissenberry says his salary and health are both poor; he will stay at home. J. H. Garrison leaves for Macatawa Park on Wednesday of this week. E. T. McFarland will spend August in northwest Missouri. J. N. Crutcher will take his vacation in fractions on a farm near Kansas City. F. G. Tyrrell and family will take a trip to California, July 1 to Sept. 15, the outward journey being made under the auspices of the superintendent of reading rooms of the Santa Fe railroad, in which some lectures will be given. He will hold a temperance campaign of a week or two in Humboldt county, Cal., will visit his parents, and will take a camping trip in southern Oregon. G. A. Hoffmann expects to spend a few days in Buffalo. H. F. Davis will do business as usual, visiting county and district meetings. John Burns will be in the city, at the service of anybody who needs him.

Difficult Digestion

That is dyspepsia.
It makes life miserable.
Its sufferers eat not because they want — but because they must.
They know they are irritable and fret but they cannot be otherwise.
They complain of a bad taste in the mouth, a tenderness at the pit of the stomach, an uneasy feeling of puffy fulness, headache, heartburn and what not.
The effectual remedy, proved by permanent cures of thousands of severe cases, is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

HOOD'S PILLS are the best cathartic.

—Referring to a remark in our "Questions and Answers" department of last week, our esteemed brother, Joseph Lowe, of Bakersfield, Cal., writes, expressing his dissent from this statement: "It is strange—this longing for something infallible that will dispense with the use of our reason and with the necessity of research and investigation." Commenting upon this statement as if the words we have placed in italics were not there, Bro. Lowe thinks that "this longing for infallibility in matters that involve the most sacred and important issues of human life" is quite reasonable. So it is and God has offered it to us, but not in any way that "dispenses with the use of our reason," etc. He also misunderstands our essayist, Mr. Williams, in supposing that he denies the infallibility of the Bible as a guide in matters of faith and duty. That is a very different proposition from that which he claims could not be proved. Our friendly critic adds: "I confess your language relative to the infallibility touching the Christian's hope of immortality threw a long, dark shadow across the bright horizon of Christian faith." Why our insistence upon the Bible's infallibility relative to the soul's immortality and all matters of faith should throw a shadow on anybody's faith, we cannot imagine. If our brother meant to say fallibility where he has written infallibility, then, we repeat, he has utterly misunderstood out statements and should read them again.

Letter from Jeu Hawk.

MACAN, CHINA, May 9, 1901.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I am sorry I have not been able to write to you more frequently and let your readers know where we are and what we are doing. I have been in a wandering condition since our arrival in China and have settled down in this city. I hope from now on I may be able to write to you oftener. I have rented a three-story building here for $10 a month and expect to practice medicine here, at least temporarily. My first intention was to stay in Hong Kong, not only to practice but also to open a mission work there and at the same time see to our returning Chinese Christian brethren from America and Australia. It is a great disappointment to me that I can not carry out my original plans. Since our arrival we have found that the rent and current expenses in Hong Kong are greater than we first anticipated, and consequently we are compelled to change our course to come here. Our Chinese Christian brethren in Portland wrote urging me to stay in Hong Kong and open a mission there. I would like to comply with their wish if I only had the means to do so. But we did not come here with much means so we have been compelled to stay in the country and while there we did the best we knew how to advance the kingdom of God. Our children, it seems to us, are more suited for the service than both my wife and myself. The ladies asked them to sing Chinese songs for them both in English and Chinese and they sang for them and Mrs. Jeu has talked to them about Christ and his love in their homes. Our stay in the country so far has not resulted in any visible good for the Master's vineyard. With my medical aid I have talked to thousands of them about Christ and their duty to him. It is of no use for anyone who has graduated from abroad to try to practice medicine n the country; he can not expect to make a good living. People are too poor to pay even for the cost of the medicine, to say nothing about his services. I have treated hundreds of cases since our stay in the country and I have not been able to get the cost of the medicine back. But one thing is sure, I believe a medical missionary can accomplish a great good for the Master in China, if he can devote his whole service to the cause of Christ. What little medicine I brought here is now almost exhausted. I sent to Portland a couple of months ago for more medicine and asked Bro. Yuen Yu to advance the money. I got the medicine the other day and it cost me $21.75 in gold, so it will be over $45 in Mexican. I will give this amount to his family when I can. I have opened my office here for nearly four days and have not treated a case yet. I expect to use my office room for the preaching of the gospel as well as for treating cases. We are not allowed to preach the gospel openly here for it is a Catholic city and about one-eighth of the population are members of the Roman Catholic church and they would not allow any place open for the preaching of the gospel by Protestant missionaries within the city limits. It is a shame to see that a city belonging to a nation supposed to be Christian will yet not allow others to preach Christ openly. I am not allowed to practice medicine either in Hong Kong or here by law, but I have opened an office here and wait for the consequences. I still live in hope that some day some rich brethren or sisters in America may open a work in Hong Kong for the purpose of getting back the brethren that we have converted in America and at the same time laying the foundation for the preaching of the primitive gospel in southern China. I would like to give my whole life for the medical missionary work if some one would help me. May God give me the strength to do all I can while I have the opportunity. In the meantime we will remain here and see what we can do. If we should find that it is a waste of time and energy for us to stay in Macan we may conclude to go back to America. But I am afraid your Christian country will not permit us to enter again; at least that is what I was told by the collector of customs at the port of Portland just before I left America. Bro. J. F. Ghormley, pastor of the First Christian Church of Portland, and I went to see the collector and we were told that there is no provision made in the treaty between China and the United States of America for the landing of Christian Chinese missionaries in America; therefore I being a Christian missionary can not be landed there. All I want to say in this connection is that since Christian America would not permit Chinese Christian missionaries to go to her shore, I do not see why the American people should kick when China and her people do likewise. But, of course, it is not for China to say one way or the other. Before closing for this time I want to mention the name of Sister Eliza Skinner, of Spencer, Ia., who sent me $5 on New York draft for my medical work and I thank her very much for the help. I may have trouble in getting the money, for it was not sent on foreign exchange. May God bless you in your work. We are all well at this writing.

My address is still Hong Kong, care of Yu Ye, 192 Wing Locke St.

Yours in Christ,

JEU HAWK.

Jamaica's Missionary Jubilee.

Before the close of the '70's, began my introduction to Jamaica and the missionaries of the Woman's Board of Missions toiling here. I can recall that the Christian Monitor published word that Jennie Laughlin had been sent; and I prayed for her, a Jamaica missionary, in an auxiliary meeting in Stow, O., while my father was pastor of that dear old country church. Next Monday it will be 21 years since he passed from labor to reward, leaving me the precious example of devoted interest in all the enterprises of Christ's followers to make him known to every creature.

Under God's blessing, as the years passed, my interest and acquaintance in auxiliary, district and state C. W. B. M. work grew. The missionaries were often mentioned and prayed for by mother and me in our little home. We took the Missionary Tidings from its start and I had exchanged a number of letters with the beloved corresponding secretary, Mrs Sarah E. Shortridge, before my first meeting her in the national convention held in Cleveland in 1885. She aided my growing interest. I shall ever cherish her giving as one reason for choosing me for assistant corresponding secretary in 1888, "Lois loves the missionaries." No wonder, under my home influence and hers.

With such a prelude to my eleven years of work in the C. W. B. M. office in Indianapolis, when I was in constant heart to heart relations to our noble missionaries, I can count twenty-three years of loving labor and prayers with and for God's people in Jamaica, before I had the slightest idea that he was saying to me: "This is thy path."

Beginning with seeing Bro. C. E. Randall in Sister Shortridge's home, on his first visit to the states in 1887, I have been blessed with interviews with numbers of self denying men and women who have labored in this field as Christians only.

To those inquiring of me, since my arrival with my husband in Kingston, Nov. 30, 1900: "Don't you find things here in our mission very different from what they seemed to you in Indianapolis?" I must say, "No," for at least two-thirds of my reply. So long had I thought about, and esteemed highly for their works' sake in the Lord, even those missionaries whom I had not met, that coming into their midst seemed, as it really was, coming into my home. The pictures of people, places and buildings, together with many descriptive talks and articles, had made even the church membership and chapels and mission homes familiar to me in a way that causes me to feel like meeting old friends and beholding anticipated scenery, as I go among them. Before coming I had known the tropical vegetation would look odd, as also the costumes and many of the people.

Six months of "at home" on these Liguanea Plains, rising northeast of Kingston—even though I have enjoyed visits in four other mission homes and attended services in eleven of our stations—do not equip me to tell everything about our Jamaica mission and solve the presented problems. This time is just continuing the acquaintance and increasing the love begun near a quarter of a century ago.

W. H. Williams, the first missionary of the Christian Woman's Board, landed in Jamaica February 5, 1876. The present corps of laborers decided to observe the silver anniversary of the C. W. B. M. Jamaica work with appropriate services in the churches, now numbering twenty-one. The members were urged to bring offerings to a "Silver Anniversary and Twentieth Century Fund," to be used in strengthening the work on this island. These meetings was appointed on various days in January, February and March, to enable the scant force of missionaries to exchange aid among the districts and have several speakers on each program. The first of them were held by Bro. A. W. Meredith, in Providence district, January 7-10. As I had not yet been in saddle, I could participate in only those at Providence and Mamby Vale, where the chapels can be reached in our "trap." Mr. Mac Leod went to the other two stations, Flint River and Chesterfield. Bro. Randall observed the anniversary in his Kingston church on the exact date, February 5, 1901, and at his request both Mr. Mac Leod and I spoke then and at Torrington the following evening. In our own, King's Gate, district these services were held on the second, third and fourth Lord's days in February, and I did my first horseback journeying to climb to the hill stations, New Bethel and Carmel. There is a tradition of Mrs. W. H. Williams' having gone up to New Bethel, and that was the only sister missionary's visit up the hill-paths in this district. Those churches seemed very glad of my part in their celebrations.

The first quarter-century of C. W. B. M. missionary work in Jamaica comprises a wealth of self denying service for Christ that any auxiliary may well be grateful to Almighty God for allowing it a share in sustaining! I humbly rejoice that he timed my coming here so I could at this season join his people in this reviewing of "what God hath wrought." Never did more attentive, appreciative audiences greet me than in these silver anniversary services. In each of the seven I was called on to address, I was received as a representative to present in person the love of the whole C. W. B. M. host for its first adopted child. You should have seen the eagerness with which they listened as I told them of having heard prayers in the C. W. B. M. office, in national, state and district conventions, at family altars and in auxiliary, mission band and Junior C. E. meetings in many states, offered for them here in Jamaica! Brothers, sisters, boys, girls, throughout our church ranks in the United States, I have committed you to that loving service! These people, so needy in their efforts to struggle into the light and live for Christ, are cheered by your care about them. They are depending on your praying for them. Look into their faces with me and always bear them on your hearts' petitions to him who is able to save unto the uttermost! "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

Chicago Letter.

John Alexander Dowie, head of "Zion" and divine "healer" has recently called down upon him the anathemas of the press and general public. A Mrs. Judd, one of his followers, was allowed to die, without a medical attendant, a most excruciating death. The advertisement Mr. Dowie received from the affair has helped to swell his already large audiences. In order to continue his unparalleled influence over his disciples he made the announcement last Sunday that he had received a revelation that he was "Elijah," and that he was to subjugate all governments to a theocracy of God, with himself as the head upon earth.

Does the world progress in religious thought? Yes! Are we not a great and modern people? Does the world progress in religious thought? No! For are not these the days of Dowieism, Christian Science, theosophy and rationalism? Which is the stream and which are the surface eddyings?

It is known already to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that Dr. Gilbert has resigned the chair of New Testament Interpretation in Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational). His last book, "The First Interpreters of Jesus," contained teachings which the trustees considered unsound. The book is a calm, dispassionate, scholarly inductive study of the teachings of the New Testament with regard to our Savior. He fails to find that they accentuated or held the doctrine of the deity of Christ.

The commendable feature of the separation was the kindly spirit that characterized both Prof. Gilbert and the trustees. Prof. Gilbert did not censure the management for wishing their views to be taught, but refused to compromise his conscience. On the other hand the trustees complimented the professor for his ability and spirit and granted him a half year's salary.

Dr. Stires, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, has been called to St. Thomas' Church, New York, and has accepted. Before leaving Chicago he is making an effort to endow Grace Church to the amount of $400,000. His plan is to get a number of men to carry that amount of life insurance, making the church the beneficiary. He has taken a policy of $100,000 in favor of the church. He expects others to meet the annual payments. Grace Church is practically a downtown church and consequently if it continues to be the force it has been for many years, its only hope lies in the direction of an endowment.

A new denomination has come to be in the last week, the People's Church of America. It has just been incorporated under the laws of Illinois. Dr. Thomas is the chief promoter. Its plea will be for liberality and freedom of expression. Its method of propaganda will be to use the theatres of the large cities for its gatherings.

George F. Hall has engaged the Temple of Music for Sunday services during the ensuing church year beginning Dec. 1st. This auditorium is on the north side, one block from the Moody Church. It is the intention of Bro. Hall to hold two preaching services and one Sunday-school and to appeal to all classes on a broad gospel platform.

Errett Gates is succeeding beyond expectation in securing endowment for the Disciples' Divinity House.

The Monroe Street and Austin churches have recently held rummage sales. Each did well.

The C. W. B. M. quarterly convention was held at the Central Church, June 6. There were 142 ladies present. Mrs. Hudson was elected president; Mrs. Clark, vice-president, and Mrs. Linney, secretary.

Oklahoma Letter.

We are now in the midst of one of the finest wheat harvests in the history of the territory. The wheat is very fine. The corn crop looks well, exceedingly well. The oats crop will be short. We will have fruit of all kinds in great abundance. One fruit grower, west of Guthrie a few miles, has shipped several carloads of cherries. The peach crop will be great. I have a fine peach tree within a few feet of my study window where I am now writing, whose fruit will be ripe in a few days. Right by the side of this tree is another whose fruit will be ripe in the fall, or not less than five months from the time the first ripens. Then we have other trees ripening all the time between. Talk about "California fruit," we put Oklahoma fruit against the world for fine flavor and fine variety.

I recently attended the Eleventh Annual Territorial Christian Endeavor Convention at El Reno, Okla. This was pronounced the best convention in the history of Endeavor work in the territory. There were not less than 200 in attendance. Eleven of the addresses as announced in the program were by "our" people. Among the names on the program are the following: M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Tex., W. A. Humphrey, S. D. Dutcher, Lawrence Williams, W. B. Morris, J. T. Ogle and others. For some reason Bro. Davis could not come, to the great regret of all. Our people lead in Endeavor work in Oklahoma.

Bro. J. M. Monroe is pastor of the Christian Church in El Reno and a fine work he is doing. He is one of the best and strongest men in the brotherhood.

S. D. Dutcher is booming things at Oklahoma City for a new church. They expect to build the best church in Oklahoma. By the way, Bro. Dutcher delivered the greatest address of the Endeavor convention at El Reno.

Last week the Ministerial Institute of the Christian Church of Oklahoma convened at Kingfisher. This was the third session of the institute, and was pronounced the best by those who had attended all. Several very fine subjects were thoroughly discussed. About 25 ministers were present.

The last half day was given to a discussion upon the opening of the new lands as it relates to the work of the Christian Church. It is the purpose of the territorial board of missions to enter in and systematically possess the land for primitive Christianity, so far as possible. The board will have a meeting in the near future to complete plans for such work. I fully believe that Oklahoma is the ripest and best mission field on the globe.

Guthrie work is prosperous. We had our Children's Day concert last evening, which was a grand success. We more than raised our apportionment which was $25.

Next Sunday, I expect to give my first annual report of work to the Guthrie church.

All friends of decency, good government and a high type of citizenship, irrespective of party, are proud of our new governor, William M. Jenkins. All wines were banished from the inaugural banquet, and Gov. and Mrs. Jenkins did not attend the inaugural ball, although it had been previously announced that they would lead the "Grand March." Gov. and Mrs. Jenkins have never been upon a ball room floor. This is but in line with Oklahoma progress.

The Law

Of health has no uniformed guardians of its peace. If it had there would be arrests innumerable in every restaurant every day of the year. Both in the quantity and quality of the food they eat and in the manner of its consumption men and women sin each day against the laws of health. Those who will not heed Nature's warnings cannot escape her punishments, and dyspepsia or stomach "trouble" is the invariable penalty of careless eating.

There is no other medicine for diseases of the stomach and allied organs of digestion and nutrition which can compare with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures these diseases perfectly and permanently, and enables the building up of the whole body into vigorous health.

"I took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for stomach trouble," writes Clarence Carnes, Esq., of Taylorstown, Loudoun Co., Va. "It did me so much good that I didn't take any more. I can eat most anything now. I am so well pleased with it I hardly know how to thank you for your kind information. I tried a whole lot of things before I wrote to you. There was a gentleman told me about your medicine, how it had cured his wife. I thought I would try a bottle of it. I am glad I did, for I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

Kentucky University Commencement.

The forty second commencement of Kentucky University which took place Thursday, June 13, closed a notable session of this historic institution. More than eleven hundred students have been enrolled during the session, the number considerably in excess of that of any former year, and fully attesting the executive ability of Alexander R. Milligan, the acting president, since the resignation of President Cave in February, 1900. Notwithstanding his recognized and appreciated success, President Milligan declined to continue in the presidency beyond the close of the present session.

This year there were twenty graduates from the College of Liberal Arts, three of whom are young ladies. It is interesting to note that eleven of the graduates—more than one-half of the whole number—were honor students, that is, the average of their scholarship was above ninety. The young ladies were all honor students.

The first honor in the classical course was won by G. H. C. Stoney, of Dublin, Ireland, with a grade of 95.79. The second honor in the classical course was won by Miss Edna M. Ransler, of Kentucky, with a grade of 95.65. The first honor in the literary course was won by Miss Columbia B. Davis, of Kentucky, with a grade of 93 33. The first honor in the scientific course was won by Miss Alice T. Karr, of Kentucky, with a grade of 92.74. The honor of delivering the class address was won by W. E. Freeman (classical course), of Kentucky, with a grade of 93.67. The two members of the class standing next highest among the honor students were both of the classical course: Ralph Gebbie, of New Zealand, grade 93.33, and R. W. Wallace, of Kentucky, grade 91.48. All those named made addresses on commencement day, and it is not flattery to say that each gave further proof of superior ability and culture.

There was great and universal rejoicing when it was officially announced that Burris A. Jenkins had accepted the presidency of Kentucky University, to which he had been unanimously elected by the board of curators. He is regarded as the ideal man for the presidency, and it is confidently believed that with his coming the institution will enter upon a new era of still greater prosperity.

During the week the Society of Alumni held two meetings, both of which were full of enthusiasm and hopefulness. Plans were adopted which it is believed will increase the number of students and also secure a large addition to the endowment of the university.

By a unanimous and hearty vote the society sent to President Jenkins the following telegram: "We welcome you and congratulate ourselves on your acceptance of the presidency of Kentucky University."

The College of the Bible of Kentucky University.

The College of the Bible of Kentucky University has just closed one of the most prosperous years of its long and honorable history.

On Tuesday, June 11, with appropriate and interesting exercises a class of twenty-three young men were graduated and sent out to augment the already large number of alumni of the college.

As indicating the wide field from which the college draws her students, it is interesting to note that this year's graduating class has representatives from Australia, New Zealand, Ireland, Scotland, Prince Edward Island, Oklahoma, Missouri, Ohio, Kentucky, North Carolina and Mississippi.

Six members of the class were graduated in the classical course and seventeen in the English course.

The addresses on commencement day were delivered by Mr. G. H. C. Stoney, of Dublin, reland, representing the classical graduates, Mr. Gilbert Jones, of Kentucky, representing the English graduates, and Mr. N. H. Brooks, of Kentucky, as valedictorian. Each address was excellent in both thought and delivery, giving full proof of the young men's talent and training. The average scholarship of the class is high and several members have attained grades of superior merit.

An interesting event of the commencement exercises was the unveiling by President McGarvey of a large and very lifelike portrait of the late president, Robert Graham, the work and gift of an alumnus of the college.

A most happy and hopeful event was the announcement that the financial agent, M. D. Clubb, had already increased the endowment fund $27,000, and that he confidently expects to make the sum $50,000 before the close of the year. Nelson Hamon, of Georgetown, Ky., who gave $10,000 of the above sum, was introduced to the audience and given an ovation as sincere as it was enthusiastic.

Honolulu Letter.

The American people are watching with interest their new possessions in the southern seas and they are not only watching but they are eager to learn the conditions that prevail in some of them at least, if the large number of letters of inquiry that come to me are any indication. The church in Honolulu is very much interested in a visit to America that will be made by Bro. Walter C. Werdon, one of our elders. He goes on business, yet I can frankly say that a business trip with him does not mean what it does to the average man. Bro. Werdon would feel that any trip was a failure if he did not do some business for the King. I wish we might say that the King's business was first with all business men. He is an old resident of Hawaii and speaks the Hawaiian language fluently. He is well informed on all the religious, social and business conditions of the islands. While Bro. Werdon is not a preacher or a platform orator in the strictest sense of the word, yet he is an entertaining and helpful speaker.

It is his intention to give a limited number of addresses on Hawaii while in the east. They will be illustrated by the finest stereopticon views of Hawaii that can be procured. He has between 400 and 500 such views. He goes to the east with the commendation of the Chamber of Commerce and of course with the prayers and best wishes of our people in the territory. The churches of the east will secure a rare treat if you can arrange with Bro. Werdon to visit you and give this illustrated lecture concerning this historic mission field.

This messenger from Hawaii is one who not only talks about the Lord's work, but he is also a generous giver to the cause. There is just being completed in that part of Honolulu known as Kewalo, a beautiful little chapel to be known as the Sloan mission, which has been made possible by his generosity. The work in Honolulu is in a hopeful condition. It can no longer be called an experiment in any sense. We are pushing our stakes out further from day to day. We do not decrease but we increase. We are just now rejoicing over the fact that Chas. Reign Scoville has promised to visit this far-away corner of America before many months. We believe his coming will mean added victory for our cause.

My last word in this letter concerning Bro. Werdon's visit is this—write him at once. He will be in America when you read this letter. You can address him at Cleveland, O., care of Hon. C. B. Lockwood, Water St. His visit will be a blessing to you and to the cause of Christ at home and in this far-away territory.

Texas Letter.

The Waco Convention.

Our State Missionary Convention met this year in Waco. Unfortunately for me I was called away from it to attend the funeral of one of our members, and hence missed most of it. But I have seen and heard enough to know that it was good and that the outlook for the work is encouraging.

The hospitality of the Waco church was up to its standard and the delegates were delighted. But we were a little surprised to have a formal address of welcome. That used to be the regular rule, but I thought it had been dispensed with. We all felt just as welcome before the address as after it, and the church knew just as well before the response as after it that we were grateful. This is why I call it 'formal." But really time is too valuable, and there is too much to do to listen to even the two good addresses on this occasion.

The attendance was general and numbered about 350 delegates. When it is remembered that many of these had to travel from 300 to 500 miles or more, this speaks well for Texas mission work.

Judge Sherrill's address as president was a masterly speech, broad in its generalizations, beautiful in diction, strong in logic and full of encouragement to all. There were many other fine speeches, but for want of space I will not speak of them in detail.

One year ago I spoke of the report of B. B. Sanders as corresponding secretary, and characterized it as one of the best ever heard in any convention. And I can do the same thing again this year. Let me give it to you, and you will, I am sure, agree with me: Days, 365; sermons, 419; places visited, 53; meetings, 14; additions, 326; churches organized, 2; churches reorganized, 2; Sunday-schools organized, 1; Ladies' Aid, 1; preachers located, 14; letters written, 2,880; articles for the papers, 25; cash in field, $1,303.95; pledges taken in the field, $733.25; making a total of $2,037.20, money raised for other purposes, $3,496.85, making a grand total of $5,534.05.

Before you express your opinion on this report, let me remind you that in addition to the work represented by these figures, Bro. Sanders, as corresponding secretary, had the oversight of fifteen other men working in various parts of this immense state. Now what do you think of it? Is it not splendid?

The summary of work by all our workers, seven evangelists and nine missionary pastors, is as follows: Days, 3,915; sermons, 2,235; places visited and revisited, 379; meetings, 90; baptisms, 549; letter and reclaimed, 614; otherwise, 254; making a total of 1,417 additions; churches organized, 37; re-organized. 4; Sunday-schools organized, 40; Endeavor societies organized, 17; aid societies, 7; C. W. B. M.'s, 10; houses built, 4; dedicated, 2; churches aided, 90; preachers located, 16; cash and pledges in the field, $5,868 50; to which we add the amount raised at the last convention and find a total of $8,457.50.

Strong men from abroad were numerous and appreciated. They were C. C. Smith, A. McLean, A. M. Harvuot and George Darsie. The work of our other societies did not suffer in their hands.

T. E. Shirley, financial agent for Add-Ran University, made an encouraging report, and it now seems certain that this long and heroic struggle is to be crowned with victory.

The C. W. B. M. work was good, as usual, though I cannot give the figures and facts regarding it. The officers for the coming year are Miss Grace Carlton, Bonham, president; Mrs. Clara Walden, Ft. Worth, press superintendent and corresponding secretary; Miss Lula Reed, superintendent of young people's work; Miss Lula Fort, treasurer.

A committee was appointed to establish an orphans' home. The Juliette A. Fowler bequest for this purpose, now worth about $6,000, with a legacy of about $4,000, to be received later, it is to be hoped will prove the nucleus of the much needed institution. The property is in this city.

The officers of the convention are Judge D. P. Singleton, Ennis, president; T. E. Shirley, Melissa, vice-president; Miss Leta Jordan, Henrietta, secretary; B. B. Sanders, corresponding secretary. The executive board: Judge Anson Rainey, G. D. Smith, G. A. Faris, M. M. Davis, of Dallas, and C. W. Gibson, of Waxahachie.

The next convention is to be held in Dallas, the time to be fixed by the executive board.

M. M. DAVIS.

Minnesota Letter.

J. K. Shellenberger, our state secretary, held a meeting at Antelope Hills. There were seven additions. The secretary reports that J. E. Hood, the pastor at Antelope Hills, is doing a most worthy work.

Bro. Shellenberger is now in a meeting with the Central Church in St. Paul, with prospects for good results.

The First Church at St. Paul is talking a new building. They need it badly and, once built and paid for, the cause will prosper in that city under the strong ministry of A. D. Harmon.

C. L. Sine, of Hiram College, is preaching for the Duluth Church.

Simpson Ely is holding a meeting at Lewisville, about 40 miles southwest of this city. He began May 26, and up to June 13 has had 25 additions. It is a small place and the church building will not hold over 150 people. So, for this state, the results are very good indeed. One day last week a thunderstorm passed over the village and lightning struck the church, damaging it about $250. The tower was shivered but the meeting was not stopped even an evening. The pastor of the Lewisville church is Leslie Wolfe. He also preaches for the church at Willow Creek, about 10 miles distant. Bro. Wolfe is doing a good work. He is a Eureka boy who has not yet completed his education. He is so endearing himself to his people that they hope to keep him indefinitely.

Pastor J. H. Golden, of Ronneby, recently closed a meeting with eight additions.

Our state convention will be held at Austin and not in this city as stated some time ago. It occurs in August—the exact date I do not now recall. The ministerial association will precede the convention with a brief session, and it is hoped that all the preaching brethren will make it a point to be there. The program will be good and will be duly announced in these columns.

Evangelistic.

ARKANSAS.

Fort Smith, June 12.—The second Lord's day in May I dedicated a new church at Poteau, I. T., 30 miles south of this place. The building is well planned and neatly finished and entirely paid for. This is a field I have been caring for in addition to my regular work at Fort Smith. The work at Poteau and other growing towns in the Indian Territory is promising.—E. T. EDMONDS.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, June 10.—Have been in a meeting here more than four weeks. Additions at almost every service.—B. B. BURTON.

IDAHO.

Genesee, June 1.—The church here dedicated its new and commodious building last Lord's day providing for all indebtedness. The church now numbers 39 members. Its building and property is worth about $1,500. This has all been accomplished in the last three months. They need some live, energetic, consecrated preacher to lead them on.—L. F. STEPHENS, evangelist.

ILLINOIS.

Cameron, June 10.—One addition by baptism yesterday morning. Children's day exercises last night and a good collection for missions. G. E. Sheerer, pastor at Alexis, Ill., was with us Sunday morning.—Q. D. MAPLE.

Gibson City, June 11.—One confession at Center Ridge last Lord's day. Collection on Children's day for foreign missions $23.40.—P. F. YORK.

Pine Creek, June 10.—Children's day was observed both here and at Mt. Morris. Pine Creek Sunday-school raised $17 and Mt. Morris $40. These churches are both enjoying prosperity. Pine Creek recently sent $30 for district work and Mt. Morris $15 for the same.—D. F. SEYSTER, pastor.

Sullivan, June 11.—Six added here since last report.—EDWIN E. CURRY.

Watseka, June 10.—Preached the baccalaureate sermon to our High School graduates last evening. Z. T. Sweeney will deliver the commencement address next Friday night. The local Modern Woodmen lodge will attend our services next Sunday morning in a body and in the evening the S. S. will render their well prepared program and take the offering for foreign missions.—B. S. FERRALL.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, June 13.—In a meeting of one month's duration, held at the Morris St. Church this city there were 65 additions, 44 by baptism and 21 by relation. The meeting strengthened every part of the church work, especially the Endeavor Society, as 26 new members were received into it at one meeting. The meeting began with an offering for home missions and shortly after its close, Children's Day was observed. Carl Van Winkle led the singing and I did the preaching. He and I are now in a meeting with the Olive Branch Church, this city. Since Jan. 1, there have been 91 additions to the Morris St. Church, and many more are almost persuaded.—B. L. ALLEN.

Mishawaka, June 10.—The congregation here at a recent business meeting voted to retain their present minister. During our stay here the mortgaged indebtedness on the property has been reduced from $3,000 to $1,250, and the last named amount is fully provided for and we hope to have a jubilee service and burn our last mortgage in a short time. Meantime the property has been much improved, and despite heavy losses sustained, the business of the congregation is in good condition. We preached the baccalaureate and the G. A. R. memorial sermons and will give the I. O. O. F. memorial address June 23. Our mission points are prospering.—W. W. DENHAM.

Shoals, June 11.—The Christian Church here held its first Children's Day exercise and offering June 9, resulting in collection of $12. This was the first attempt at anything of the kind here and under the management of our efficient pastor, A. W. Gehres, and was successful beyond expectations. Churches refusing to take part in this work are losing the benefit of one of the best building elements of the church. Bro. Gehres has been with us but four weeks, but the forward move under his pastorate is very perceptible.—J. B. MARSHALL.

Terre Haute.—We are beginning a splendid meeting in the Armory of this city with Q. E. Sellers pastor of Central Church. My wife and I intend to enter the general evangelistic field and are ready to assist pastors who want song leaders and personal workers. September and October already engaged. Write at once for terms, etc.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Wabash, June 11.—After the dedication at Coyle, Okla., I preached a few sermons, the result was that four penitent believers confessed Christ. Bro. John T. Owens, a good preacher, lives at Coyle and is doing good work for the Master.—L. L. CARPENTER.

IOWA.

Seymour, June 13.—Three baptisms at Braddyville, Ia., on June 2. The church at Clearmont, Mo., observed Children's day. Collection $7.34.—W. E. JONES.

KANSAS.

Kansas City, June 13.—Closed our meeting at Hume, Mo., with 12 of the best young men and women in the town added, six young men and six young women, all by confession and baptism except one.—ELMER T. DAVIS.

Lakin.—Fourteen added since last report. E. M. Carr did some good preaching for us last week and the week before in a school house near us.—R. H. TANKSLY.

Leavenworth, June 11—One addition by confession last Sunday.—S. W. NAY.

Mt. Hope, June 10.—One confession and baptism at regular services at Garden Plains yesterday.—A. L. MARTIN, pastor.

Stafford, June 12.—I go this week to take charge of the work at Coffeyville, Kan. One confession lately at Conway Springs.—ELLIS PURLEE.

MINNESOTA.

Canby, June 13.—J. K. Shellenberger recently closed a good meeting with the Antelope Hills church. Circumstances were adverse but the meeting was a success. Five baptisms, one from Baptists, and one more candidate for baptism. The largest fruits are yet to come.—J. ENZOR HOOD, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Brookfield, June 10.—The special effort by the Brookfield congregation for foreign missions resulted in an offering of $23.77. Will make special effort to raise if possible a like amount for home mission work. Twenty-three added since coming here. Have painted and papered house of worship. Will build some extra rooms soon. Our booklets are about completed, receipts devoted to church work.—R. E. L. PRUNTY.

Lone Jack, June 6.—One addition here last Lord's day. This makes five added to the church since I commenced work here last January. We are clear of debt and I must commend the promptness of the brethren in meeting all their financial obligations with me.—R. A. BLALOCK.

Quitman.—The children rendered their program on Sunday night, June 9. House a thing of beauty. Boys and girls did honor to themselves and the occasion. Free will offering for foreign missions $10. — J. H. COFFEY.

St. Louis, June 17.—The following additions were reported at the ministers' meeting this morning: Central, two by letter; West End, one by letter. W. D. Pittman exchanged pulpits in the evening with O. A. Bartholomew. Fourth, dedication of the enlarged church, June 23, by Z. T. Sweeney, followed by a series of tent meetings. Beulah, eight additions in the last two weeks. Fifth, one baptism, the church cleared of a floating indebtedness of long standing and money ahead for the summer's expenses Ellendale, three additions and a floating indebtedness cleared. Carondelet, one baptism under preaching of G. K. Berry, and a call extended to Gilbert E. Ireland to become pastor.

Webb City, June 14.—Our meeting here closes to-night. We have had a splendid meeting. Rev. E. M. Barney did the preaching. After resting a few days at home, I will return to Oklahoma for a short time, and will visit Guthrie where I was in a meeting with J. T. Ogle. The church was in very bad shape when he took up the work, but every department has been stimulated into active service.—C. E. MILLARD, singing evangelist.

NEBRASKA.

Burwell, June 10.—Our meeting still continues in interest; 22 to date; 19 the last week. All departments of the church are taking on new life. We continue.—J. S. BEEM, evangelist.

Chadron, June 14.—The meeting at Chadron closed last Sunday evening. We had fair audiences. We had no additions, but hope our short meeting there will result in much good by way of encouragement and exhortation to love and good works for the Master. We are now at Gordon for a short meeting, have had two services with two confessions and baptisms last night.—R. A. GIVENS.

Omaha, June 11.—Institute starts off splendidly. Sumner T. Martin, pastor. Scoville will be here in the fall for a big meeting. Just closed fine institute at South Omaha. They raised $1,200 Sunday in cash and pledges towards new lot and house.—W. H. WAGGONER.

OHIO.

Brilliant.—Children's day was observed Lord's day evening, June 9th. The Children's day exercises were a success. The church was filled and the program was rendered in a pleasing manner. The "Gospel Call" has succeeded the Hymn and Tune Book and is greatly appreciated.—WILLIAM STIFF, minister.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Chandler, June 10.—Two additions at Valley View Annex since last report. Chandler and our three mission points have all observed Children's Day. Have had the pleasure recently of attending our territorial C. E. convention at El Reno, and the Ministerial Institute at Kingfisher. Both were profitable and hopeful gatherings.—A. M. HARRAL.

Oklahoma City, June 10.—Three additions at regular services yesterday. A mission was organized at Capitol Hill last week and they will proceed to build a chapel at once.—S. D. DUTCHER.

Perkins, June 11.—On last Saturday I baptized two ladies in the Cimmarrone River at Perkins and on Sunday two more were baptized in the river near Olivet. Our people are working in Oklahoma.—J. W. GARNER.

Perry, June 11.—Our first work as C. W. B. M. evangelist of Oklahoma was done at Lawn View, where we revived a work that was about dead, raised the money to pay a preacher and secured the services of Bro. R. L. Morton. He is ready for the work. From that point we came to Pawnee to the help of a discouraged people. They have a new house, and on Sunday we had the dedicatory service. I preached the sermon and raised almost sufficient money to pay all indebtedness. We remain here this week to arouse enthusiasm among the members. Hope to raise the money and locate a preacher before we leave.—C. H. HILTON AND WIFE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Allegheny.—There was an attendance of over 300 at the Children's day rally at the Shady Avenue Church, Allegheny. The collection was over $65. A stand conducted on Decoration day by the C. E. made it nearly $100. The Juniors recently turned in nearly $50. The Young Ladies' Circle multiplied 13 nickels into $25, besides paying $15 on their India orphan. A Saturday afternoon kindergarten has been started. A company of cadets will form and meet on Tuesdays.—HERBERT YEUELL.

Scranton, June 10.—I closed my first year as pastor of the Dunmore Church yesterday with a roll call in the morning, at which at least 80 per cent of the membership were represented, and the anniversary sermon at night; we began the year with 91 members and closed with 146; we begun with with 135 in the Sunday-school and closed the year with 228. All other departments of the work have grown in like proportions. We have given nearly $200 for missions and in all, we raised and expended about $1,500.—J. D. DABNEY.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Orangeburg, June 10.—Baptized a lady 80 years of age at Orangeburg recently. Am now engaged in a meeting at Sumter, a new point, with good prospects. One confession so far. —W. B. INGLE.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Armour, June 13.—Our meeting is doing nicely here. A little over a week ago we started in this new field to plant the primitive gospel. No organization here, but a good town, county seat. We have a large tent and the attendance is splendid; 25 have taken the stand for Christ. Evangelist Elliott is dealing out the gospel to these people in full measure, and the people are hearing something they never heard before.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN, singer.

TEXAS.

Holland, June 10.—Meeting two weeks old with 43 additions.—JOHN W. MARSHALL.

San Antonio, June 12.—In my absence at the Waco convention Bro. Percy G. Cross filled my pulpit and one young man made the good confession. Bro. Cross came to us recently from the Cumberland Presbyterians and expects to attend college this fall to begin preparations for the ministry. He is a splendid worker, at present assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and is doing the best work ever done here. My work closes in San Antonio Sept. 1st.—GEO. B. RANSHAW.

WASHINGTON.

Fletcher, June 6.—We left home, Caney, Kan., one week ago last Monday and reached this place Friday. It is unnecessary to say we had a delightful trip across the plains and over the mountains. This is a fine country. The people are making money and seem to be happy and contented. We have a good strong church here. We began our meeting Sunday and everything is favorable for a fine meeting. People were in attendance last Sunday who live 15 miles away. There is a splendid interest. We expect to return home about the 1st of July by way of San Francisco and Salt Lake City.—J. R. CHARLTON.

Family Circle.

It's Wicked to Lose.

Through my open window, summer breezes straying
Bring the shouts of school-boys with their marbles playing,
Merry little urchins, full of fun and noise,
Not a care or trouble. Happy little boys!

Watch that little fellow: hear him gaily jest,
He is very lucky, winning from the rest.
I hear a girl's voice: "Tom, you must not play
And keep the marbles that you win. What will mamma say?"

"Oh," replies Tommy, with a happy smile,
As he adds more marbles to his growing pile,
"Nobody's a-cheatin', we're all a-playin' fair.
And I'm almost certain mamma wouldn't care."

So the game continues. Tommy still is winning,
And he never questions whether he is sinning.
Tommy's luck is changing, and the happy smile
Leaves his face as quickly as the marbles leave his pile.

Now the game is ended, and he counts the cost;
Crockeries, nibs and agates, all, oh all, are lost!
"Give me back my marbles!" Tommy wildly weeps,
"Mamma says it's wicked when you play for keeps!"

The Rights of Children.

By Athalia Johnson Irwin.

That many parents, as well as others who have children under their control, seem to lose sight of the fact that the rights of children can be imposed upon, is noticeable to all who have made it a point to observe closely. We hear a great deal about the respect and deference due older people from children, but we seldom hear of any one defending the children, or expatiating upon their rights.

In the first place, and covering the ground in one sentence, the children have a right to the same respect and consideration which we demand of them. We have no right to require of any one, children included, more than we are willing to bestow. The child who receives at the hands of the older members of the family the same kindly consideration and respectful attitude which they are supposed to manifest towards older members of the family, community or household in which they live, will not find it hard to meet all the requirements made of it. The quickest and easiest way in the world to secure respect and consideration from a child is to manifest just this attitude towards the child. It is not necessary in order to do this to put one's self on an equality with the child, thus defeating the very purpose of the effort. It is possible to correct, to chide and control without disrespect and humiliation. One of the most humiliating things I ever witnessed was the stern rebuke of a sensitive child in the presence of visitors. This ought not to be, and the children have a right to rebel against it as soon as they are old enough to understand. Who, with the smallest amount of culture, would think of rebuking or correcting without apology his equal in the presence of company? And yet this is done to children every day. Their ideas of correct form and regard for others are thus stunted, impaired and oftentimes ruined altogether. I know the temptation to do this is sometimes very strong, when children are obstinate and seem to be taking advantage of the fact that the company is present; but bad management increases this temptation. It seems easier to mortify them into obedience, but this plan should be employed very cautiously, lest the finer nature of the child be destroyed.

We, instead of expecting less of children than we do of grown people, are often found expecting more of them. Those who fly into a passion when a child is rude or angry, are worse than the child, and have a right to be lowered in the estimation of the child thus wronged. What it needs at such a time is the soothing, helpful influence of a superior manner. The child may not yet have learned better, but the grown person ought to have done so long ago. In this one particular then, I consider the rights of children much abused.

The Bible says, "Fathers, provoke not your children to anger but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Why this but? Because to provoke them to anger interferes with godly training. Parents who are constantly appealing to or arousing the baser passions in a child's nature are not bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, but instead are assisting in the development of the very traits of character which the nurture and admonition of the Lord should enable them to overcome.

We are not responsible in every case for our child's anger, but we are responsible if our child flies into a passion through any word or act of ours. Many a violent temper, sour disposition, unkind nature, can be traced back to the fact that the child had no help in its early days from the older members of the family in overcoming these things. Teasing, taunting and worrying are absolutely unpardonable when it is seen that these things are injuring the child's disposition.

I do not believe that any parent should permit a child's nerves to be tried by horrible ghost stories, unless the story is always concluded with a satisfactory explanation of the supposed ghost and a careful assurance that all these things are the work of a stimulated imagination. Children have a right to all that is good and pure, and anything short of this does them an injustice.

Children also have a right to a support and education from their parents. They are not responsible for their existence, and the success and usefulness of their future depend largely upon how they are raised and educated. They also have a right to be informed by their parents in regard to all the vital truths of life, and should not be forced to seek knowledge of these things from vulgar companions.

They have a most unmistakable right to careful training along that line of religious thought which is conscientiously believed to be right; and then, when they grow older, they have a right to think and act for themselves. This thinking and acting depends largely upon how they have been impressed with the importance of religious ideals and aspirations. That child which has been left absolutely, or even in a large measure, to itself in the formation of its religious thought, has received a great injustice, and if it never gives any consideration to these, the most important themes of its existence, the parents will certainly have their share of the reproach to bear. Such parents have shown less consideration for their child than for the vine which they have planted in their garden, and carefully trained to grow on a suitable trellis. The soul needs spiritual food, and it is our duty to train the child so that it may know how to get the right kind. Sad indeed is it to me to see little ones who are taught no reverence for sacred or holy things. And we can generally tell from the manner and attitude of grown people just how far this right has been denied in childhood. To overdo or underdo is equally injurious, as the one creates a distaste for it and the other creates no taste at all.

Give the children their rights and the rights of grown people will need to be defended less.

The children have a right to love, protection and careful training, and this covers all that has been said or can be said. —Universalist Leader.

A New Use for Peat.

For centuries, the peat bogs of Ireland have supplied fuel to the lower classes in that country and it has been similarly used in England and Holland. To one unaccustomed to it, it looks very much like trying to burn black mud, but when it is dried its vegetable origin becomes more apparent and it burns readily. It has recently been stated that undoubtedly a device will soon be found by which peat can be compressed into bricks and be used in the place of coal. Machines have already been constructed for the mining of peat and in Austria a patent artificial wood is made of it, which has the advantage of hardening steadily when inserted in moist soil. For street paving it is free from dust, noiseless and durable. Peat wood sleepers for railway use have been found most satisfactory.

They Do It.

People Quit Coffee and Get Well on Postum Food Coffee.

A man in Milford, Ind., says he did not quit drinking coffee because he thought it hurt him, but because he found a morning beverage he liked better in Postum Food Coffee, but to his wonder and surprise, he found in a few weeks all of the old symptoms of sickness had left him.

He had been greatly troubled with his stomach and heart, also with what he called "water brash," and dull headaches "which made me very irritable and quick tempered."

All of these symptoms disappeared and he discovered in spite of all his previous theories that coffee was really the cause of his troubles, and the leaving off of coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee brought about a perfect cure.

He speaks also of Mrs. Josephiene Kelly, living at Elkhart, Ind. Says she was afflicted much as he was, but had become more emaciated than he. So she quit drinking coffee and took on Postum Food Coffee. She is now a healthy and robust lady and willing to make affidavit that Postum Food Coffee saved her.

The gentleman from Milford speaks also of Thomas McDonald as having recovered by using Postum. It can be had at all grocers. A good cup of Postum cannot be made unless it is boiled long enough to bring out the flavor and food value, then it is delicious.

The Value of an Eclipse.

Astronomers go to great pains and expense to observe a total eclipse of the sun. Expeditions are organized to travel to out-of-the-way corners of the world, such as Tripoli, Borneo and Sumatra, to see an eclipse, though cloudy weather may disappoint them after the most careful preparations. David P. Todd, writing in Popular Astronomy on "What Eclipses of the Sun Teach us," says:

"'Will the eclipse really happen? Are you certain of it?' These were questions I found many people seriously asking a year ago, when the failure of the meteoric showers in the preceding November had seemed to them, perhaps naturally enough, to have discredited the entire range of astronomical knowledge. So pervasive was this quite reasonable scepticism that it even preceded me to Tripoli; and on landing at the hatoba there, I was assured with much warmth that there probably would be no eclipse at all, and that I must have made some mistake in coming to Tripoli, for the track certainly would not cover that villayet of the Ottoman empire.

"Why all this? What reason is assignable for this hurrying to and fro of astronomers from world wide localities, to witness the simple darkening of the sun for a few fleeting moments by the grateful intervention of the moon?

"Early in the astronomical dark ages of the 19th century, this question would not have been asked, because everyone seems to have thought the radiant corona nothing whatever but what anyone would expect from the brilliant rays of a glowing body like the sun glancing along the irregular and serrate periphery of the eclipsing moon. Sir William Herschel seems to have been almost the sole astronomer to divine the true relation of the solar orb to matters of practical concern for dwellers on the earth. Just a century ago he wrote, 'The influence of this eminent body on the globe we inhabit is so great and so widely diffused that it becomes almost a duty to study the operations which are carried on upon the solar surface.' Had astronomers and meteorologists but had the faith to follow up the indications of his keen insight, we might have had practical spectroscopy a half century earlier, and weatherology to-day on the only sure basis for effective and unerring prediction—a basis that recognizes the sun and all forms of its radiant energy as regnant over and above everything else in all cosmic concerns of the terrestrial economy.

"Of course the corona will be photographed, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of times. But the best results are only to be expected from those cameras that have been fitted with a whirling heartshaped vane, or occulter, somewhat after the manner first invented and successfully employed by Mr. Burckhalter, of Oakland, Cal. This will reduce the actinically bright inner corona to a minimum exposure, at the same time admitting the faint exterior filaments that greatly lengthened the time necessary to impress their rays upon even the most sensitive plate. Should this important type of auxiliary apparatus be as successful as is expected, astronomers may at least have a few coronal streamers at their whole length on a single plate, and with such definiteness that measures of their delicate filaments can be made with the exactness demanded for comparison with mathematical theory. Perhaps, too, the long ecliptic streamers may again be caught by Mrs. Maunder, who has gone with her husband to the Mauritius, to repeat her signal success of the India eclipse of 1898.

"The spectrum of the corona is by no means neglected. Photography is of such prime advantage to this work that hundreds of lines are now precisely caught with less trouble than a single line could be measured optically quarter of a century ago. Prof. Wood, of the University of Wisconsin, by a deft and novel combination of spectroscope and polariscope, is expecting to get the Fraunhofer lines with greater clearness than ever before."

By the use of the bolometer, says Mr. Todd, it has been found that the corona of the sun, though intensely bright, is not correspondingly hot, and the verification of this conclusion is looked upon as one of the most important results of the observation of coming eclipses. Anything which produces light without heat may easily become a valuable object of study as bearing on the practical problem of artificial illumination. It has been held by many eminent astronomers that the streamers of the corona are electrical discharges of some sort, and the theory receives a partial corroboration by the almost proved statement that its light is not hot, as it would be if it were produced solely by combustion or incandescence.

Aged Authors.

It will be comforting to those who may have feared that they had passed by the best part of their life to know the conclusion arrived at by a painstaking statistician. He has discovered that the prime of life is between fifty and sixty. He approaches the matter from the intellectual rather than the athletic point of view, and has gathered that a large majority of the immortal works of genius were the outcome of a matured intellect. It is true enough that Milton began "Paradise Lost" at the age of fifty-four, but the fact that he wrote the poem then rather than in his early days was due more to the exactions entailed by a secretaryship to Oliver Cromwell than to an immaturity of intellect. Another dubious example is that of George Eliot, who is accused of writing her best book at an advanced age. The best book in question is "Daniel Deronda," which, by otherwise universal confession, is much the worst of her novels. If one goes to the poets, the best work has been done, as a rule, in early days. Shelley and Byron died young, and Rossetti wrote much the best of his poems at the age of nineteen. But it is beside the mark to compare crabbed age and youth at all. Some people develop early, some later; and the only fact that emerges distinctly from the statistics is that those authors who begin early stop early; while those who, like Oliver Wendell Holmes, begin late may continue writing well till they are octogenarians.—The London Globe.

Magazine Editor.—"But, my dear madame, I have merely attempted to give you, in the kindliest spirit, a few hints on metre and construction."

"Well, I wouldn't have such a mean disposition as you have for a thousand dollars."

Census Taker—"What is your age, madam?"

Mrs. Neighbors—"Did the woman next door give her age?"

Census Taker—"Certainly."

Mrs. Neighbors—"Well, I'm two years younger than she is."

The horse-car conductor was hardly in the best of humor. Some one had managed to give him a bad shilling, and he had just discovered it; that was why he started the car before three women and a child had got much beyond the step. One of the women was exceedingly irate at such treatment. The conductor saw that as he started to collect the fares, but he was irate, too.

"Look here, ma'am," said he, as she tendered her fare, "this child that is with you will have to be paid for as well."

"I haven't any intention of paying its fare," snapped the woman.

"Then I shall put the child out," answered the conductor, reaching for the bell-strap.

"You won't dare to do it," flashed the woman.

Ting! The conductor brought the car to a stop, picked up the child, and deposited it outside, and rang to go ahead.

"Well, ma'am," he said grimly, "you'll find your child on the pavement."

"My child?" snapped she. "It isn't mine."

"Whose is it, then?" gasped the conductor.

"I haven't the slightest idea," she coolly answered.

Then the child's mother, who had been engaged in an exciting discussion with her friend over the merits of a new dress, awoke to the fact that her child was missing, and the fireworks that played about the unfortunate conductor's head reminded him of a 5th of November display.—Tit-Bits.

Monkeys and Crabs.

"Most monkeys have a liking for land crabs, and the beasts when in their natural element in the jungle will often travel for miles to some marshy region in search of a crustacean meal," said a dealer in all sorts of wild animals. "Some years ago, when I was in Singapore trading with the natives for monkeys, I was one day greatly amused to see the artful methods practiced by Jocko to trap crabs. The monkey, having located the whereabouts of the crabs, lies flat down on his stomach, feigning death. Presently from the countless passages piercing the mud in every direction thousands of little red and yellow crabs make their appearance, and after suspiciously eyeing for a few minutes the brown fur of the monkey they slowly and cautiously slide up to him, in great glee at the prospect of a big feed off the bones of Master Jocko.

"The latter now peeps through his half-closed eyelids and fixes upon the biggest of the assembled multitude. When the crab comes within reach, out dashes the monkey's arm, and off he scampers into the jungle, with a cry of delight, to discuss at leisure his cleverly earned dinner.

"Rarely did the monkeys seem to miss their prey. I saw, however, an old fellow do so, and it was ludicrous in the extreme to see the rage it put him in. Jumping for fully a minute up and down on all fours at the mouth of the hole into which the crab had escaped, he positively howled with vexation. Then he set to work poking the mud about with his fingers at the entrance to the passage, fruitlessly trying now and again to peep into it."

Pawned His Wooden Legs.

The amenities of drunkenness are not numerous. Temperance lecturers, in order to amuse their audiences, sometimes interject a story intended to be funny, or a presumably comical dialogue, but such efforts are pitiful, rather than humorous, for to make sport of the words and acts of a poor, besotted creature, crazed with liquor, is like sporting with the flames of the bottomless pit. A recent imposition practiced on the saloon-keepers of Kokomo, Indiana, shows that at least one drunkard has a sense of humor, although it landed him in the dungeon where he still remains. His name is Ike Stevens, he lives in a town near Kokomo; the other day Ike appeared in that village with a strong thirst and a new wooden leg, and proceeded to pawn the latter in order to satisfy the former. The saloon-keeper, confident that the security was good, let him have the drink, and Ike laboriously hobbled off on one leg and a pair of canes to put in an appearance at a second saloon, where he again pawned a wooden leg for liquor. The process was repeated until Ike was gloriously drunk, when he was arrested and lodged in jail. On the following morning, when brought up in the police court, the discovery was made that he had pawned wooden legs all over town, over a dozen being found, with some outlying precincts still to be heard from. The justice refused to accept wooden legs in payment of Ike's fine, so the drunkard is now working it out. He is not working as hard, however, as he did while making the legs which helped him to a spree, for it has developed that he spent nearly two weeks of time in making the supports, then carried them seven miles on his back, all of which goes to show how much pains and trouble a man will take in order to make a beast of himself.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"Are you proud of your baking powder biscuit?" he asked.

"I should think not," she replied. "I've tried dozens of times, but I never could equal those made by the cook.

"Has any one ever told you that your pie crust excels anything in that line ever before made?"

"Never. My pie crust is worse than my biscuit."

"Are you an adept in preparing dainty little desserts?"

"Oh, I've done a something in that way, of course," she answered; "but I never would think of doing the cooking for any one for whom I really cared."

He gave a sigh of relief.

"Will you marry me?" he asked.

Mr. Evarts told Lord Coleridge, when they were at Mount Vernon, the legend of Washington throwing a dollar across the Potomac. "But," objected Coleridge, "the Potomac's a broad stream." "Yes," retorted Mr. Evarts, "but a dollar went further in those days." At a dinner party this story was praised as Mr. Evarts' best. "Oh," said Mr. Evarts modestly, "I don't say all the good things credited to me. Now what I might have said was that it was not so strange George Washington threw a dollar across a river since he threw a sovereign across the sea."

Magistrate: "Did you see the beginning of this quarrel?"

Witness: "Yes, sir; saw the very commencement. It was about two years ago."

Magistrate: "Two years ago?"

Witness: "Yes, sir. The minister said, 'Will you take this man to be your lawful husband?' and she said, 'I will.'"

Yeast—"Do the robins come and pick the crumbs from your lawn?"

Crimsonbeak—"They used to, but they don't any more."

"How do you account for that?"

"My wife makes her own bread."

"Why didn't you come last evening, as you promised?" his sweetheart asked him severely. "I had to attend a pound party." "I am so glad. Brother George said he thought he saw you at the slugging match."

"How cheerfully your husband runs your lawn mower, Mrs. Riprap."

"Yes. I keep father's old scythe hanging in the piazza, and whenever he looks at it he knows he is well off."

"Now, Harry," asked the teacher of the juvenile class, "what is the meal we eat in the morning called?" "Oatmeal," was the little fellow's prompt reply.

Prevention of Disease.

Keep the Stomach Right.

It is surprising what a safeguard a healthy stomach is against disease. And again it is not so surprising when it is remembered that the only way we get pure blood, strong nerves and firm flesh, is from wholesome food, well digested. It is the half digested food that causes the mischief. When the stomach is weak, slow, inactive, the food lies in the stomach for hours, fermenting, forming gases which poison the blood and the whole system, causing headache, pains in the back, shoulder blades and chest, loss of appetite, palpitation, biliousness.

The safest cure for indigestion is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, composed of vegetable essences, fruit salts, pure pepsin and Golden Seal. Dissolve one or two of these tablets in the mouth after each meal. They are pleasant tasting and mingling with the food so assist the weak stomach that the food is perfectly digested before it has time to ferment.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion and increase flesh because they digest flesh forming foods like meat, eggs, etc.

PETE.

There was a deep silence in the cellar. Then Edgar Brown began to laugh again. Mr. Gudger grinned. The man in the ropes looked very ugly and ill-tempered. Nap opened his mouth wide in astonishment, stared at Edgar, and then he began to laugh, also. "Well, I'm Napoleon enough to know when I'm beat," he said, "and I abdicates right on the spot. But if this don't beat all! And you know Napoleon Hardcattle personally and, as I may say, visually?"

"My father married twice," said Edgar; "the second wife outlived him. Not many years ago she married this very Napoleon Hardcattle whom you have been pretending to be." "Well, now, ain't it curus how things turn out!" cried Nap. "To think of you a-being a step-son of the man I was representing! It beats all! Ain't life a game, anyhow!" Mr. Gudger spoke up; "You will think it a game when you and this Y are in the penitentiary for trying to git money under false pretenses, and for blackmail."

"Now, gents," remonstrated Nap, "come! Don't do it! You let me go. (I ain't keering about this Y, you kin scorch him if you wanter.) Listen at me. You'll see I have a good excuse. Now this is straight goods, with no cotton in the wool. I was always a hardun and a nocount, but with principles, gents, with principles; I have lost everything but them, and them I means to die with. Down Texas come 'crost drummer that knowed all about Jack Morris when he was a young man using his ward's thousand dollar, and how the ward, Napoleon Hardcattle, turned into a hobo and was never saw after a few years. The drummer asts me if I ever knowed sich a character. Now my name is Nap. Quick as a flash I says, 'Sir, I air Napoleon Hardcattle.' That there drummer then tells me how Jack Morris is dead and I ought to reform and gote see his widder. Thinks I, 'I will!' I drifted hither, meanin' to git some money outer the widow. Comes 'crost this here Y, and bein' a man with an expansive heart, I tells him my game. What does the ungrateful wretch do but up and say he will be Napoleon Hardcattle! With that we fit a fight and I brung him here and roped him. Now gents, if you'll agree to say no more of this matter, I'll agree never to breathe it." "But where's your excuse?" asked Edgar.

"Why!" cried the other indignantly. "Ain't I told you that drummer told me all about Jack Morris? Ain't that an excuse? My name being Nap, didn't I have to lengthen it to Napoleon Hardcattle? Could I let a good chanct like that slip my fingers? He tempted me, that drummer did. That's my excuse; I was tempted. How could I neglect an opportunity like that? 'Few hadn't come along, wouldn't I be in clover right now?" Mr. Gudger said, "Mr. Brown, shall we clap the pair of them in the county jail?"

Edgar decided to let both of them go. In the first place, they could never annoy Mrs. Morris again, and in the second, if freed, no one need know that Mr. Morris had wronged his half-brother in his youth. Of course it would be very unpleasant for that story to be spread over town. It must grieve Mrs. Morris intensely for any misconduct of her dead husband to become public property. As to how much her husband had been to blame, Edgar could not decide till he had heard the story from Mrs. Morris. So the man was unfastened from his ropes, and they made him start in one direction and Nap in another, warning both that they had better not be found in that county again. Nap wanted to shake hands with Edgar at parting, but the young man refused the honor, for he could not forget how the rascal had tormented Mrs. Morris and her daughters. As soon as the tramps were gone, Edgar and Mr. Gudger got in the spring wagon and went to town. Here Edgar told the detective his services would not be required further. A train was standing at the depot ready to take him away and he got on it, and you can all tell him good-by, since he will not appear in this story again. Toot! toot! Ding-a-ling! There goes the train with Mr. Gudger smoking his cigar in the smoking-car. Good-by, Mr. Gudger!

Edgar, who had driven him to the station, returned the spring wagon to the livery stable and started toward his hotel, for it was late and there was lightning. Presently he became aware of an unusual disturbance along the street. He saw men hurrying to and fro, and a few women with shawls over their heads. He came to a house that opened upon the pavement. It was lit up and a woman whom he had met at church called to him. "Have you heard about little Prudence?" she asked.

"Prudence?" repeated Edgar vaguely. "No, I have heard nothing unusual. What Prudence?"

"It's that bad little girl of Mrs. Morris's."

"Oh, Pete!" cried Edgar with sudden interest. "What has happened? What is it?"

"It's been a surprise to me, Mr. Brown," said the lady, "what you see to admire in those Morris children. And that Linda May Dudley, she's as bad as she can be! Do you know that she worries her aunt Dollie 'most to death? And there is that Letitia Pendleton you seem so taken with. She is only ten, but already has the airs of a grown woman. Why! She went home with a beau from Linda May's party, this very night; she and Madge; with a BEAU, Mr. Brown. And as for that Madge Morris, I could tell you things about her, only perhaps it's better not. But Prudence,—the girl you call Pete,—she is beyond description. Now my children—"

Just then a voice from the house: "Mamma! You come in here. I want to go to bed."

"But what has happened to Pete?" asked Edgar impatiently.

"You must excuse me for speaking this free," said the lady, "but you seem so fond of children, I would wish you to find the nice ones, and you being a stranger here couldn't know the reputation those Morrises have. Pete is the worst girl in town. Now my children—"

A second voice from the house: "Mamma! You come in here this minute, or I'll know the reason why!" "Hush, Bobby!" called the mother. "Hush yourself!" retorted the voice. The first voice now called: "I want to know if you're coming in here? I want to go to bed. I want to go TO BED!" The mother answered meekly, "I'll be there in a minute, Samuel,"—to which the voice replied, "Well, it's a minute now; and I'll go to bed in my CLOTHES, that's what I'll do, uh huh! uh huh, you'll see!"

"I must go, Mr. Brown," said the lady. "My pets are impatient. Yes, Pete is lost. She can't be found. The whole town has turned out to look. And see, it is going to rain! But it won't hurt Pete. She's too tough. My opinion is she's run off from home!" On hearing this Edgar rushed straight to Mrs. Morris' house. At the gate someone threw an arm about him. It was Madge. "Oh, Mr. Brown! Find her!" Madge was crying. A hand slipped into his; it was Letitia's hand. "Mr. Brown," she said, "I know if anybody can find her you can." Just then Mrs. Morris came running up. "Is that Mr. Brown? Oh, won't you find my little girl for me?" The first drops of rain began to fall.

System in Caracas Hotels.

"The morning after our arrival at the hotel in Caracas," says W. E. Curtis, "I called for a glass of milk while dressing. On every subsequent morning during our stay a glass of milk was brought to me at precisely the same hour, without instructions; and although the servant was told several times that it was not wanted she did not appear to understand, and continued to bring it just the same.

"In the hotel were electric bells. The first day I rang for something, and a certain boy answered the summons. The next morning I rang again and again, and no one responded. Finally I went into the dining-room and found there half a dozen servants.

"'Didn't you hear my bell ring?' I asked.

"'Si, senor' (Yes, sir), was the reply.

"'Then why didn't you answer it?'

"'The boy that answers your excellency's bell has gone to market with the manager.'

"'But you knew he was not here, and you should have come in his place.'

"'No, senor; it is his occupation to answer your bell. I answer the bell of the gentleman in the next room.'

"And as long as I remained in that hotel my bell was answered only by the one particular boy. If he was not in, I could ring for an hour without receiving a response, although the house was full of idle servants."

The Solid Foundation.*

TEXT.—Being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the chief corner stone.—Eph. 2:20.

If in anything we wish absolute security, it is in this great matter of religious hope. No sane person would live in a house the foundation of which was notoriously insecure. Are men wiser in things of this world than in the things of eternity? Many seductive voices are speaking to-day, many foundations of sand are being offered, and the elect are in danger of fatal deception. Yet the foundation of God standeth sure!

Apostles and Prophets.

Both classes have spoken and wrought for us. The inspired prophets again and again called the wayward nation back to God and righteousness, rebuking kings and governors without fear or favor, though they suffered persecution, imprisonment and death. They stood upon the heights, and pointing the people to the coming of Messiah, exhorted them to fidelity and obedience. Whenever their message was received, then Israel prospered. When her kings built upon the word of God, they built securely, and no enemies out of the east or the north or the south could do them damage.

We have the same blessed word of prophecy, the same teaching, and in addition, the teachings of the apostles and the Master. God's word has been proved, over and over. The prophets were true; the apostles were true; Christ Jesus was and is true. Now, shall we leave them for the frauds and deceits of later times? Is not Paul to-day a safer guide than Felix Adler, or Alex. Dowie, or "Mother" Eddy? In the testimony of the apostles and prophets we have even a simpler, clearer, surer message than in the theologies and creeds of Christendom.

The Chief Corner Stone.

"The stone that the builders rejected, the same was made the head of the corner" (Matt. 21:24). Christ is elsewhere spoken of as being the foundation, and the only foundation. In all these figures, He is given the pre-eminence. This is perfectly natural, for it was of Him the prophets spoke; it was from Him the apostles learned; it is in Him alone we have hope. He is "the fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." Whatever the unbeliever may think of our faith in Christ, our dependence upon Him for salvation, he must acknowledge Him as the supremest MAN that the world ever saw. There is no higher type. The imagination is powerless to conceive of a loftier ideal. Why then should we not steadfastly follow him?

He was tried. Read again the story of the temptation in the wilderness, the agony in the garden. Study the times in which Jesus lived and wrought. Contrast Him with the best characters of that or of any other age. All others confess their guilt and sin and weakness; He calls upon all men to repent, yet He never repents. He claims to be absolutely free from sin.

"All over glorious is my Lord!
He must be known, and yet adored;
His worth, if the nations knew,
Sure, the whole earth would love Him too."

How to Build.

There can be no doubt about this foundation, this corner stone. But what avails the best foundation, unless it is built upon? Paul admonishes us to "take heed" how we build (1 Cor. 3:10 15). For, as he plainly shows, we may build unwisely upon this secure foundation. We should be heedful, because "every man's work shall be made manifest." "The fire itself shall prove each man's work of what sort it is." Here is where many disciples go astray. They confess Christ; they obey the gospel; but they forget that after thus being received into the household, they must toil. They approve the foundation, but they do not seek for plans and specifications from the great Architect.

"We are to do more than build upon the foundation, we are to take heed how we build—how, as to material; how, as to industry; how, as to the importance we attach to the structure. We are not to go through the building hastily so we can fly to ignoble rest; we are to live in our work, we are to be dominated by one grand and worthy idea, we are to be known as God's builders and God's building. What miserable work some men do! How frivolous, how vain, how self-involved, how wholly foolish and despicable! A life of dreams, nightmares, speculations, that are insubstantial and wholly wanting in beneficence, either of purpose or of accomplishments."

Prayer.

As the Author and Finisher of our faith, O God, we come to Thee. Thou art the Artist, the Architect, the Foundation, and thou shalt be the superstructure. As Thou hast given us the material, O Lord, help us to fashion it wisely and well; to build according to Thy great, beneficent purposes; to build anticipating the fiery test. May we be Thy temple, O God, fitted and furnished for the indwelling of Thy Spirit, through Christ Jesus, the Lord. Amen.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

By A. B. JONES.

This new volume is a notable contribution to a better understanding of the spiritual significance and value of our Reformatory Movement. It accentuates a side of our plea which has been too much neglected by many. It deals, in a profound manner, characteristic of its author, with such questions as "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal," "Alexander Campbell on Remission of Sins," "The Word and the Spirit," and "Righteousness and Law." The views herein expressed are the result of long and mature deliberation by one of the clearest thinkers and writers in our ranks.

Second Quarterly Review.*

The lessons of the first quarter of the present year portrayed the Great Sufferer, in his humiliation, agony and death, and ended with his poor, bruised and broken body lying helpless in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. The lessons of the past quarter reveal him as the great conqueror, entering upon his career of victory and glory. His first conquest is of death, the foe hated and feared of all men. Seeming at first to be its victim, he but "stooped to conquer," that he might thereby "deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." And because he lives, we shall live also. He is become the resurrection and the life, and over those who trust in him the grave has lost its power. In the face of death they can shout, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Jesus conquered the doubts of his followers and forced them to recognize his eternal kingship over life. Appearing repeatedly to the different groups of men and women who had known and loved him best, he banished all their doubts and fears, and filled them with the sweet and strong conviction that he was indeed a living Savior. The love of the women, which drove them earliest to the tomb, on that first Lord's day morning, brought its reward, and their eyes were first to behold the newly risen Sun of Righteousness. To the others he showed himself with but little delay, appearing no less than five times the very day of his resurrection. Not alone in Jerusalem, but in beloved Galilee, by the seaside and on the mountain, he met his disciples and renewed the sweet intercourse of former days, but only at intervals and for brief periods. He would not have them anticipate the repetition of the life of toil and suffering which ended with his words upon the cross, "It is finished." So frequent and unmistakable were his communications with his disciples that not one of them ever afterward doubted that Jesus was risen. Time and distance made their conviction no less certain, and in life and death they testified that Jesus of Nazareth had conquered death, and brought life and immortality to light.

In the sixth lesson we are given Matthew's version of the great commission, a proclamation such as no mortal man ever presumed to issue. Claiming universal authority, both in heaven and on earth, Jesus sent forth the little company of believers, poor, uncultured and obscure as they were, to bring the whole world into subjection unto him. "Make disciples of all nations!" What seeming arrogance, to think for a moment that the nations of the earth can be brought to follow after the steps of a crucified Jew, despised and hated even by his own people! But are the nations not becoming his disciples? What peoples are leading in the march of civilization but those that acknowledge the claims of Jesus of Nazareth? Despite the imperfections of the Christian world, and the oft-repeated injustice of Christian nations toward weaker ones, the true Spirit of Christ is slowly penetrating the life and institutions of all the nations, and we can begin to see the dawning of a day of peace and righteousness such as the world never saw before. The prayer of the Nazarene shall yet be answered, and the will of God be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Having sent forth his little band of believers, for the conquest of the earth, the king of glory mounts his throne in the heavens, where he will through the ages to come wear the crown of righteousness and wield the scepter of spiritual dominion over the hearts and lives of men and angels. The disciples are vouchsafed the privilege of witnessing his departure from earth, and with awe unspeakable behold him ascend from the Mount of Olives into the blue of the overarching sky. With the promise of the angels echoing in their hearts, that he will come again, they return to Jerusalem and wait for the promised Spirit of truth. On Pentecost the divine visitor descends, to abide forever with the church of the first born, to seal with his holy unction every new born child of God and to comfort the saints through the ages until time shall be no more. His coming is the prescribed sign of the Lord's coronation and anointing as king and priest, and henceforth the disciples proclaim salvation through his atoning blood, and call men to submit to his authority. The kingdom of God has assumed its highest form on the earth, and a sanctified company of believers are built together upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. The Church of Christ is born among men.

But human nature is not transformed in a day, nor in a year. The apostolic group, made up of Galilean peasants, cannot shake off the ideals and prejudices of a lifetime without protracted effort. For a long time the chosen ambassadors of Jesus seem unable to realize that their mission is to others besides the Jew. The chosen nation seems unwilling to receive the message of their own Messiah, and he turns from them to the vast Gentile world. Saul of Tarsus is called to be his witness—a man of mighty intellect, of broad vision, of unswerving sincerity, of unfaltering courage. His cruel persecution of the followers of Jesus is due to his religious zeal. He needs but to know the truth to become its sturdiest friend and advocate. In the midst of his career of violent persecution, Jesus appears to him and speaks in tender and reproachful words, and the proud heart is broken, the indomitable will subdued to the suffering Nazarene, and henceforth he knows naught else but Christ and him crucified. The cause of Jesus receives its mightiest impetus and the gospel spreads over the lands where learning and law have prepared the soil of human hearts for a more intelligent acceptance of the gospel of God's grace than was elsewhere possible.

Jesus' last personal appearance was to the beloved disciple John, who had been banished to the rocky isle of Patmos for preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. When the Lord's day came around, the day on which his Lord had arisen from the dead, the aged apostle was "in the spirit," or in communion with his Master. The future was unrolled before him as a scroll, and he was permitted to see the conflicts of the church of God with her foes, her final and entire triumph, and the new heaven and the new earth in which dwelleth righteousness, where the faithful shall abide in eternal life and peace. Let us cherish this hope and emulate the fidelity of those who thus transmitted it to us undefiled.

Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 30.

Whatever.

"I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do" (John 15:7-16; Matt. 28:18-20).

Mr. Sheldon's question, "What would Jesus do?" is not so practical, I think, as the Christian Endeavor question, "What would Jesus like to have me do?" The difference between the two questions is in the word me. That is a vital difference. That difference makes room for personality. Jesus' personality was one; mine or yours is another. It is impossible to conceive what Jesus would do in our place as a clerk, or a mother, or a farm-hand, or a servant girl, or a dry-goods merchant. It is not impossible to conceive what He would like to have me do, if I am any one of these.

Personality is an essential thing. To be myself is the very best thing it is possible for me to be. To develop myself, my individuality, my peculiar character into as near perfection by the standard of Jesus as is possible, is the best work I can do in the world. Christianity does not seek to drain us of our peculiar natures, to wash out of us all color of individuality, to make us other than we, at our highest, ought to be. Christianity would rather emphasize our individuality, accentuate it, make us all the more Peter, John, Thomas than we were before, but a better and truer Peter, John or Thomas.

Nobody ever makes a greater mistake than to attempt to be somebody else than he is. "Know thyself" is not so imperative a maxim as "Be thyself." Robert Louis Stevenson spent years in imitating the styles of Lamb, Macaulay, Addison and the other great writers of English. It was only when he found his own style, struck his own gait, came to himself, that he fascinated the world. Young preachers usually put in a few years trying to be some one of the great preachers they admire. It is not till they try to be themselves alone that they impress anybody strongly. Young business men, no doubt, try to follow successful business men and lean upon them. It is only when they strike out for themselves and make new paths that they get anywhere. Young society people try to ape the social leaders and succeed in being—apes. There is nothing that is so telling and attractive in society as personality, individuality. There is nothing in Christianity so effective as a perfected personality. Jesus said of the prodigal, "When he came to himself." That is a striking phrase!

Now, what would Jesus like to have me do?

1. Be a branch of the vine, but bear my own fruit. Receive strength and sap from the fountain head, but carry my own weight of purple clusters.

2. Glorify the father, how? Not by praising Him with words only; not by telling the great deeds of others, only; but by bearing much fruit myself.

3. By perfecting the life according to His commands; by doing His will, as Jesus did it; by following Jesus' instructions as to keeping the Father's commands.

4. By specifically filling our individual selves and our activities with the qualities which Jesus taught us: with purity of heart, kindliness of bearing, courage in trying circumstances, faithfulness in all duties, with love, joy, temperance, meekness.

5. By carrying to all the world the same message, the same standards that Jesus gave to us. And "Lo, I am with you alway," says he, "even to the end of the world."

The Reformation of The XIXth Century

A Series of Historical Sketches, dealing with the Rise and Progress of the Religious Movement inaugurated by Thomas and Alexander Campbell, from its Origin to the close of the Nineteenth Century.

Edited by J. H. Garrison

This great work, which has been eagerly awaited for some time, is now ready for delivery. It is truly a notable work—a splendid addition to the literature of the Disciples of Christ. It is the only complete and modern history of the current reformation, and therefore should at once find a place in the home of every earnest and zealous Disciple.

This history is divided into eight periods, as follows:

Introductory Period	Chas. Louis Loos.
Period of Organization	B. B. Tyler.
The Turbulent Period	W. T. Moore.
The Transition Period	T. W. Grafton.
Period of Revival of Home Missions	Benj. L. Smith.
Period of Foreign Missions	A. McLean.
Period of Woman's Work	Lois A. White.
Lessons from Our Past	J. H. Garrison.

Chas. Louis Loos was personally and intimately acquainted with the fathers of the reformation, and associated with them in their work. His statement of the origin of our movement, and of its early connection with the Baptists, is the most satisfactory which has yet been made. B. B. Tyler has for many years been an untiring student of the history of our movement. W. T. Moore was an active and prominent participant in the events of the period beginning with 1861. His sketch of Alexander Campbell is a masterpiece, and is alone worth the price of the book. T. W. Grafton, in his "Life of Alexander Campbell," and "Men of Yesterday" has shown his ability as an able historian. Benj. L. Smith, A. McLean and Miss White have been most conspicuously identified with the enterprises of which they write. The closing section, by J. H. Garrison, is the address delivered by him at the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, October, 1899.

"The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century" is a handsome volume of 514 pages, bound in cloth. It is an addition to that list of books which, whatever other books he may have, every earnest Disciple of Christ should possess. This history is not only a volume full of facts and information, but a story of absorbing interest.

AMES.

Mrs. Adeline Ames, wife of Elder L. B. Ames, Des Moines, was called home from suffering and long physical weakness, April 28, 1901. Three score years and ten had been passed and she rests in the glorious hope of immortality. She was of the noted Scribner family, and was the mother of Prof. Edward Scribner Ames, Charles, Mrs. Barnhill, and Mrs. Stevenson. She was a quiet woman, but intensely interested in everything that pertained to the kingdom of God, and had she done nothing more than give to the world the four children, all of whom are loved and respected, she would have done a great work. Her life was beautiful, and in its quietness exerted over those who came within reach of its influence a halo of Christian fellowship and richness of spiritual rest. The funeral services were held in the University Church of Christ which had been her home the last years of her life. The funeral sermon was preached by the pastor, and the personal reminiscences were given by Bro. Breeden. The Lord's own has been taken and we rejoice, even in our personal loss, at the glorious future of such lives.

I. N. McCASH.

BOSWELL.

Died at his home in Emerson, Ia., on May 25, 1901, Mr. A. P. Boswell, aged 60 years, five months, 19 days. The funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer. A large concourse of friends gathered to express a last tribute to its dead. The deceased leaves two sisters and three brothers to mourn his death. W. B. CREWDSON.

GADIS.

Died, at his home in Prescott, Ia., on May 22, 1901, Bro. J. I. Gadis, aged 56 years. Bro. Gadis was born in Woodford county, Ill., March 5, 1845. In 1900 he removed to Prescott and soon united with the church there, and has been one of the main workers and supports. A very large audience gathered at the church for the last tribute of love. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by the pastor, Bro. Fisher. Bro. Gadis leaves an aged mother, three sisters, four brothers, a wife and two sons to mourn his death, besides a host of friends. The community loses a good citizen and the church a faithful brother and support.

W. B. CREWDSON.

SHUTTER.

Died, at the home of its parents, No. 312 Ninth Street, Council Bluffs, babe of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Shutter. Funeral services conducted by the writer. W. B. CREWDSON.

WOODWARD AND GLISPIE.

On Tuesday, May 2, 1901, occurred the very unusual and sad double funeral of Brethren W. W. Woodward and W. H. Glispie, whose deaths were but a few hours apart in the same home. Bro. W. W. Woodward was born on Feb. 14, 1830, in Montgomery county, Ky., and died May 26, 1901, was a good man and an honored member of the Church of Christ in this place, he leaves an only sister, Sister Glispie, to mourn her loss. Bro. W. H. Glispie was born Sept. 17, 1823, in Bath county, Ky., and died at Council Bluffs, at 3 A. M., May 27, 1901. Bro. Glispie was truly a man of God, having united with the Church of Christ in early manhood and was an earnest Christian to the end. He leaves an aged wife, three sons and three daughters to mourn their loss. A large concourse of friends gathered to pay a last tribute of love to these two good men of God. The bereaved family has the sympathy of many friends, besides the love and consolation of the hope in Christ. W. B. CREWDSON.

...OTHER THINGS GROW IN SUMMER...

Why Should Not The Circulation Of The Christian-Evangelist

It is not mere idle talk when we say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is better than it ever was. This is claiming much, for it has always been the exponent of first quality among the religious periodicals of the Current Reformation.

Our Readers have Helped to Make the Christian-Evangelist What It Is, and We Are Depending Upon Their Aid in Improving It Still More.

We are quite certain that our readers believe that individual lives would be better, homes would be happier, and the power of the church would be many times multiplied if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read in every home represented in the church. It is upon this ground that

We Ask for the Hearty Co-operation of Every Reader in this Mid-Summer Effort to Double the Circulation of the Christian-Evangelist.

How are we to accomplish this result? Those whom we are most desirous of reaching do not know the helpfulness of our journal. They must become acquainted with its good qualities. Sample copies accomplish this in a very limited degree; it takes several months for one to become interested in and attached to any particular class of reading. Therefore,

We Offer the Christian-Evangelist for the Six Months Beginning July 1, 1901, and Ending December 31, 1901, for Only Fifty Cents.

If you are really interested in this question of good literature, you may induce every family in your congregation (and many of your neighbors who are not church members) to invest fifty cents for twenty-six weeks' reading of the very best quality. Of course, we shall lose money on all such subscriptions, but

These Are to be Considered as Trial Subscriptions and are to be Discontinued Promptly December 31, 1901, Unless Renewed at the Regular Price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents a Year.

The justification of this very generous offer is the fact that those who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for six months will not desire to part with it after that time, but will renew as regular subscribers. Circulating religious literature is as truly missionary and evangelistic as preaching from the pulpit. Therefore,

We Call Upon Pastors, Sunday-school Superintendents, and all Others Actively Interested in the Advancement of Christian Teaching Among Us to Engage With Us in the Present Effort to Increase the Knowledge, Piety and Zeal for Good Works of Those With Whom They Have Influence. Who Will Send Us the Largest List of Trial Subscribers?

Two-cent postage stamps will be accepted in payment, but the best way to remit large amounts is by Postoffice Order, Express Order or Draft on St. Louis, Chicago or New York.

Book Notes.

We have left but a few copies each of the Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman and Life of Gen. U. S. Grant—the two great biographical works that we are offering for seventy five cents each. Each of these volumes originally sold for $2.00, and were well worth that price. The former contains nearly 1,000 and the latter over 700 pages; both are illustrated, printed on fine paper and well bound. We secured these volumes along with other books in the stock of a bankrupt book-dealer, and therefore can afford to sell them for less than the actual cost of production. If you wish a copy of either send your order at once. They will not last long.

The success and popularity of The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century is not at all surprising. It is one of those books which are bound to sell, because of their real value. This new volume is a necessity to every Disciple who isn't a "moss-back." To be well-informed concerning the history and genius of our great cause, it is necessary to absorb this volume.

Jun[illegible] passing, a[illegible] you know it the firs[illegible] Lord's day in Ju[illegible] il[illegible]e upon us. That is the first Sunday [illegible] third quarter of the year. Have you [illegible]sent your order for Sunday-school supplies, or have you arranged to send the order in good time to have the supplies on hand, ready for the first Sunday in the new quarter? If the matter has not been attended to there shou'd not be any further delay. Make out your order at once and send it to us. Our series of supplies—but what's the use? Everybody knows them, and all the best teachers, leaders and workers endorse and use them.

Let it be remembered that our offer of The Campbell Library was not for any limited season or period, but is a standing offer, good at any time. It certainly is a great offer, too—all of the works of Alexander Campbell, eight large volumes and three pamphlets, and in addition the Life of Campbell, by Grafton, and Alexander Campbell's Theology, by Garrison, for only $10 00! Moreover, if you already have one or more of Campbell's works and do not wish to purchase duplicates, we allow the substitution of other books for those you already have. And then again, so that everybody may be satisfied, we permit payment to be made in installments if desired. Write us about it.

Work is rapidly progressing on The Witness of Jesus - the volume which will contain the sermons and the biography of Alexander Procter. We cannot as yet fix the exact date of publication, but it is not far distant. The volume will be most acceptable to the thousands of friends and admirers of this great and good man who has gone to his reward.

Self-Dependence.

Weary of myself, and sick of asking
What I am, and what I ought to be,
At this vessel's prow I stand which bears me
Forwards, forwards o'er the starlit sea.

"Ah, once more," I cried, "ye stars, ye waters,
On my heart your mighty charm renew;
Still, still let me, as I gaze upon you,
Feel my soul becoming vast like you."

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of heaven,
Over the lit sea's unquiet way,
In the rustling night-air came the answer:—
"Wouldst thou be as these are? Live as they.

"Unaffrighted by the silence round them,
Undistracted by the sights they see,
These demand not that the things without them
Yield them love, amusement, sympathy.

"And with joy the stars perform their shining,
And the sea its long moon-silvered roll;
For self-poised they live, nor pine with noting
All the fever of some differing soul."

O air-born voice! long since, severely clear,
A cry like thine in mine own heart I hear:—
"Resolve to be thyself; and know that he Who finds himself, loses his misery!"

WHAT WE STAND FOR

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Established 1842 for the Higher Education of Young Ladies will open its 59th session on the 11th of September, 1901. This is a school in which all the solicitude, watch-care, supervision and inspiration of a cultured Virginia home prevail, and during the past session 226 pupils from representative families of 24 states were enrolled. Literature, Languages, Histories, Sciences, Music, Art, Elocution, etc., are taught under high standards. The Faculty and management is composed of 12 gentlemen and 23 ladies. The Eclectic system is used. Diplomas are issued in all departments, each of which is presided over by a University graduate. The school is located on the N. & W. Ry. (Shenandoah Division) 7 miles north of Roanoke City—in a region abounding in scenery beautiful beyond description, and redolent of health. There are six main buildings, all of brick, with extensive verandas, all connected by covered ways. It owns 500 acres of land and valuable mineral springs—Sulphur and Chalybeate, which conduce largely to the health and vigor of growing girls. For illustrated catalogue address JOS. A. NOTES.

The total enrollment, all departments, last year, 1,764, not counting the Summer Schools. 1,140.

Notable material improvements of the past summer: Completion of Auditorium; new portico and other improvements to Main Building; new Pharmaceutical Laboratory; new rooms for Business Department, new desks, etc.; new Bacteriological Laboratory; 3,500 square feet of cement walks; renovation of Gymnasium.

In faculty equipment the most notable thing has been: 1. Complete reorganization of the Department of Music, under the leadership of Mr. Frederic Howard, of New York; 2. The Bible College has been greatly strengthened by the addition of Dr. Clinton Lockhart; 3. The Medical Department has been completely merged into the organic life of the University. The first and second years are now taught in the Science Hall on the Campus; 4. The Des Moines College of Dental Surgery has become an affiliated department. It will add eighty students to the College rolls. 5. The addition of many new teachers to the faculty of the University.

The University has made a steady and rapid growth in the twenty years of its history. It is expected the enrollment will reach 1,900 the coming year. The location in Des Moines, with its state and city libraries, its courts, hospitals, churches, societies, etc., is excellent in every respect. Send for general catalog, 200 pages, free.

Current Events.

War Tax Reduction. On July 1 the reduction of the war taxes, as voted at the last session of Congress, will take effect and the revenue of the government will be decreased by about $45,000,000 a year, according to the official estimate. The greater part of the reduction is made in those taxes which cause most annoyance in the transaction of business in proportion to the amount of revenue raised, such as the stamp tax on bank cheques, telegrams, conveyances and other legal and commercial documents. The brewers secured a reduction of nearly $10,000,000 in the tax on beer, which is all they deserve, though not all they asked. This still leaves the beer tax considerably higher than it was before the war tax was imposed. The condition of the national treasury may be estimated from this willingness of the government to reduce its annnal revenue by $45,000,000. It is estimated that the surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30 will be about $75,000,000, so that even if the expenditures next year are not decreased—and the cost of the war department will probably be much less—there ought to be a surplus of about $30,000,000 even after the tax reduction. This is an extremely good financial record at the end of a period which has demanded greater military and naval expenditures than any other period since the civil war. We have been adding largely to our navy and have maintained troops in the Philippines, China, Cuba and Porto Rico. The action of our government in reducing its revenue to prevent the accumulation of an unnecessary surplus just as it is emerging from this period of military activity, is in striking contrast with the depleted condition of the British treasury as the result of its South African war and the difficulties which are being encountered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his attempt to wipe out the deficit. Whatever one may think about the Republican protective policy, we have here an instructive exhibition of the effectiveness of an import tariff as a means of raising revenue.

Porto Rico's New Step. Porto Rico has taken its first step toward removing the barrier which separates it from the full enjoyment of the privileges of annexation. The authorities of the island have devised a system for raising the necessary revenue to support the insular government by a system of internal taxation and as soon as this is in effective operation, the President is authorized by the Foraker Bill to order the removal of the slight tariff now collected on goods transported between Porto Rico and the United States. This tariff, being but a small per cent. of the Dingley rate, has not been in any sense oppressive and has furnished a convenient and effective means of raising necessary revenue. But the establishment of free trade will mark the admission of Porto Rico into a still closer union with the United States and will pave the way for future territorial government and ultimate statehood. An interesting object-lesson will be formed by the neighboring islands, Cuba and Porto Rico, one independent and the other a possession of the United States. The study of their comparative progress and prosperity may exhibit the fact that annexation and free government under American auspices have some substantial advantages over political independence and theoretical freedom.

Radical Proposals. Constitutional conventions are now in session in Alabama and Virginia, the purpose of which is to amend the state constitutions so as to eliminate the negro vote. Both conventions have been notable for the radical proposals for negro disfranchisement which they have entertained. In the Alabama Convention it has been proposed that no person of negro parentage or of mixed ancestry be allowed either to cast a ballot or hold office in the state. If there were reason—as there is not—to believe that this proposition represented the sober purpose of any considerable portion of the convention, it would amount to little less than the old South Carolina doctrine of nullification, for it would be, both in spirit and in letter, the exact opposite of the Fifteenth Amendment. Such sensational suggestions will not be seriously considered by a convention of politicians. They know that such a measure would be the worst possible politics. In the Virginia Convention a desire has been manifest for equally thorough-going disfranchisement of the negro, but, instead of ignoring the Constitution of the United States, it is proposed to have it amended by the repeal of that inconvenient Fifteenth Amendment. Delegate Harrison voiced a popular opinion when he said that, though the negro ought to be disfranchised, "the honest white man, whether unlettered or without property, ought not to be deprived of the right of suffrage;" and his resolution was followed by another calling for the appointment of a committee to agitate for the repeal of the Fifteenth Amendment and the general disfranchisement of the negro. Advocates of this sweeping measure expressed entire willingness to have their representation in Congress diminished in proportion to the number of citizens disfranchised. This is the most straightforward proposition that has ever been made for getting rid of the negro vote, but it will not work. It may have been a mistake to thrust the responsibilities of citizenship upon the negro immediately upon his emerging from slavery, but the thing has been done and cannot be undone. A simple educational or property requirement without regard to color would meet the demands of all except those who wish to disfranchise the negro, not because he is incapable of voting intelligently, but because he votes with the other party.

A Steal in Philadelphia. By recent action of the Pennsylvania legislature and the common council of Philadelphia, the city of brotherly love has been made the victim of a piece of legalized robbery as flagrant and obvious as any on record. The action of the legislature in rushing certain street railway bills through, with a speed which showed how anxious the machine was to get them passed with as little discussion as possible, was followed by the equally precipitous passage of fourteen ordinances by the council giving away valuable street-railway franchises to a corporation, the leading members of which are prominently connected with the political ring. Before the mayor signed these ordinances, John Wanamaker wrote him a letter in which he offered, by way of showing the value of what was being given away, to pay $2,500,000 for the street-railway concessions which were being presented to Foerderer, Mack & Co, without compensation. Mayor Ashbridge, suspecting that the letter contained something of this sort, as he has since admitted, returned it unopened and signed the bills with all possible speed. In reply to Congressman Foerderer's statement that the offer was a mere bluff, Mr. Wanamaker has now offered to pay the company $500,000 for its corporate rights and for the franchises which it has just received free, to pay the city the $2,500,000 according to the former offer, to guarantee three cent fares morning and evening, and to allow the city to buy back the entire plant including the franchises at the end of ten years for the actual cost of the plant. Mr. Wanamaker says he does not care about going into the street railway business as an investment, but he has the money to make good this offer and is willing to do so for the good of the city and to show up in its proper light the corruption of its present government. No answer has as yet been received to this second proposition. There is not much probability that the offer will be accepted, for the franchises are worth more than the half million which the company would get and very likely it paid more than that for them —but to the members of the council and legislature and not to the city.

The Boston Subway. Boston would be in a situation little better than that of Philadelphia if Massachusetts did not have a governor who looks after the business interests of the state and its capital as wisely as he looks after his own. The Tremont Street subway for street railways has now been in successful operation for some time. It was built by the city with money borrowed at three and a half per cent. and is leased to the street railway company for a rental sufficient to pay the interest on this loan and to establish a sinking fund which will pay off the principal possibly within twenty, certainly within thirty years. At the end of that time the city will own the subway and its rental will be a large source of municipal revenue. A second subway is now needed under Washington Street and, instead of following this same excellent plan, the legislature has passed a bill authorizing the street railway company to build it and giving the company the free and exclusive use of it for fifty years, after which it becomes the property of the city. In other words, the company secures the use of the subway twenty or thirty years longer than by the former plan for the same compensation, and the city's unencumbered ownership of it is postponed an equal period. Gov. Crane has vetoed the bill and it is not likely that the present legislature will be able to pass it over his veto. Perhaps the most important point in his recommendation was that no grant of a franchise ought to be valid until ratified by popular vote. There is no better place to begin the application of the referendum than in connection with the granting of franchises. The best of legislatures and city councils are subjected to grave temptations when pressure is brought to bear to secure the passage of a bill giving away million-dollar franchises. The opportunities for corruption here are even greater than in the election of United States senators, for the amount of money which the average senatorial candidate can afford to spend is slight compared with the amount which a corporation can afford to use to secure a valuable fifty-year franchise. Gov. Crane's suggestion is a good one. Apply the referendum to franchise legislation and take away from our state and municipal lawmakers a temptation which many of them have shown themselves unable to resist.

Progress of Zionism. At the Zionist Convention which was held in Philadelphia June 16-17, reports were presented which appear to indicate considerable progress during the past year both in the spread of sentiment favoring the return of the Jews to Palestine and in the raising of funds to advance this project. To most of us the idea of establishing a great Jewish colony in Palestine, which is to develop into a revived Jewish nation and government, seems a piece of mere sentimentalism with no more practical motive than the medieval Crusades for the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre. It may be that the Russian Jew, who is a farmer and is the victim of a semi-persecution under his present government, may be ready enough to return to the land of his fathers. But the American and English Jew, who has perfect protection by law and carries on profitable trade with the Gentiles in clothing and jewelry, is not to be moved. He is too good a trader to leave his best customers. Mr. Zangwill, who is otherwise a none too orthodox Jew, is an enthusiastic advocate of Zionism, in which he sees the only hope of the race. The preservation of the Hebrews as a separate people to the present time has been due chiefly to their persecution and social ostracism. They have not mingled with other races because they were not permitted to mingle. But now that Jew-baiting is no longer a recognized sport in Christendom and since anti-Semitic feeling even in France and Austria has subsided, there is a tendency for the Jews to lose their racial peculiarities and to become assimilated with the peoples among whom they live. According to this reasoning, the only way to preserve Jewish blood and character unmixed in the absence of persecution is to establish somewhere a Jewish state. Granting that this reasoning is correct, it may be doubted whether it is either practical or desirable to preserve the race unmixed. It is hard in this age to find a pure representative of any race which existed 2,000 years ago, except those which have been entirely out of the current of civilization. The ancient races have mingled with each other and with the barbarian tribes, and the modern races have arisen from these varying mixtures. Why should the Hebrew expect to be the sole exception, or why should he expect, by an artificial, machine-made arrangement like the Zionist program, to escape the operation of those slow but age-long and resistless forces by which races are made and unmade?

Russia's New Grievance. Apparently Russia will not be satisfied with anything short of a commercial quarrel with the United States and a readjustment of her trade relations. The dispute over the sugar bounty and our countervailing duty has been followed immediately by a similar dispute about petroleum. The Dingley law requires that a duty shall be levied upon petroleum and its products when imported from any country which imposes a duty on our petroleum. Russia has vast petroleum fields in the region of the Caucasus Mountains and the Caspian Sea, and protects this interest by a tariff. Very little Russian petroleum is imported into this country. There was none in 1900, but early in this year there were slight importations of products of petroleum manufactured in England and Belgium from Russian raw material. Without any special order from the Secretary of the Treasury, a duty was levied on these. The Russian Minister of Finance protests and takes revenge by increasing the duty on American bicycles and rosin. The questions which arise are these: If these products are Russian enough to justify that government in taking up the case, why are they not Russian enough to justify us in imposing the duty? If they are so thoroughly English that they ought not to pay a duty corresponding to that which American petroleum pays on entering Russia, why should the Russian government have anything to do with the matter? It would be a pity to have the trade relations between the United States and Russia interrupted, for they are mutually profitable, but if Russia is looking for trouble she will probably hunt until she finds it and we might as well make the issue on her first demand as on her last. The Secretary of the Treasury, unlike the Russian Minister of Finance, cannot impose a tariff at will, but can only execute the law.

Brevities. On Tuesday of last week a fourth daughter was born to the Czar and Czarina of Russia.

A terrible flood in the Elkhorn Valley, W. Va., resulted in the loss of at least seventy-five lives and the destruction of an immense amount of property.

The Ohio Republican Convention met at Columbus, June 24. Senator Hanna was elected permanent chairman. Gov. Nash will be renominated for governor.

Adelbert Hay, son of the Secretary of State, and former consul at Pretoria, met a sudden death last Sunday in New Haven by falling from a hotel window. He was a graduate of Yale in the class of 1898 and had gone back to attend the triennial reunion of his class.

Ex-Gov. Pingree, of Michigan, died in London after a brief illness on June 18. He was four times mayor of Detroit and twice governor of Michigan, and accomplished many reforms in lowering gas rates, introducing three cent car fare and in breaking up the corrupt rings which preyed upon the city's finances.

The report of Mr. Peck, United States Commissioner to the Paris Exposition, has just been issued from the government printing office. It is a little work of 3,000 pages, bound in six volumes. For more detailed information in regard to the Exposition than could be crowded into this narrow compass, see the official reports of the French Commissioner General.

In reply to the Pope's suggestion that the United States government should send an envoy to the papal court, Cardinal Gibbons is said to have intimated to his Holiness that the United States government will certainly do nothing of the sort. The Cardinal is perfectly correct. Even France has given up the idea of keeping a representative at the so-called court of the Vatican.

The Missouri Supreme Court has decided that to open ballot boxes and compare the ballots with the registration books in an attempt to detect election fraud, is an unconstitutional invasion of the secrecy of the ballot. This decision closes one important line of inquiry into the alleged frauds of the April election in St. Louis and will probably result in dropping the contest proceeding inaugurated by Mr. Parker and Mr. Meriwether.

The St. Louis Republic, a staunchly anti-expansionist organ, admits that beyond question American occupation and control will be good for the Philippines and will give them a better government than the natives would give themselves. It only fears the harm which expansion may do to us. If the other anti-expansionists will accept this statement, we will at least be saved from much talk about "oppression" and "tyranny." Perhaps, in time, the cartoon representing the crowned and sceptered President with his heel upon the neck of a Filipino may be seen to be a somewhat sweeping misrepresentation if we are giving that same Filipino a better government than he could have without us. Of course there remains the danger to ourselves, but we can endure with equanimity a reasonable amount of peril if it is incurred by doing a good turn to our needy dependents.

Will Morality Save a Man?

This is the question we are asked to answer. It depends upon how much we put into the word morality. If we make it synonymous with religion, as some do, "embracing his duties toward himself, toward his fellow men, and toward God," as the Standard Dictionary defines it, the man who lives up to that high standard will be saved. When we add, however, that no man has ever done this, it becomes apparent that on the basis of the perfect morality no man can be saved. This is not because of any inherent defect in a pure and perfect morality, but because of a defect in human nature which renders man unable to conform to such an ideal ethical standard.

When we use the term morality in the sense which excludes religion, which is the ordinary use of the term, then the inadequacy of any moral code to save man is apparent. This grows out of the fact that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. "There is none that doeth good, no not one." This is the reason which Paul urges why men cannot be justified by law and the same reason proves why we cannot be justified by morality, which is the same thing. The fact of sin is too apparent to need any proof. Every man's conscience has felt its sting. Its awful ravages are about us on every hand. It is as universal as human experience. It forms the dark cloud that hides the face of God. It is the great contradiction. To save man from the power and consequence of sin, Christ came into the world.

Whatever may be our theory as to the origin of evil, we know it is here. Man is spirit embodied in flesh. Through the solicitation of the appetites and the passions man's higher nature yields to the lower and sin is the consequence. It is this fact of sin, this awful, undeniable fact, that made Christ's mission to this world a necessity, together with his death on the cross. He suffered "the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God." His death, revealing God's love for the sinner and his hatred of sin and opening up the possibilities of pardon and peace through faith and submission, is the power of God unto salvation. He who believes on Christ and through him is brought unto reconciliation with God, finds both pardon and peace. This is religion. It is Christ's religion. It is infinitely more than morality as that word is commonly used. It involves morality. For one who knows God as revealed by Christ, and who has learned to love him, which is the essence of religion, not only recognizes his obligation to obey him in all things and to do good to his fellow men, but with the divine help he has the capacity for fulfilling these obligations which the moralist does not possess.

Matthew Arnold's definition of religion as "morality touched by emotion," is inadequate. Rather religion is the soul's free and spontaneous response to the love of God as revealed in Christ. The highest morality can be attained only by him who loves God with all his mind and heart and strength. For such love furnishes not only the motive but the power for the most perfect obedience.

"There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made him free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it wasweak through the flesh, God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and as an offering for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the ordinance of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit" (Rom. 8:1-4).

Our Message to the Churches.

5. Another feature of our message to the churches relates to certain departures from New Testament teaching and practice in relation to conversion. Conversion had been regarded for centuries as an act of God in which man was passive, because a theory of human nature was held which made it impossible for man to do anything toward his conversion. He could neither believe on Christ nor think any true or worthy thought, nor perform any worthy act until he was regenerated directly by the Holy Spirit without his agency or cooperation. Religious opinion has been greatly modified, almost radically changed, on that subject, except in limited circles. Our message to the churches on this subject was that the above view is a perversion of New Testament teaching; that Christ spoke to men as if they had the power to believe what He said and to do what He required of them. The whole New Testament proceeds on that theory. Men are held accountable for resisting the light and for their failure to accept the gospel. We have urged the churches, therefore, to abandon this false philosophy, and to preach the gospel to men and to lay on them the responsibility of believing and obeying it. It was not denied for a moment that the Holy Spirit was the agent in conversion, but it is held that He performs his work in harmony with the laws of human nature, and that he uses means and motives to bring men to repentance and to a new life. This message, too, lifted a great burden from the hearts of many men who had been waiting, through anxious years, for God to do what He had already done, and postponing until "God's good time" what God required them to do immediately, namely, to repent and turn to God. Great improvement,it must be said,has been made among the various churches in their method of presenting the gospel, whether as the result of our message or of other causes we care not to argue.

6. Our message contains a plea for the restoration of the ordinances of the gospel to their rightful place and meaning as taught and practiced in the New Testament. The unbiased scholarship of the world no longer denies that the baptism commanded by Christ and practiced by the apostles was the burial of a penitent believer in water in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, thus symbolizing, according to Paul, Christ's burial and resurrection, and the believer's death to the old life of sin and his resurrection to a new life of righteousness. We have pleaded with our brethren of other names and creeds that, in order to heal the chasm between Christians on the baptismal controversy, it would be wise, and worthy of Christian believers,to return to the practice of the primitive church,followed with almost unbroken continuity for many centuries. As this is universally admitted to be genuine baptism, we have urged that this sacrifice of private preferences would be justified as an important step toward a closer unity among the people of God. Of course this feature of our message relates only to pedobaptist churches. As to the meaning of baptism, our message was and is that it is the initiatory ordinance, the badge of discipleship, the open surrender to Christ, and the divine pledge of forgiveness of sins to the sincere believer who submits to it as a command of Christ. In the New Testament those who believed the message of the gospel were commanded to repent and be baptized unto the remission of sins, and all such were regarded as members of the body of Christ, the church of the living God. The Lord's supper instituted by Christ on the same evening in which He was betrayed is to be observed perpetually in remembrance of Him until He come again, and by the use of the same elements and in the same form of sound words used by the Savior in instituting the ordinance. The testimony among Bible scholars is quite uniform that it was the custom among the primitive churches to observe this ordinance on each first day of the week. Indeed there is evidence that it was the central purpose of the meeting of the disciples on that day to remember their Lord in the institution of His own appointment. Our message as relates to this institution is that it should be observed in its original simplicity, for its original purpose, in its original spirit, and with no other barriers thrown around it than were placed there by Christ Himself and by His inspired apostles. So observed, we believe it to be a means of grace which the churches can ill afford to neglect, or observe less frequently than it was observed in the primitive church. And yet there should be no strife or controversy as to the frequency of its observance, nor should it be a cause of division among Christians. Both these ordinances derive all their significance and value from their relation to Jesus Christ, and their design is to help the soul seeking God to come into closer and more conscious fellowship with Him.

These are some of the most prominent features in our message to the churches—our brethren of the various denominations. They are our brethren in so far as they believe on Christ and are following Him, despite any differences that may exist. We love them because they love Christ, and we deliver this message to them, lovingly but earnestly, because we believe it is Christ's message through us to the churches of our day. Whether they hear and heed, or whether they reject the message, it is our duty to urge it in all fidelity, in all meekness, in all patience, while at the same time we seek to learn from them and from the Word of God, such other truths as will enable us the better to fulfill our mission as religious reformers.

Dr. Bonbright, of Northwestern University, an institution which has been a conspicuous exponent of co-education, says that the system of co-education is still on trial. The social distractions which it offers are a serious menace to the true purpose of a college. Rather, it seems to us the social life of a college is more normal and tends less to dissipation when both sexes are present, as in society outside of the college.

The Y. M. C. A. Jubilee.

The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the first Young Men's Christian Association in the United States was celebrated in Boston by an international convention June 11–16. The convention was noteworthy for its size—2,000 delegates of twenty-two different nationalities—and for the distinguished names which appeared on its program, but still more noteworthy for what it represented.

The Y. M. C. A. has from the beginning stood for a certain definite idea of Christianity. It stands now also for a definite body of results attained in the working out of this idea. Its idea is that Christianity is a religion for the whole man; that it should make men better physically and mentally, as well as morally and spiritually. The motto, "mens sana in corpore sano," has been embodied in gymnasiums and educational classes, and young men who had before considered religion a weakness and had been unable to appreciate the value of spirituality, have been attracted toward higher things by the ideal of a sound mind in a sound body. Having escaped a few years ago from the imminent peril of a form of sentimentalism—springing no doubt from the doctrinal indefiniteness which was considered essential to the preservation of the undenominational character of the Association—it has continued more and more effectively to exhibit the true manliness of Christ's religion, and to show how little those practical matters of character-building and the development of mind, body and soul are dependent upon the subtle distinctions which divide the churches one from another. While others have been talking of Christian union, the Y. M. C. A. has been practicing it; it has been showing that the path of unity lies through a common effort to do those things which need to be done.

In addition to these ideas the Y. M. C. A. now stands for a definite body of results which have been achieved in the course of its half century of history. In the nature of the case its results are not such as can be adequately expressed in statistics. It has not attempted to take the place of the church and has been only indirectly an evangelistic agency. It has started thousands of young men in the right way; has inspired thousands more with high ideals of life; has given to many both the desire for education and the means of attaining it; both the will to serve and the training for service; and has thrown about young men, especially in the cities, influences which have left no room for the vicious influences which come to young men in great cities.

Such results as these cannot be reduced to statistics. It does not adequately represent the magnitude of what has been accomplished to say that there are 4,476 associations in the United States and Canada with 268,477 members, half of whom are members of evangelical churches, and that the associations own buildings valued at $21,445,415. Work has been done in the army and navy, among railroad men and among college students, in all of which fields the work done by the churches is much to be desired.

It is but right that the rulers of the world should pay homage to such an association as this. The convention in Boston received congratulatory messages from the Kings of England and Italy, the Emperor of Germany, President of Switzerland and the President of the United States.

Editor's Easy Chair
or Macatawa Musings.

Something has happened. Things are not just as they were last week. There is a cooler breeze fanning the editorial brow. There is in our ears, too, the music of many waters, or of much water—the low, sweet swish of rippling wavelets as they flow and ebb on the smooth, sandy beach. As we lift our eyes a wide expanse of blue water stretches away to the west, to the north and to the south. It is early morning and there are strange notes in the bird-music that mingles with the low cadences of the coming and receding waves. No, this is not St. Louis, this expanse of water is not the Mississippi, this blended music of birds, waves and breeze, sighing through the pines, is not the noise of traffic on Locust Street, with its coal wagons and automobiles, and this semi-octagonal study perched on the summit of a hill, unter den Linden, is not the third story perch at 1522 Locust Street. There is a new environment. And yet this great inland sea, these sand dunes covered with forest trees, these cottages, half-hidden among the trees, or boldly facing wind and wave along the shore line, these winding foot-paths through the still woods and along the deep-shaded canyons, all have a familiar look. Now that we have rubbed our eyes a little and have had time to get fully awake, we perceive that this is Macatawa Park, of which, we dare say, our readers have heard before, and which a few of them have seen, and felt and enjoyed, and this particular spot, the dearest of all to the writer, is "Edgewood-on-the-lake." Here we abide for a season, seeking such rest and recreation as will not interfere with the fixed, daily literary tasks. Whatsoever we may deem to be helpful to our readers, among the happenings and reflections associated with the place, we will write and print for their benefit and enjoyment. All the rest we will keep back, for why should we add to the burdens of others the unpleasant experiences which may come to us? A pleasant and profitable summer to all our readers is the sincere wish of the Easy Chair, and of the Macatawa Muser.

There is something very enjoyable, though close akin to work, in removing the shutters from the windows and doors of the summer cottage, and throwing it open to sunlight and breeze, after nearly a year of darkness and silence. One always feels a certain joy in letting the light and the life-giving radiance of the sun into the dark places. That is the secret, we take it, of the enjoyment which our missionaries in pagan lands experience in their labors. And what a glorious afternoon it was, on our arrival yesterday, for throwing open the windows and doors of "Edgewood" and preparing it for human habitation. The sky never looked bluer, the breeze never seemed to possess more tonic, and the lake never smiled us a more joyful welcome. Even the trees of the field clapped their hands when kissed by the breeze. There is a good deal of human nature about trees! As for the sun, whose rays we had avoided in St. Louis, he seemed to lay himself out to make the place seem beautiful. His golden beams shot into every corner and crevice of the cottage, chasing away the shadows like St. Louis policemen chase away the thieves from the city—only more so! They fairly danced about the floor, and when the bedding was thrown out on the verandah's railing they literally bathed it with their smiles, vieing with the breeze in driving away any possible dampness that may have been lurking therein. These were the faithful and efficient servants which all-bountiful Nature sent to help us put our cottage in order and they scorned the idea of pay other than the enjoyment it gave them to render the service. If we had to hire the help to do the work for us which Nature does free of cost, it would bankrupt us all.

But not only did Dame Nature give us a royal welcome on our arrival, but weeks, and even months before our arrival, and in anticipation of our coming and that of others, she has been beautifying the park. Last winter there were frosts and freezes and snows in this region, which denuded the forest trees and cut down every green thing. The trees stretched out their bare arms and sighed, as the autumn and winter winds blew upon them, and Nature, in pity, sent down her treasures of snow to cover their nakedness and to shield the tender life of root and herb that had sought protection in the ground. In the early spring she sent her messengers—the sun's rays and the south wind—to melt the snows and frosts and to awaken the sleeping germs of life throughout all these grounds. She has thus slowly but steadily carried on the work of transformation until

"Now 'tis summer, and bright days
Come trooping down green woodland ways."

In our absence she has been nurturing the peach trees on the hill-side south of the cottage and they are actually laden with peaches without any orders from us to that effect! She has a way of carrying on her mysterious processes in her own way and without asking for permission or direction. Wise old dame is Mother Nature and very provident withal. As an artist she has no equal. She paints such colors on the sky, on the flowers and on the wings of insects, as no human artist can equal. The best they can do is to study Nature's ways and imitate her. The heart-shaped leaves of the linden that shades my study window have all been changed for new and fresh ones since we vacated last autumn. Let us love Nature more and study all her beautiful ways and we will be wiser and happier mortals.

Very lovely it was last night when the "glittering hosts" of heaven came out on the "nightly plain," and the young crescent moon hung in the western sky over Lake Michigan, and paved a pathway of silver across its quiet surface. As we sat on the verandah, snug in overcoats and wraps, and watched the stately and majestic march of the stars, we felt a thrill of genuine compassion for all those who were sweltering in heated cities. How still it seemed on Cedar Walk! But few of the cottages on this "street" are inhabited as yet. Some of the Robertses and some of the Haleys are here and this morning the Everetts, of St. Louis, came to occupy the Everest cottage. The Combses, of Kansas City—Pastor Combs and family—are here. Of this fact we had tangible proof this morning in a visit from Sister Combs, bringing a generous supply of white bass for our use. This is like the Combs family. We have not seen Bro. Combs yet, but we learn that he came here in great need of rest, and that he is already greatly improved. The Richardsons of Kansas City are not to be here this season, we learn. How we shall miss them—the large-hearted, cheerful, helpful, companionable tribe! The Hallecks of Kansas City are here and some of the Millers of St. Louis. The hotel at Ottawa Beach has been enlarged beyond recognition. The new arcade and granitoid walks and green lawn near the Macatawa dock are great improvements, as is also the enlarged post office on the old site of the grocery store. There are some new and handsome cottages, but we have not had time in these eighteen hours since our arrival to see much of the Park. The most comfortable trip we have ever made to this place was our last one, by way of the Illinois Central and Pere Marquette railroads, changing at Kensington.—"And the evening and the morning were the first day."

Notes and Comments.

One of the wise pieces of advice which Phillips Brooks gave to young preachers was: "Do not preach that people ought to go to church; if you do, when they have gone to church they will think they have done everything. But make religion so great and attractive that they will want to go to its headquarters." There is good sense in that. Many people imagine they are quite religious and have done their whole duty if they go to church with reasonable regularity. And there is a good deal of preaching which does not cure people of this delusion. Going to church is rather a preparation for doing one's duty. Unless religion is made "great and attractive" and the public meetings inspiring and helpful, there is little use to urge people to attend as a matter of duty.

Some one writing of the uncertain tone which pervades a good deal of modern preaching has scarcely caricatured some of it, in saying that it is a good deal after this style: "Unless you repent, as it were, and be converted, in a measure, you will be damned to a certain extent!" As long as a preacher is delivering God's message to men he has no need to assume an apologetic tone or an air of timidity or doubt. He may introduce as many modifying clauses as he pleases if he is setting forth his own speculative opinions, but when it comes to delivering the message which he has been sent to deliver, it should be delivered with the authority of Him whose word it is.

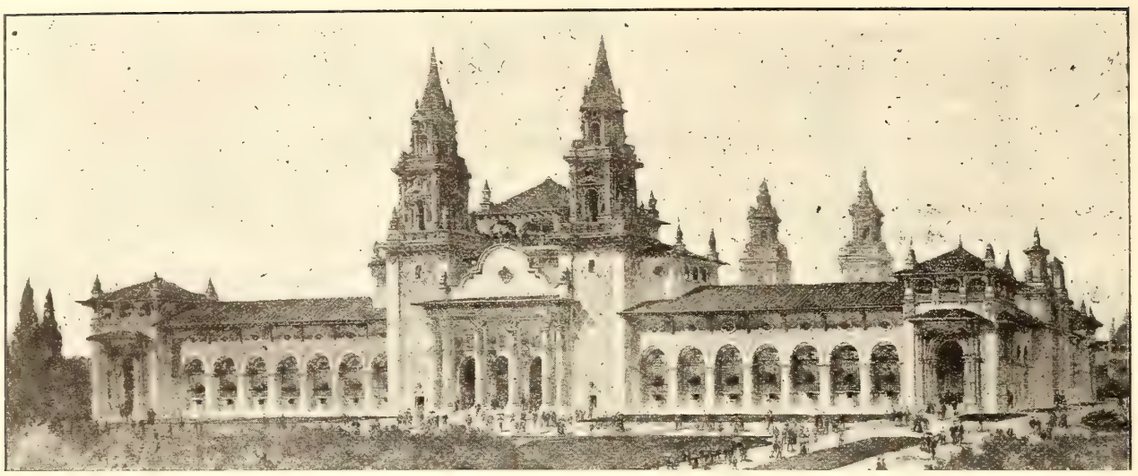
At a recent meeting of the Social Economics Club in Chicago a lady remarked that "total abstinence is sometimes worse than intemperance." It is common enough to hear persons maintain that there is less virtue in total abstinence than in a moderate and temperate use of intoxicants, but it is not often that an intelligent and well-meaning person goes so far in the search for an attractive paradox as to claim that total abstinence is sometimes even worse than intemperance—worse, that is, than temporary insanity, brutish stupidity, reckless cruelty and crime, for all these flow naturally from intemperance. The Chicago Record-Herald in commenting on the utterance says: "Total abstinence is in no sense abnormal while the appetite for liquor is generally a cultivated one. Drinking water satisfies a natural thirst, drinking whisky an unnatural one. Excess in whisky drinking produces a madman, a fool or an insensible lump of blood and bones. Complete abstention leaves the head clear and all the bodily functions in a normal condition. The comparison will not stand a minute's inspection."

In an article in the current number of the North American Review, Dr. Washington Gladden correctly points out the fact that the Protestant principle, the right of private judgment, has led to an over-emphasis, and therefore a wrong emphasis, on the idea of liberty. The organic relationships of social life—whether family, church, or state—demand that the primary emphasis be laid on love and duty, with only a secondary emphasis on rights and liberties. It may be that Protestantism has expressed its idea of equality too much in the form, "I am as good as my neighbor," and too little in the form, "my neighbor is as good as I." The Romanist will say that, according to Dr. Gladden's principle which we have just approved, mediæval Romanism was the perfect type of religion, for it made much of duties and little of liberties. Not so. For the duties upon which it laid stress were not duties to fellow men, but duties to an organization. Neither church, state, nor family can attain to the highest development of the social life in their respective spheres—religious, political and domestic—by subordinating living men to an institution. Individuals must be bound by ties of love and duty to each other, not by the bondage of fear to an ecclesiastical despotism. But let us interpret our Protestantism aright and think more of duties than of liberties.

The Interior, as its custom is, explains the controversy between thorough-going Calvinism and Arminianism by an illustration. No man's brain is large enough to hold all truth. The man who starts at the far edge of the idea of the divine decrees gets his head full before he reaches the point where this truth is harmoniously joined to that of human freedom and responsibility and vice versa. The two half truths do not war upon each other; the war is all between the pugnacious theologians, each of whom sees only one edge of the truth:

Here is an American philosopher and in India a learned pundit. The pundit figures up the weight of the eastern hemisphere, and finds it to be millions and billions of tons. He shakes his head. Such a pressure is absolutely irresistible. It is a mistake. There can by no possibility be any western hemisphere. It would instantly be pulverized into comet-dust. The American philosopher knows more. The pressure of each hemisphere against the other is equal. But what an awful conflict there must be at the point of contact! What a grind and roar and eternal smoke of cosmic torment must arise where the two impinge upon each other. "It is a conflict!" he shouts. "The other is 'an opposing system,' and I must help pay my half of the mighty sphere to pulverize the other half—" and so he dances about and sways his antennæ like a midge on the side of a cider barrel.

Questions and Answers.



1. Are the parable of the pounds in Luke 19:18-28, and that of the talents in Matt. 25:14-30, intended to teach the same lesson in the spiritual kingdom of Christ?

2. In each the things committed by the Lord are to his own servants and not to citizens. In the one the thing committed varies in amount according to the ability of the several servants. In the other equal amounts are committed. Again, in both the failure to profitably employ the gift is condemned and its proper use is commended. Now, what does this thing represent, as that which Christ commits to his servants? It must be something that meets the requirements of the parables, and must it not be something susceptible in quality both of increase in kind and of control by the user—the servant? What is it? Please give it a name, and in doing so remember it is not something that the citizen brings into the kingdom, but what the King gives his servant. A.

Lexington, Ky.

1. The two parables referred to seem to us to teach two different lessons. The parable of the talents distributes the Master's goods according to each man's several ability, one receiving five talents, another two and another one. The one who had received five and had gained five other talents, received the commendation, "Well done, good and faithful servant." The one who had received two talents and had gained two others, received the same commendation; while the one who had made no use of his one talent and had gained none, was condemned as slothful and unfaithful. The lesson in this parable seems to be that men will be held accountable only for the right use of what they have, and their accountability will depend upon how much they have received. The man who is faithful with a few talents will receive the same commendation as he who has been faithful with a larger sum. In other words, all will be accepted of God and saved who have made a wise use of the talents they have received. The parable of the pounds, though similar, is a different parable and teaches a different lesson. In this the nobleman gives, not the whole of his goods, but a pound to each of his ten servants, as a means of testing their capacity. When he comes to reckon with them they are rewarded according to the amount they have gained with the sum they had received. As in the parable of the talents, the man who failed to use what he had received is condemned. We should say, therefore, that while the parable of the talents teaches that all may be saved who use faithfully what has been committed to them, the parable of the pounds teaches that within this gift of eternal life there are degrees of reward, according to capacity for usefulness.

2. As to what is implied or meant by the talents and by the pounds, we should say that they represent whatever of ability, grace or opportunity may be given to the servants of Christ. Perhaps the word ability is sufficiently generic to include all that is meant, namely, natural and spiritual gifts, all of which come from God, together with the opportunities for using them, which are also gifts. It must have been in the light of the truth taught by these parables that Daniel Webster remarked that the greatest thought which had ever occurred to him was his personal accountability to God. It must be the failure of many to realize this truth that causes them to live the careless lives they do and to squandor the gifts they have received from God.

Machinery and Transportation Building.

Niagara Power at the Pan-American Exposition

By BURRIS A. JENKINS

Niagara power performs all the work of the Pan-American Exposition. The Falls create the lights, drive the machinery, lift the elevators, send the little launches darting over the lake, and propel everything ponderous that moves in connection with the great fair of the western world. There is no tall chimney of a steam power-house to pour out volumes of black smoke and sift soot over the buildings; there are no heavy drays of coal drawn into the grounds and of ashes drawn out; there is no hiss of steam, and roar of engines, no belting from wheel to wheel to bid sightseers beware; neither are there any sudden pauses in the working of things, no shutting off of lights, for the Niagara power is steady, working night and day, and is infallible. In proportion, moreover, to its greatness and infallibility, the evidences of its entrance to the grounds are unseen. The mysterious agent creeps in through buried conduits and lays its fingers upon every piece of mechanism about the park. Five thousand horse-power traverses the great copper cable underground in the shape of a twenty-two hundred volt current, and at the switchboard in the electricity building is sent in all directions to do its work.

The illuminating effect produced by this power surpasses anything hitherto seen in the world. The electric fountains of the Chicago World's Exposition were, at that time, considered magnificent in size and effect, but since then electrical science has made such great strides, and the source of power for the Pan-American Exposition has been developed to such magnitude and efficiency as had scarcely been dreamed of in '94, so that those electric fountains are but puny in comparison with the Court of Fountains which is the centre of the Pan-American grounds. Moreover, the lagoons innumerable that thread the open spaces of the grounds, the lakes that contrast their blue surfaces with the delicately colored buildings and red-tiled roofs, the islands that dot the waters with green, all show at night with a judiciously mingled yellow light and shade that challenges all imagination. The great stadium, an amphitheatre well-nigh surrounding a quarter-mile track, and capable of seating ten thousand people, the largest arena for athletic sports ever built in the western hemisphere, is one vast jeweled horseshoe of dazzling incandescence. And the lofty, graceful electrical tower, who can conceive of the effect it produces, like an obelisk of light, the very centre of this great system of radiance? The illuminations are easily the most startling thing about this Exposition, and easily the most notable that the world has ever seen.

For years the problem of utilizing and transmitting the power from the Falls was an unsolved riddle. At one time one hundred and ten citizens of Buffalo offered one thousand dollars each toward a prize for the inventor who should unravel it. Experts flocked to the city by hundreds and bent their energies and their genius to win the honor and the purse. Capitalists, with millions at their disposal, came to look the ground over, and saw clearly the possibilities in store when once the difficulties should be overcome. The scientific world was talking about the matter, and the newspapers everywhere were discussing the probabilities. But all the effort at that time came to naught except a deal of advertising for Buffalo and many a sore heart for disappointed inventors whose pseudo-solutions were not accepted.

No inventor received the prize. It remained for the present Power Company, with its employees, to ferret out the secret at a considerably later day. The Niagara Falls Power Company was organized Mar. 31, 1886. The first survey for the tunnel was made in March, 1890, and ground was broken in the fall of that year. It was five years before the plant was brought nearly to completion and April 16, 1895, was the date when power was first generated. But not until June 26, 1895, were the machines run to their full capacity. The first power was sent to Buffalo over a year later, Nov. 16, 1896. This was 1,000 horse-power for the use of the Buffalo Railway Company. A year later still, power was supplied to other consumers and was ready for general use.

To-day, therefore, the problem is a thing of the past and the power a thing of the present. The great dynamos of the Niagara Power Company form a centre from which many a vast manufacturing concern, over twenty miles away, derives its energy. With that power the hoisting of cargoes that go to make up well-nigh the heaviest shipping—in tonnage—done by any port in America, is performed; with that power hides are tanned, grain elevated, steel and iron welded, aluminum manufactured. With that power the street railways of a great city and its suburbs are operated, and miles of streets and practically all the business houses and homes of Buffalo are lighted.

One hundred thousand horse-power is either brought from the falls to Buffalo and distributed to various concerns according to their need or is parceled out along the way to consumers. The Buffalo Railway Company takes 2,000 horse-power; one concern in Niagara Falls uses 20,000 horse-power; a malt house in Buffalo uses 200 horse-power; an elevator company, 1,000 horse-power; a dry dock, 250 horse-power; a newspaper, 100 horse-power; a bakery, 20 horse-power; a tannery, 50 horse-power; a milling company, 400 horse-power. The amount of power used can be increased or diminished, as the customer desires, and is paid for according to meter.

It is difficult to estimate the relative expense of steam power and of the Falls power, so many factors enter into the calculation that power users differ as to figures. But even if the cost were considered about equal in each case, the electric power is vastly to be preferred when one considers cleanliness, reliability and economy of space. Cleanliness is next to godliness in many a manufacturing enterprise—and certainly is in the Exposition; reliability is all-important when work is rushing and a break in ordinary machinery, the rusting out of a boiler, the loss of a crank-pin, the ripping of a belt, must be counted upon at any time, and as to space, a concern that would have to spread over a great deal of ground if steam were used can be concentrated into a very few feet of ground, when the power comes in on wire.

It is difficult to conceive of the greatness of the task that confronted the company when it began to build. Some feeble comprehension of it may be gained by recalling that the surface canal, a mile and a half above the falls, is 250 feet wide, 12 feet deep, and extends inland from the river 1,700 feet, and after doing its work in the forebay and the penstocks, discharges through a tunnel, into the river 7,000 feet away. The excavation of this tunnel was a stupendous work. Two hundred feet below the city of Niagara Falls, more than 1,000 men toiled incessantly for over three years, removing more than 600,000 tons of rock, and using for lining 16,000,000 brick.

It is difficult, also, to conceive of the great amount of power generated, until we learn that Lowell, Mass., utilizes about 12,000 horse-power, Minneapolis has 25,000, and most factories use between 5 and 50 horse-power. The capacity of the present plant at the Falls is 100,000 horse-power, which will be more than doubled; the Canadian Niagara Power Company—consisting for the most part of the same capitalists as the Niagara Falls Company—will possess 350,000 horse-power, when their franchise is fully utilized; the Hydraulic Power Company will possess, when fully developed, 250,000 horse-power; making the grand total of 750,000 horse-power that will certainly be developed at Falls.

Such is the young giant that is to be everywhere present at the Pan-American Exposition, yet the presence of that power will hardly be known, except by its wonderful effects. The visitor will observe a small, beautifully burnished motor, here and there on a floor adhering to a wall, or hanging from a ceiling; perhaps he will not see the motor at all, it may be so overlaid with exhibits.

Now to follow the power to the Exposition grounds from its source, the source from which all this magic is to flow—the great cataract. Few, indeed, of those who in the last few years have stood on the Canadian shore to view the Falls, have failed to note the wide roadway of foaming white water that shoots out of the cliff-side opposite, and shows its trail halfway across the river. This is the exhaust from the tunnel of the Niagara Power Company. A mile or so above the Falls, a portion of the river—such a very small portion in comparison to the mighty stream that drains the Great Lakes—is diverted into this tunnel and into the turbines that whirl in the wheel pit and turn their energy into electricity.

The building in which the generating machinery is placed stands by the side of Niagara river, and is an unassuming but costly structure of cut sandstone, long, low and massive. Within this building there has recently been completed a plant consisting of turbines and dynamos similar in every way to the first plant of 50,000 horse-power, rendering the present capacity of the plant 100,000 horse-power. Already the demand is felt for the enlargement of this capacity, and there will probably be constructed in the near future another tunnel, unless the directors decide to use the franchise vested in the same company for building a tunnel on the Canadian side of the river.

Visitors are admitted to the power house, and many sight-seers from the Falls daily visit it. If one enters that long low building, he will pass into the visitors' gallery, where from an iron bridge at safe distance, he may look down upon ten great dynamos that resemble ten gigantic iron spinning-tops whirling and humming busily and awesomely at their task. Perhaps at first he may be disappointed at the compactness of it all, just as many persons are disappointed at the first view of the Falls. But the longer one stands looking down upon those whirling giants, and the longer the awe of that humming enters into the fibre of his hearing, the deeper will grow his respect; just as those who come oftenest to view the cataract are most overwhelmed with the fear of it. The power house is absolutely fire-proof; no stick of wood enters into its composition. Stone, brick, marble and metal are before you and about you everywhere. All is spotlessly clean. You watch the employees as they stroll about, with apparently little to do but oversee the great revolving that is going on, and yet ready for all emergencies. You wonder if they are in any danger, and then you remember that 50,000 horse-power is vibrating in that room; 5,000 horse-power—enough to run a great World's Exposition—is throbbing through each one of those great dynamos, and you think of what all that power would do if it should get loose! Immediately you hope that those men know their business and what not to touch!

Close by the entrance the visitor will find a series of indicators which are the meters of the various customers, registering the amount of current in use by each of them. Here also will be seen upon one wall the switchboard, with its little hand levers, by means of which the power, like an obedient servant, is sent hither and thither at command; there is, besides, a circuit breaker which acts much after the fashion of a safety value, and "pops off" when the proper moment arrives, and certain other cables and contrivances which appear sufficiently uncanny, but which are all adapted to wise and useful ends.

If one applies for it, he can usually obtain a permit to view the wheel-pit, under guidance of an employe. One hundred and forty feet is the drop made by the elevator, and the visitor stands in a dry, warm, subterranean chamber. The hum of the dynamos which, in the power house above, rendered conversation difficult, is here multiplied ten-fold, until the roar puts talking entirely out of the question. Thinking is difficult enough for most of those who enter there and signs the only language understood. Here are the penstocks down which the water falls upon the tremendous turbines just below one's feet. Here are the shafts which communicate their rotary motion to the dynamos above. After the water has done its work and has left the great wheels, it flows into the tunnel beneath the floor, which one can view through the raised trap-door, and so through the tail-race passes to the river below the Falls on the reservation near the inclined railway.

When one is informed that the weight of water rushing through the turbines is calculated to a nicety, to balance precisely the weight of the great shafts and swiftly whirling dynamos above, he will marvel at the careful study spent by accurate students of this wonderful force. The whole mechanism is perfectly adjusted so that if at any moment a 5,000 horse-power dynamo is required to lessen its output of power, the automatic governor shuts out an amount of water from the turbines precisely equivalent to the dimunition required. The marvelous adjustment leaves upon one's mind the impression—which is perfectly correct—that here is the greatest and most perfect system of electrical machinery in the world. Coming up out of the pit, one breathes again the upper air, and feels a relief about the bosom from the mighty pressure of unseen force that has been weighing upon him during the last half hour.

If he is still further curious and wishes to trace the power from the great dynamo building, he must follow for twenty-four miles the series of low, heavy poles, with their massive insulators, carrying three sets of heavy copper cables, three cables to a set, which bear the power to Buffalo. At the city line, the power is delivered at the company's terminal house, into the hands of the Pan-American Exposition.

This terminal house is a small brick structure, like a car-barn, which one might pass by without noting, but which contains some remarkable apparatus. Here are transformers by which the current is changed in volume and character according to the desire of the consumer. Thus, for example, the 2,200 volt alternating current which is generated at the Falls, is transformed in the power house there into a current of 11,000 volts by means of a "step-up transformer." Naturally this increase in pressure means a decrease in volume, which is a more convenient form of current for certain kinds of transmission. If now, it is desired at the terminal station to reduce the pressure, the current may be sent through another transformer. These machines consist of coils within coils of greater and smaller wires, and the current passing through one coil of certain size, induces in another coil of different size, a current of different volume and pressure. The transformers, to an exterior view, are plain dark tank-like structures that impress the layman mainly for their huge portentousness.

In one corner of the terminal house sits an unassuming looking bunch of tubes and wires that might be a huge accordion or a small pipe-organ. These are instruments for taking care of the lightning, and are called lightning arrestors. If at any moment a myriad-volted bolt of heaven should strike the company's wires at any point in the twenty-four miles, this lightning eater would quietly consume it volt by volt and no one be the wiser.

From the terminal house the power follows wires into the Exposition Park and taps at the switchboard in the electricity building, where it is sent on all its manifold errands throughout the grounds. This electricity building, a splendid structure, like most of the architecture of the Fair, is in the style of the Spanish Renaissance, and is 500 feet in length by 150 feet in width. Rich decorative effects are possible in this style of building, and over the whole grounds is cast the glamor of Spanish American romance: it is out of deference to the many Latin-American people who are interested in the Exposition, that this style of architecture has been chosen. It is a style that appeared to some extent in the California building at the World's Fair in Chicago, and may be seen in our own country in crude form in the old missions along the borders of southern countries. Of this particular building, the prominent features are the imposing entrances in the northern and southern facades; high arches they are between tall towers. These towers carry graceful cupolas surmounted by the red-tile roofs with delicate curves. From the cupolas wide views of the Exposition can be obtained. At the four corners of the building are square massive towers surmounted by domed pavilions between which run colonnades. Red roofs over all, with wide overhanging eaves, and rich ornamentation of color and relief, add to the picturesqueness of the structure.

The electricity building covers 75,000 feet of exhibition space, in which is set forth the most complete electrical exhibit ever made. Besides the service plant of 5,000 horse-power from Niagara Falls for lighting and for driving machinery, there is a historical exhibit showing the progress of electrical science from the earliest crude contrivances to the most modern and perfect inventions. A commercial exhibit is also made, consisting of the most approved electrical machines for present day use in such wise as to make apparent their workmanship, novelty and usefulness—an exhibit which attracts not only experts but also the general public. Fourteen different classifications of these exhibits have been made, containing such features of marked interest as the recent great improvements in secondary batteries; certain new features in electrical measurement not in existence at the time of former expositions; the application of electric motors to elevators and railways; the historical exhibit of railway motors recently at the Paris Exposition; the latest improvements in transformers for currents of high potentiality; the presentation of recent marked development in the enclosed arc lamp; the processes of heating, cooking and baking, welding and forging by electricity; electrometallurgy and electro-chemistry which have in the last seven years so reduced the cost of producing copper, aluminum and other metals; wireless telegraphy; electricity in surgery, dentistry, and therapeutics, with the results of X-ray investigations; electricity in torpedo and submarine work, engineering and warfare. These and many other applications of the mysterious fluid to practical purposes are shown to the public.

The extent of the electrical exhibit is by no means limited to the electricity building. On account of the special interest that Buffalo has in electricity from its incomparable source of power, and on account of the marked progress in this realm of human discovery in late years, the management of the Exposition early decided to give special prominence to electrical display. The cataracts, so carefully planned, by the magic of this power turn the night in the Court of Fountains into day in fairyland. Electric illumination is so employed in connection with hydraulic and fountain effects, with horticulture, with sculptural ornamentation, color decorations, and court settings, as to surpass any efforts hitherto made in those directions.

The Exposition covers a much larger area than many would suppose, and much more attention is given to great courts, or plazas, suitably set off with greenery, and to long, large vistas with an abundance of water and lagoon; and the whole is treated with the soft radiance of incandescence everywhere turning darkness into light. The managers have pursued the policy of distribution rather than of concentration in the arrangement of light. The glaring white of the arc lamp gives place, in the Pan-American Exposition, to the mellower, richer, more festive yellow of the incandescent globe. And no portion of the great grounds is overlooked. Even the wide stretches of dark water are flooded with light by means of designs of floating lights, which, like multitudinous floating batteries, do battle with the powers of darkness, and overcome the inky blackness of the ordinary Exposition lagoon. The great expanse of water in the basin of the Court of Fountains is one vast flow of luminous golden water broken by jets from many fountains.

The chief water display in the Court of Fountains and therefore the greatest water illumination ever attempted, is the gigantic spray, sixty feet in height, which rises solidly like a geyser, broad at its base and narrowing toward its lofty summit, immediately in front of the electric tower. Such a combined hydraulic and electric display is only possible in the neighborhood of Niagara Falls, with the protean power that the great cascade can furnish.

The plaza, hard by the Court of Fountains, 350x500 feet in size, with an environment rich and picturesque, with its sunken gardens and elaborate floral designs, is another of the attractive pleasure grounds of the Exposition. Here thousands assemble at night about the terraces, around the gardens, to watch the illuminations and listen to the concerts from the band stands in the center.

The electric tower itself is, after all, the gem of the night at the Exposition, and the center of all. It stands between the plaza and the Court of Fountains, and rises to a height of 375 feet. The display upon it presents phenomena never before attempted. Eighty feet square at the base, and two hundred feet in height, it rises a solid obelisk, tapering toward the top in three graceful diminishing sections. First there is a loggia, with wall surfaces brilliantly and richly colored and ornamented, arcaded all around the tower. Pavilions occupy the four corners, and are surmounted with cupolas light and airy. Yet higher, above the loggia, is a circular colonnade, high and light, entirely open, that the sky may show through between the columns. From this colonnade, a spiral stairway leads to the dizzy height of the topmost cupola of all, on the dome of which stands the Goddess of Light, who is the emblem of the Exposition. From this height, as, indeed, from any of the floors of the tower, one may command views of the whole grounds, of Buffalo, Lake Erie, the mighty Niagara, Grand Island, and the Canada shore. At the base of the tower, two colonnades, 75 feet in height, reach out like curving arms toward the south and enclose a semicircular space opening toward the Court of Fountains. All the exterior of the tower is highly ornamented with plastic designs and sculpture, and the four sides are of such light and open character as to give to it an exceedingly airy tout ensemble, particularly at night when it is turned into a blazing pillar of fire. To enter the tower, one crosses an ornamented bridge from the plaza, and may ascend by elevator to any of the floors, loggias and colonnades, to the restaurant, at the height of seventy-five feet, or to the roof gardens above the southward bending colonnades.

It is little wonder that the directors of the Exposition have placed upon their decorative design a Mercury with winged feet bearing aloft a glowing torch, and encircled by the wiry magnetism of the swiftest footed messenger the world has known.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Last week I promised to write this week on the spiritual character of our plea, i. e., the plea of the Disciples of Christ. Excuse me. The spiritual character of our plea can wait. There are some good news items that ought to be brought to your attention at once. The spiritual character of our plea will be considered later.

The Mesa Christian Church in Pueblo, Col., has bought the Broadway Methodist church house of worship. The Mesa church meets in a public hall. The pastor of this congregation is Clyde Darsie, a son of J. L. Darsie, of Hiram, O. He is doing an excellent work. This church was organized about two years ago by R. B. Preston, who was pastor of the Central Church in Pueblo. The Mesa church was organized with the consent of the Central. Bro. Preston is now engaged in secular business, but cooperates cordially with the Mesa congregation and its pastor. The house recently purchased will not be occupied immediately. Probably a year will pass before the church will take possession. The Methodist church has been so successful in its work in this neighborhood that it is compelled to erect a more commodious building. This congregation does not leave the Broadway house because its work has been a failure, but because it has been so successful. This is a point in favor of the Mesa Christian Church. The location is an exceptionally good one in which to build up a flourishing congregation. There are a number of churches in this part of Pueblo, all in apparently good condition, but there is room for a congregation of Disciples of Christ. A good work has been done in the hall; a better work, I doubt not, will be done in the Broadway house.

The Daily Sentinel, of Grand Junction, Col., of recent date, contains the information that the Christian church in that place will in a few months have a house of worship. The dimensions of the building will be 70x71 feet. This, however, is but the beginning. The ground owned by the church is 100x125 feet, located in the most desirable part of the town, and Grand Junction is one of the most important places in Colorado. M. A. Thompson is pastor. Under his ministry the work is in a prosperous condition. This church is one of the plants fostered by the Colorado Christian Missionary Society. Leonard G. Thompson, our superintendent of missions in Colorado, and the corresponding secretary of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society, spent some time lately in Grand Junction to assist in securing money for this new church house. The Christian Church in Colorado is "a movement"—even if you are not pleased with the expression, "a movement"!

"They" are doing things in Missouri too! When I read that of the 1,642 congregations in that state only 291 gave to the cause of foreign missions I feel somewhat discouraged, but having read of the interest on the part of a few Disciples in Missouri in the work of education my depressed spirits come up with a bound. But Mrs. W. T. Moore was trained in New York! That was a generous act, very generous, on the part of Mrs. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair in the matter of the Christian Female College at Columbia. The fact is, all things considered, their contribution to the cause of education is probably the most generous that has been made. It surpasses anything yet done by John D. Rockefeller or Andrew Carnegie. Some of "our people" are evidently in earnest in the cause of education.

Have I not also read that the Bible chair in connection with the University of Missouri has at last received an adequate endowment? I am sure that I have seen such a report and believe that it is worthy of credence.

The last year has been the most eventful in the history of the Fulton, Mo., Female College—the institution of which J. B. Jones is president. This school is now free from the burden of debt under which it has been fairly groaning for a number of years. Its name has also been changed, in honor of its steadfast friend and helper, Dr. William Woods, of Kansas City. The institution is now called the William Woods College for Girls. The outlook for this school is bright. Now, let "our people" in Missouri give it a liberal patronage.

When I read such items as are here reproduced I almost wish that I were one of the Missouri brethren; but when my attention is called to their record in the matter of making "disciples of all the nations," I am glad that I am not one of them!

The announcement of the "Summer Quarter, 1901," of the University of Chicago contains an item or two that you may not have seen. Prof. H. L. Willett will lecture on "Practical Problems Among Disciples of Christ," and "The Place of the Disciples of Christ Among the Religious Forces of To-day." Mr. Errett Gates will lecture on the "Origin of the Disciples," the "History of the Disciples," and "The Aim of the Disciples." The "Origin of the Disciples" will be "a study of the religious conditions surrounding the Campbells in the old world; their removal to America; the conditions of American Christianity at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and the beginnings of an independent movement." "The History of the Disciples" will include "the early relation and separation of Baptists and Disciples; the union of the Campbell and Stone movements; their journalistic, missionary and educational enterprises; present problems and future outlook." "The Aim of the Disciples" will involve "a study of the purpose and mission of the Disciples in the light of Scripture and history; their special contribution to the reformation of the church; a study of New Testament Christianity; the teaching of Jesus; 'First Principles,' or the teaching of the apostles; the creed, life and organization of the Apostolic Church; the problem of union, or the presuppositions of the 'current reformation.'"

Does not this menu create in you a desire to spend some time at the Disciples' Divinity House in the University of Chicago? The foregoing looks like a genuine study of real "First Principles."

The financial agent of the Divinity House makes a most encouraging report. A bequest provides for the erection, in time, of the Davis Divinity Hall, as a home for the Divinity House. Almost $15,000 toward the endowment has already been secured. Mrs. Landon Thomas, of Frankfort, Ky., sent her check a few days ago for $5,000. This free-will offering will be known as "The Ellen M. Thomas Endowment Fund."

The plea of the Disciples is the largest, broadest, biggest, grandest, most far-reaching incident in Christendom, and large-hearted men and women are beginning to appreciate this fact as never before. It is hoped that the generous contribution of Mrs. Thomas is but the beginning of liberal gifts to this worthy enterprise.

Such women as are named in this letter—Mrs. Ellen M. Thomas, Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair—are an honor to the race.

Bruce Brown, of the Central Christian Church, received the M. A. degree from the University of Denver a few days ago. This was in recognition of post graduate work in philosophy and ethics. Remember that this work was done by a young man who is pastor of a large city church, that the church is in the midst of a building enterprise, and that the pastor is chairman of the building committee, and that in this position he is not a mere figurehead. How was this work done and this degree secured? He says in the Christian Messenger, his parish paper:

"The pastor of the Central during the past year in the place of the newspapers and all light reading and by carrying a book in his pocket for idle moments completed the post graduate work he lacked for the Master's degree. He stands ready by this experience in an exceedingly busy year to advise all persons to forever forsake trashy and effervescent literature for that which cultivates and strengthens heart and mind and life. Let precious hours that are now being lost by reading worthless books or papers or by foolish games or idleness be utilized for soul culture. No time should be taken from business or the daily tasks of life. No true pleasure need be sacrificed. Not a single duty should be neglected. But every idle moment should be turned to account. Light reading or nonsensical games weaken a person for his daily duties. An hour's reading on some great theme will help a banker, a lawyer, a physician, a day laborer or any other person to perform his work better. Try this plan. It is better than finding a gold mine."

Denver, Col.

What Most Interests Me Now.

By J. S. Lamar.

XVI. Conclusion.

In recurring for a moment to the vast sweep of thought which the apostle's reference to God's eternal purpose originally excited, and which, from the first chapter of this series to the last we have been steadily contemplating, it is manifest that the unfolding of that purpose discloses three distinct culminations of divine processes. We notice,

1. The creation of the world and the things therein, culminating in the creation of man, its lord and owner.

2. The entrance and prevalence of sin, and God's attitude and relation to the sinful, culminating in the union of God and man in the sinless One and his life and death for sinners.

3. The new creation in Him, and his reign in it, and over the world for it, culminating in eternal glory and blessedness.

To the first and second of these grand divisions I have given such consideration as my limits permitted, looking mainly and giving special emphasis to the culmination of the second. I realize that I have done little more than open up the subject, which merits elaborate treatment, and is certainly worthy of deep and earnest meditation. I hope I have said enough to induce thoughtful minds and pious hearts to linger with loving interest upon subjects which have occupied the infinite mind and heart from all eternity. Surely they must be supremely important.

I also hope that God has enabled me to contribute something, however little, towards a higher conception of our exalted Lord. It may be that many of us have rested in the conviction that he is superhuman, without going farther. But an archangel or even an angel may be superhuman, far excelling us in strength, in purity, in goodness, wisdom and love, and still be immeasurably inferior to the very God. It follows hence that, without some proximately adequate conception of the Infinite and Eternal Being, no mere syllogism can prove for us his true and essential Godhood. It may show him to be very high, and yet not high enough. He may fill to the full our conception of Deity, but that conception, however inadequate, must be the measure of his Deity—for us. What is desiderated, therefore, is the fullest possible knowledge of the true and living God, as he is, and was, and evermore shall be. In attempting to appreciate this divine standard by which the claims of the Christ must be tested, I have not sought to reach it by verbal statements merely, but by a sort of actual association with God—going back in thought and spirit into the infinite past, contemplating there his eternal purpose, lingering with him through the divine processes of creation, especially the creation of man, seeing him in his providences, individual and national, in his relation and attitude to sin and sinners, noting everywhere the contrast of his thoughts and ways with ours; and then, finally, inquiring whether the Christ measured up to this highest attainable, this perfect and God-given, standard. Feeble and inadequate as my work is, it is now tremblingly submitted to the considerate judgment of loving and beloved brethren. And oh! if God has indeed breathed his Holy Spirit upon us, even these feeble chapters may have helped us better to realize that his beloved Son is the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance; and, perhaps, with adoring hearts and exultant assurance, we can call him, as he shall be called, Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.

Manifestly, all that I have done, or attempted to do, is but introductory to what is yet before us—the third grand division of the main subject, the final process and culmination of the whole matter, the crown and consummation of the eternal purpose. Starting from the opened grave of Christ, this period reaches on and on, through the various fortunes of his reign and triumphs of his grace, to the end, when, with his redeemed and glorified followers, he shall deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that God may be all in all. But I cannot now venture to ask my readers, wearied already, I fear, by the slowness of an old man's feeble and halting steps, to accompany me into the Beulah land of the new creation in Christ Jesus. Perhaps, if health and strength permit, I may hereafter, for my own sake, seek to give definiteness to cherished thoughts along this line, and to clothe them with some sort of garb suitable to their presentation, or, at any rate, for their preservation. Whether I shall submit them to the public, awaits their possible production, and my subsequent consideration. In any case, whether I pause here or go forward, I can heartily join my readers in saying—

"Unto him that loveth us, and loosed us from our sins by his blood; and he made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father; to him be the glory and the dominion forever and ever. Amen."

LA MEXICANA By Orpha Bennett Hoblit

(Concluded.)

The Mexican woman of the middle class lives in a comfortable house built flush with the street and around an inner court, the patio. The roof is flat, the walls are thick, the raftered ceilings are fully sixteen feet above the well-scrubbed cement floors. Large windows, protected by iron bars, look out on the street, and a great double door affords an entrance, not only for people but for the domestic animals, whose stables lie in the rear, and for the horses and carriage should the family possess them. The front rooms are well lighted, but those that open on the patio are often dark and gloomy. The only flue is a huge chimney in the kitchen above that unique affair, a Mexican kitchen stove. This is just a wide niche in the wall, wherein at intervals are set iron gratings filled with charcoal and over these the queer dishes in which the Mexican palate delights are cooked. Other arrangements for heating there are none, for the Mexican woman believes that a fire in winter is unhealthy and prefers to sit in the sunshine of the open window wrapped in her shawl rather than use one of those American abominations—a heating stove. The walls and ceilings of the houses are all tinted, raw blues and greens being the favorite colors for the front rooms, though restful shades of terra-cotta, yellow and brown are sometimes found in the kitchens. The rooms at the sides of the court are generally bed-rooms, opening into one another and scantily furnished, except for the ornate wardrobes and elaborately decked brass beds, which look as if no one ever slept in them. Indeed many Mexican women still prefer a pallet on the floor.

WATER CARRIERS.

The sala at the front is the family sitting room, and a peep at it may not be uninteresting. One or two large mirrors in massive frames decorate the walls, while numerous life-sized crayon portraits testify to the presence of the "enlarged picture" agent in the land of manana. There are stiffly starched lace curtains at the windows, and perhaps a piano in the corner. A small square rug is laid in the center of the room and four rockers are placed with great exactness at the corners, while ranged along the walls are smaller chairs, a settee holding the place of honor at the end of the room. One wonders why so many chairs are needed or why the ash-filled spittoons that dot the floor should be required, until he sees the many visitors who gather here almost daily to chat and smoke and sip chocolate, the ladies coming in the afternoon, the gentlemen calling later in the evening.

The crown of the Mexican house is the patio. It is a bit of quiet and green coolness after the glare of blank walls and dusty streets outside. Here climbing roses run up the posts that support the roof of the corridor, broad-leaved bananas cast a grateful shade and orange trees shed their white blossoms and golden fruit. Perhaps a mocking-bird in a reed cage is singing close at hand; the pigeons wheel in the sunshine above and flocks of turtledoves fly down from their stations on the roof and walk about, gentle and demure as Quakers in their dust-colored suits. To us it is a spot for rest and dreaming and the Mexican women, who spend the long afternoons together, find it a charming retreat, as they assemble with their needlework or their cigarettes, while their hair, wet from its daily washing, dries in the sun and air.

There are not many beautiful, according to our standards, even among these women, except with the beauty of youth and health and good spirits. The not uncommon strain of Indian blood gives a brown tint to the skin, a coarseness to the hair and a certain rudeness of feature, while their inordinate use of cosmetics, and lack of taste in dress when they adopt American fashions, does not add to their prettiness. Their stooping shoulders and consequently ungraceful carriage tell of long hours spent over the lace-like drawn work for which Mexico is so justly famous. However, cleanliness, good homes and education have their effect, and now and then one sees a face that makes the heart leap, so rare is its loveliness.

The home dress of women of this class or for ordinary occasions on the street is a neat cotton sacque and skirt, while a lace mantilla serves for hat and wrap. However, at fiestas, the Sunday afternoon promenade or the weekly evening concert in the park this suitable and becoming costume is now too often laid aside and the Mexican girl appears in a startling imitation of American fashions, corseted, powdered and rouged, until the effect is more painful than pleasing.

The Mexican girl marries early and makes an affectionate and devoted wife and mother, though through all the experiences of her married life she retains much of that childlikeness which is her chief charm. She seems to have a simple, affectionate nature, is easily pleased with trifles, and one could not suspect that under the light-hearted and gay exterior lies the depth of passion that now and then is revealed in the strange tragedies peculiar to this people. She is fond of finery and bright colors. She loves music and delights in dancing. She is not illiterate, but is accomplished rather than intellectual. Once released from school, books are laid aside and she depends upon conversation for her mental pabulum, and in this rare art she excels. Trained from childhood to graceful and deferential turns of speech and to innumerable niceties of manner, the result is an elaborate courtesy, an unfailing tact, a graceful mental poise and a charm in conversation that is as winning as it is indescribable. She is never shy. Modest and respectful to the point of deference to her elders and to strangers, she is yet always as much at her ease as any mature woman of the world.

The life of the Mexican woman of this class is still narrowed by certain time-worn restrictions, but it is broadening gradually, as may be seen when we consider for a moment the new occupations that have lately been opened to her, and one may be sure that they would never have been opened had she not been ready and willing to fill them. She now teaches, not only in some private or church school, but in the public schools—of course in the girls' department. She is beginning to find her way into the business world. Sometimes she clerks, though usually in a shop owned by some member of her family. One seldom sees a woman behind the counter in the largest stores. Now and then she may be seen at the typewriter in an office. The employees of the telephone exchange in Mexico City are girls of good family, not yet so emancipated, however, as to be able to go to and return from their work without the escort of father or brother. One young lady has recently electrified the capital by studying and practicing law, and occasionally one hears of some who are aspiring to be physicians.

Society's restrictions draw closest about the wife and daughter of the rich man. They live in comfort, even luxury and, educated and accomplished, are not very different from women of their station in all lands, except that their lives are more cramped and monotonous. The daughter of the family is rigidly chaperoned, never appearing in public save in the company of some elderly friend or relative and receiving no visits from gentlemen, not even from her betrothed, except in the presence of her family. The old custom of "playing the bear," which was formerly the resource of Mexican lovers, is dying out, but still one may sometimes see the gallant waiting on the pavement, his eyes fixed on the balcony across the street, where his sweetheart sits talking to him with eyes and fan and fingers. So for days and weeks the silent courtship goes on until the guardians of the damsel look with favor on the youth and invite him to the house.

Mexican women of all classes are intensely and narrowly devoted to the church and just here is doubtless an explanation of the firm grasp which it still has on the people, though its hold on the government has long since been loosed. The daily worship is a leveler of all distinctions. Madama in her Parisian costume kneels humbly beside the wretched denizen of the "shack," and her tiny daughter in her dainty dress and airy veil of tulle takes her first communion side by side with the dusky, barefooted child of the street, whose veil is a coarse bit of mosquito netting and whose crown is of real orange blossoms instead of the triumph of the milliner's art which adorns the head of her little neighbor.

Such, in brief, are Mexican women—women who, compared with their American sisters, are as the bud still in its green sheath to the full blown rose. But as their country advances they are growing, unfolding, and one day will bloom out into the perfect beauty of complete and independent womanhood. As one notes their slow progress, his thoughts revert to their kinswomen of the islands, so like them now, but whose advantages will be greater than theirs and whose development, let us hope, will be correspondingly rapid.

"The Spiritual Side of Our Plea."

By Joseph Franklin.

This is the title of a new book by Eld. A. B. Jones, Liberty, Mo. It is a strong work on a subject which needs to be much better understood. In the early days of the nineteenth century reformation the sectarian churches were laying great stress upon what they called "experimental religion."

It was claimed that the Holy Spirit is present with the sinner in his conversion and with the saint in his sanctification, quickening them from the deadness of total depravity and moving in them "both to will and to do of God's good pleasure," and that this presence is "sensible," that men can feel it and know of the presence because they feel it. It was therefore called a "feeling sense of the Holy Ghost." Judging this tree by its fruits, the reformers rejected it entirely. The feeling could not be discredited; but the results of it were not such as they would be if it were really wrought by the Holy Spirit. Men who thought they had such "experiences" built upon them exclusively, and trusted in them as "better evidences than the mere word." Of course, if the spirit in men was making them feel what is true and what is duty, they did not need to study the Bible. And they did not study it. The word was "a dead letter."

But in turning away from the vagaries of this mistaken "experience," there was soon manifested a strong tendency to run to an opposite extreme. As, on one side, many looked to and trusted in "the Spirit alone," so, on the other side, there were many who trusted in "the word alone." The Holy Spirit in prophets and apostles has spoken the whole truth, and man has only to read and believe and obey the written word.

The author of this book finds the truth between two extremes. The universe is not like a clock which God made and wound up, and then left it to run on by the laws of its construction. God is not only the Creator, but also the Upholder, of all things. The universe would cease to be in a moment if God should leave it. So, also, the scheme of redemption was not only planned in the divine mind and set running by divine power, but the same mind and power continue with it through the ages. Jesus did not say to the apostles: "I have been with you and taught you; now go on and do the work." But he promised also: "I will send you another Comforter." Too many in this reformatory movement have seen in this no more than a promise of the inspiration of the apostles, and have wholly lost sight of the final promise: "I will be with you to the end of the world." In a masterly treatment of the subject, Bro. Jones recalls this promise.

The first chapter is on "Authority in Matters of Religion." Is there infallible authority in religion? If so, where is it centered, in the Pope? the Church? the Bible? Is there any infallible interpretation of the infallible authority? Protestants refer to the Bible as the infallible rule of faith and practice. But Protestants, while approving this rule, do not walk together, because they do not interpret the rule alike. Who shall decide which is the right interpretation? Discussing these questions, the author reaches the conclusion that: "Every man is to read and interpret the Bible for himself;" and adds: "Our definition of authority in the beginning was 'the right to command and enforce obedience.' The 'right to command,' has been considered. The 'right to enforce,' has no place in religion. Man can enforce nothing against God except to refuse God the privilege of enriching man's life. God can enforce nothing against man except the consequences of disobedience. An enforced religion destroys the essential elements in it—freedom and choice." (Pp. 32, 33.)

This chapter indicates the trend of the book. The Bible is the authority of God on the subject of religion. But it is not a mere creed formula and a ritual. It addresses itself at once to man's intellectual, emotional, and intuitional nature, and to his consciousness, as well. This is elaborated in the next three chapters headed respectively, "Without and Within," "The Letter and the Spirit," "The Real and the Formal." In chapter VI, under the heading, "The Word and the Spirit," the argument culminates. Chapter V, "Alexander Campbell on the Remission of Sins," and chapter VII, "Alexander Campbell on the Word and the Spirit," do not add anything to the argument of the book, and seem to have been inserted to show that the author has not introduced a novelty, but is calling attention to what was taught in the beginning, and was then partially lost sight of later on.

The closing chapter on "Righteousness and Law," is a very fitting conclusion to an excellent treatise on a very important, but somewhat neglected, subject. Among men there is righteousness required by custom, by law, by one's good intentions, and the "imputed righteousness" of the speculative theologians. But the true righteousness is by faith. The Apostle John says: "He that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 John 3, 7). To the present critic this seems to throw out one of Bro. Jones' "forms of righteousness," and perhaps two. Righteousness which is to be done, is "righteousness of character." The "righteousness which is by faith" is the character formed by our faith in Christ. "That life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God" (Gal. 2, 20). The Christian, believing in Jesus, is guided in his life by the words of Jesus as illustrated in Jesus' perfect life. I return for a brief space to chapter VI. I do not quite fully follow the author throughout this chapter; and yet it is very difficult to state my objection. When a foreigner learns the words and the formation of sentences in the English language, he may still not speak quite pure English for want of familiarity with that indefinable something we call the "idiom" of the language. So, also, those who speak or write in favor of the "indwelling" of the Holy Spirit as personal and literal, use forms of expression which I cannot adopt. When I am sure that John Smith is in St. Louis I am equally sure that he is not in Chicago or San Francisco. This localizing of the Spirit does not harmonize with my conception of the Omnipresence of God. God is everywhere. So also is the Spirit of God. Hence the presence, or "indwelling," of the Spirit must refer to the continuous influence for good exerted by the Holy Spirit on the human spirit. The mystery of this influence is as inscrutable as the fact of it is indisputable. As Bro. Jones very truly says: "The modus operandi by which one spirit touches and affects another has never yet been made clear." (P. 247.) God's fatherly oversight and divine care, protection, and guidance, cannot be overstated. But we cannot know the means and methods of divine providence. We can believe that God makes all things work together for good to his people, although we may not know how he does it.

Again: this divine presence and help is a matter of faith. It is not a "feeling sense" of the Spirit—it is not a "personal experience." "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith" (Eph. 3:17) is the key of understanding on this subject. We "live," "understand," and "walk," "by faith." (Heb. 10:38, 11:4, and 2 Cor. 5:7.) Experience is not faith. "Experimental religion" is not a religion of faith, but substitutes experience for faith. "I feel, and therefore I speak" is its perversion of 2 Cor. 4:13. Whatever tends to minimize faith and substitute experience for faith is wrong.

And again: this mysterious and all-pervading divine help adds no new lesson to that taught in the word. Its sole office is to lead men to understand, to believe, to trust, and to obey the word.

The only criticism I have to offer, sums up as follows: First. There seems to be a leaning in some expressions toward "experimental knowledge," which, with him who thinks he has it, tends to minimize the importance of faith in the word of God. Second. There is a suggestion of such an "indwelling" of the Spirit as cannot be harmonized with the ominipresence of God. And third. There is room for an inference that the "indwelling Spirit" gives a lesson supplementary to the word.

But these objections are partly removed by many such passages as the following: Referring to the sudden and full illumination of the apostles Bro. Jones adds: "Now if the Holy Spirit can thus immediately illuminate the human mind and give to it a supernatural perception and expression of truth, can he not immediately aid the human mind to the natural perception of truth? And is not this the meaning of the Savior when he speaks of the Holy Spirit as, 'the Spirit of truth,' and when he says to his disciples, 'he shall guide you into all truth'?" (P. 230.) Again, on p. 244, we read: "It is the light of the truth and the love of God as embodied in the gospel of Jesus Christ that are to convert the soul. And it is the office of the Holy Spirit to get that light and that love so impressed on the soul as to secure its conversion. All of which is to be achieved without infracting the established laws of man's spiritual nature or personal liberty and responsibility."

The defects indicated are overshadowed by so much, like these utterances, that is beyond criticism and there is, withal, such a continual reference to the word of God, and such a reverent dependence upon its counsels, that I accept "The Spiritual Side of Our Plea" as one of the most helpful and timely books ever produced.

[The inference of Bro. Franklin that since the "divine presence and help" of the Holy Spirit is "a matter of faith," it is therefore "not a personal experience," raises the question whether a Christian can have any personal experience of a religious character, since the whole of our religious life comes through faith. "We walk by faith, not by sight." We are saved by faith. Have we no "personal experience" of salvation? We believe we receive the Spirit through faith, and that, as a result, we have a "personal experience" of His presence and of the fruit thereof. Faith and religious experience are not mutually exclusive terms, but are related as cause and effect.—EDITOR.]

English Topics.

Catching the Craze.

Sometimes a craze crosses the Atlantic from Britain to America; sometimes one comes over to us from the west. You have sent us Christian Science, though for some few years it did not seem to catch on. It killed that clever journalist, Harold Frederic, whose case came up in the courts, two ladies, followers of Mrs. Eddy, being tried in London for causing the death of that young genius. They were acquitted, but Christian Science was disgraced and seemed to be effectually scotched by that miserable tragedy. However, we are now witnessing a recrudescence which threatens to develop in a formidable degree, for some of our English aristocracy have been fanatically bewitched. Lord Dunmore is writing long and frequent articles. He is seconded by other lordly people. The Earl of Dunmore is a clever nobleman. He is likely to find numbers of people ready to make a fashionable plaything of Christian Science, as the dilettante drawing room coteries of the west end toyed for awhile with theosophy under the patronage of Madame Blavatsky and Mrs. Besant. Here is a nice sample of the pabulum which is being supplied in our papers, on which many minds are greedily feeding. Lady Abinger writes: "I have found with my animals great help from Christian Science. I have a horse that some time ago caught a violent cold that settled on the lungs. The horse seemed past all remedies. Everything was done for him; the veterinary surgeon called in several times. Still the animal could not work, so after months of suffering, I telegraphed to a healer in London and in a couple of days all symptoms had gone." Thousands of people are likely to be caught by this kind of evidence of the miraculous power of Christian Science. Those who sneer at the miracles of Christ will swallow any sham tales of the supernatural if only they are sufficiently absurd.

The Death of Romanism.

Is it generally known that Popery is a dying faith? That is a fact. I yesterday morning went off to the Missionary Breakfast Meeting at Cannon Street Hotel of the Religious Tract Society. This mighty society publishes millions of tracts in all the written languages of the earth. It also employs many missionary agents. I heard some remarkable testimony from the Rev. Thomas Lewis, a missionary from the Congo, who addressed this meeting. This gentleman told the story of the city of St. Salvador. This remarkable spot on the west coast of Africa was in the Middle Ages a great Roman Catholic colony. It contained ten powerful churches and a great convent. "I have," said Mr. Lewis, "gone round about the ruins of those ten churches. They are all extinct. Their buildings lie in ghastly ruin. On the ruins of the convent we have built a fine Baptist Church. The Roman Catholic missionaries founded nothing that has lived. Their whole work has perished. They gave the people no Bible. They left them no literature. They reduced no language of Africa to writing. They did not even invent any alphabet." It seemed to me as I listened to this eloquent missionary that here we have a most vivid sample of the fate of Romanism. It only flourishes in those lands where it can fatten as a parasite on nobler communions. Popery strikes no root. It is but a hideous fungus. It is the noisome toadstool among religions. It lives on where it appropriates in Protestant countries some elements better than any that belong to its own system and where it wears a decent mask. What has happened on the Congo will happen to the apostate church everywhere. It is doomed and dying.

The True Babylon at Last.

One thing I have noticed in Americans which has pleased and interested me, because my own sympathies run so much in the same direction. They generally regard Oriental and archæological subjects with real and deep eagerness. We in England are at this moment paying much attention to the most recent Babylonian researches. The German explorers are this time to the front. They are just now doing a work in Assyrian regions similar to that of our Prof. Flinders Petrie in Egypt. Dr. Koldeway, the leader of the exploring party on the site of ancient Babylon, declares that the description of the city by Herodotus is right in its main facts, but wrong as to its extent. According to Herodotus, Babylon was as large as London, Paris and Berlin combined. But as a matter of fact, its real dimensions were about equal to one-fifth of the superficial area of London. The walls of Babylon, says the old Greek historian, were of enormous size and thickness. The German archæologists claim to have discovered that this was not so. The chief town was on the left bank of the Euphrates. It was built in the form of a triangle, the sides of which measured three, two and four miles. It was surrounded by walls which can still be traced. The diameter of the city was about ten miles. Several buildings have been unearthed which are easily located in the Bible. One of these is the Palace of Nebuchadnezzar. This is identical with the Schuana of the Old Testament. The New Year's day procession for the Temple of Marduk started from this point. The king was obliged to accompany it on pain of the forfeiture of his throne. The Babylon of the Bible is distinctly not the city but the palace of Nebuchadnezzar. The hill Babil is probably the ruins of the hanging gardens of Queen Semiramis. Many extremely interesting finds have been made, which show the extraordinary richness, elaboration and plenitude of detail of the decoration of the palace. Dr. Koldeway expects to be many years at work on the site of the true Babylon. Thus is light being constantly flung on the old sacred records. The old prophet said, "Truth shall spring out of the earth," and out of the earth it is truly springing at a startling rate in our days. Scepticism must be staggered at the accumulating testimony supplied by the spade of the explorers.

The Next Theology.

Directly any great foreign book becomes at all famous it is translated into English. Two remarkable works have this week been given to the public in English dress, translated from the German, which will be eagerly read by thoughtful, religious people. One of these, and in some respects the more important, is Adolf Harnack's "What is Christianity?" which has been this year creating quite a sensation in Germany. The other is Friedrich Nippold's "The Papacy in the Nineteenth Century."

The two books present little in common. Indeed, they are in vivid contrast with each other. Harnack's Lectures were delivered in the University of Berlin, in his vehement style of extempore eloquence, without any notes, and were taken down in shorthand and printed in German exactly as they were delivered spoken. In Germany Catholicism is something separate from Christianity, either good or bad, according to the claim of its professors. In England and America, on the contrary, everybody is in a sense Catholic. Not so in Germany. Harnack seeks to tell us how the "Catholic Church" came into existence. Christianity was before it. Harnack contends that Catholicism is only Christian by containing within itself the core or kernel of original Christianity. Sometimes, he would seem to hint, it in fact ceases to be Christian at all. But yet he makes out that without Catholicism, Christianity would not have lived at all. He has a very eloquent passage on the destruction of paganism, the triumph over the world which was assured by the beginning of the fourth century; and this triumph, he honestly confesses, was won, not by Christianity as he understands it, but by the Catholic Church. Now, what does Harnack mean by Christianity? He rightly means the actual teaching of Jesus Christ. It is delightful to recognize the intense religious fervor, the glow of enthusiasm with which he approaches this subject. These academical discourses are in parts more like passionate mission preaching. The eloquence carries one away. But when the passion subsides we begin to wonder what it is about. For this Jesus Christ, of whom the lecturer speaks, what is he? To tell the plain, sober truth on retrospect, he is a poor creature. Harnack accepts as historical only the synoptic gospels and not too much of them. From them he draws the picture of one whom we must pronounce a weak enthusiast. The man so drawn does not inspire us with confidence, but only with an infinite pity. Not for his right hand is the victory that overcometh the world. He is an amiable propounder of paradox. He is a failure and nothing more, crushed by the iron hardness of a world to which he will not submit and which he is powerless to reform. In fact, the Jesus whom Harnack depicts is the same person whom writers of feeble imagination picture as coming to London or Chicago and speedily succumbing to adverse circumstances. Harnack's enthusiasm, when weighed and measured, leaves us chilled and sceptical. It is plain that the German professor thinks that Christ and his apostles had little to do with the spread of Christianity. St. Paul was the true apostle. It is above all difficult to make out what Harnack means by the resurrection. But it is certain that he thinks it of very little importance. Here then we are confronted with the latest and most fashionable form of theological teaching on the continent. There are signs that it is about to affect English thought and also American. Harnack is much talked of and much written about at this moment in learned circles in England.

His influence will be too much on the side of scepticism to be of benefit. A school will arise which will be small but influential for a time and which will combine evangelistic enthusiasm with non-evangelical opinion. The combination will not work. There will be a lack of fuel to sustain the simulated fervor. It will be like a painted fire. But there is one merit in Harnack. He is in vehement antagonism to Catholicism as a present force. Its day, he says, is past; its work is finished. Now, in contrast to Harnack, the Jena professor, Nippold, declares that what German religion wants is more Catholicism. The benefit of this book by Nippold is that it gives a most romantic and fascinating account of the progress and influence of papal religion in America.

WILLIAM DURBAN.

Current Literature.

There is one problem which rises up in connection with the question of Christian union and refuses to down. We refer to that of baptism. Mr. D. G. Porter, of Waterbury, Conn., is the author of a recent tract on the subject, Baptism: The Act, its Significance and Importance, and its Relation to Christian Union, which, because of its clearness, its cogency, its strength of argument, and the point of view of the author, who deals with it in its relation to Christian union, is a noteworthy tract for the times, and should receive the attention of those who are interested in the subject of Christian union and therefore in the removal of all obstacles out of the way of such union. No question, it has been said, is ever permanently settled until it is settled right, and there will probably never be peace on this question until we have gotten down to the bedrock of Tew Testament teaching on the subject and are loyal to it. Mr. Porter has written not only pointedly and forcibly, but with a spirit that is broad and sympathetic with whatever is true and right. The treatise covers twenty-six pages and covers not only the action, but the subject and the place of baptism in the redemptive scheme. We commend it heartily as a worthy contribution to the solution of one of the most difficult problems involved in the effort to promote Christian unity. (Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis.)

The life of Irene Petrie by Mrs. Ashley Carus-Wilson is another of the thrilling missionary biographies which have recently been appearing in considerable numbers. The introduction is by Robert E. Speer who commends it as the best of all books of its kind. Though one need not go to the length of a superlative, perhaps, to do it justice, it is in every respect an admirable and useful book. Miss Petrie, born in London in good society and presented at court at an early age, came, not by a sudden and revolutionary conversion but by the gradual progress of Christian growth, to the conviction that it was her duty to give her life to the foreign missionary work. She chose India for her field and labored for four years in the northern province of Punjab and later in Kashmir. Her early death on the field was at once a great blow to her friends and a severe loss to the work. With the story of her missionary experiences is connected much general information about the operations of the Church Missionary Society, the great Anglican organization with which she was connected. The copious extracts from her letters and journals reveal a power of keen observation and a sense of the picturesque which it is natural to expect in an artist, as she was. The volume contains a good deal of detail which will prove interesting to those already interested in Miss Petrie's life and work, but which the average reader could have spared without appreciable loss. Still, it is a readable as well as an instructive book and will give much information, which will be new to most readers, about north India and Kashmir. Missionary libraries ought to have it. (Revell. $1.50. Illustrated.)

There was more than the usual number of clerical pilgrims to Palestine last year and in consequence there is more than the usual number of books of travel from their pens this summer. Charles R. Scoville's letters of travel appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a booklet has now appeared from one of his traveling companions, L. E. Brown, entitled, Europe and the Orient as We Saw it. It begins by depicting the agony of breaking home ties, describes the voyage with full details as to the measurements of the ship and its various equipments and other information of a not too thrilling sort, and tells just who was seasick and where and how. These details of the voyage have not been seriously in need of elucidation since Dickens wrote his American Notes half a century ago. The narrative of the journey across Europe to Palestine and back proceeds with sufficient minuteness so that the reader who is anxious to know just where the party was at any given point of time and in just what order they viewed the various sights need not be at a loss. The author's oft-repeated complaint of being fleeced and robbed at every turn by hotel-keepers and others whose business it is to make their living off of travellers, merely indicates the disadvantage of traveling in a large party and following in the footsteps of the throng of tourists. His remark that they were "everywhere confronted with the English language" explains much. One may travel Europe over without confronting the English language to any considerable extent, and by patronizing the places which the natives patronize one will escape most of the fleecing to which the typical tourist is subjected. Our Budget.

—Remember the great Christian Endeavor Convention, Cincinnati, July 5-9.

—These are the largest interdenominational gatherings in the world's history. They furnish interesting matter for studying the religious situation.

—Japan, following the example of America, India and South Africa, is to have a national Christian Endeavor field secretary. Mr. I Inanuma, a Methodist minister, has been appointed and will have his headquarters at Kobe.

—A friend of the foreign society donated $1,500 on the annuity plan. This fund of the society is growing at a rapid rate. This special fund is now about $120,000.

—The Children's day offerings should be sent to F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio, promptly before the summer vacations begin. Every school should help to swell the offerings to at least $50,000 from this source. The children are making a good record. Keep it up.

—The death of James Chalmers, the missionary who has recently fallen a victim to the cannibals of New Guinea, reminds us that the heroic age of missions is not yet passed and that the foreign field is still claiming its martyrs. Chalmers has been called the Livingstone of New Guinea and few missionaries have had more thrilling experiences and hair-breadth escapes than he. A new edition of his life will soon be published.

—J. M. Philputt, pastor of the Lenox Ave. Church, New York City, will spend the summer with his brother, A. B. Philputt, of Indianapolis. He is just recovering from a spell of typhoid fever and his church has granted him a two months' vacation for good rest. The Lenox Ave. Church has had the most successful year in its history, and throughout the illness of their pastor the members have been most loyal and devoted to him and the work.

—W. A. Baldwin, corresponding secretary for Nebraska, reminds the Nebraska churches that the missionary year closes June 30, and that there are but a few days left in which to send a remittance to be credited on this year's receipts. There is a tendency in Nebraska, as elsewhere, to allow a few faithful churches to bear the burden of the missionary work which should be borne by all. What is needed is for the others to brace up and do their share, and do it in a hurry.

—M. Cambon, ambassador, is reported as saying that not trade relations but intellect will prevent future wars among civilized nations. "The intellectual man of any nation is the brother and true well-wisher of every other intellectual man in the world." True, perhaps, but a majority of the people in any nation are not what the French diplomat would call "intellectual." It strikes us that the teaching of the great Galilean Prophet, who taught that all men are our brothers, whether educated or ignorant, civilized or barbarian, is about the only thing that can prevent future wars.

—A summer institute lasting nearly three weeks, August 5-24, will be held at Bethany, Neb., under the auspices of the Nebraska Christian Ministerial Association. C. A. Young, of Chicago, will lecture twice daily throughout the session, giving studies in the major and minor prophets. W. P. Aylesworth, Chancellor of Cotner University, will conduct a class in homiletics and pastoral theology, and there will be special lectures by Sumner T. Martin, L. A. Hussong, Prof. Alvin Evans, F. W. Emerson, L. P. Bush, J. W. Hilton, W. T. Hilton, D. A. Wickizer and others. The tuition is $5 for the entire institute. Board and room can be obtained for $2.50 a week and upwards. The plan of this institute is thoroughly commendable and we are glad to note that such enterprises are becoming more numerous in various regions. All correspondence in regard to the institute should be addressed to R. A. Schell, Hebron, Neb.

—The Fifth International Epworth League Convention will be held in San Francisco, July 18-20. A great convention is predicted and many will doubtless take advantage of this opportunity to visit the Pacific slope.

—The church at Oswego, Kan., will be without a pastor after August 6, H. J. Aldrich having resigned. A man is wanted to take up the work at once. The church has about 100 members in a town of 2,500, and will pay $500 or $600.

—A. B. Houze, of Riverside, Cal., has accepted a call to the church at Little Flat Rock, Ind., where he was pastor three years before going to California. During his two years' ministry at Riverside 125 have been added to the church and missionary offerings increased.

—Now it is Beloit College, of Wisconsin, whose endowment has recently made an increase of $350,000. Dr. Pearsons, of Chicago, offered $200,000 on condition that the institution would otherwise raise $150,000. The wide-awake trustees went to work themselves without the aid of a solicitor and secured the money. Dr. Pearsons compliments them for their energy and tells them their money is ready. He also commends their example to other trustees.

—There is a Christian Endeavor Society of 100 members in the New Hebrides, composed of men who were recently cannibals. The society goes twice a week to hold services in the villages where a converted chief was killed not long ago in protecting Mr. Frank Paton, son of Dr. J. G. Paton, from the fury of the savages. John G. Paton has left London after a remarkable farewell meeting at Exeter Hall, and is now on his way back to the New Hebrides.

—We call attention again to the appeal that is being made in behalf of the First Church of Christ in Jacksonville, Fla. Ninety-three families in this church were burned out in the recent fire, suffering an average loss of about $1,000 per family. The total loss of the congregation is therefore approximately $93,000. The congregation has grown in the last three years from 105 to 350 members and the Bible-school from 36 to 300. Such work as this deserves the encouragement of the brotherhood in this hour of need. The Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian and M E. Churches in Jacksonville have already received substantial aid from their brethren and will build better houses than they had before the fire. Our congregation should be enabled to do likewise. This appeal has the approval of the Florida Christian Convention. All offerings for this cause should be sent to B. L. Smith, Cincinnati, distinctly marked for the First Church, Jacksonville.

—The Fourth Christian Church of Indianapolis, in remodeling and refurnishing its building, proposes to put in a large front memorial window in memory of the late Henry R. Pritchard. For many years previous to his death Bro. Pritchard was a member of this congregation and it is fitting that the memorial should be placed here. The plan has the approval of Mrs. Pritchard and the family and of the Indianapolis ministers. The committee invites contributions from churches and individuals for this window in honor of the last of Indiana's pioneer preachers. It is not a matter of local interest merely, but one in which the whole brotherhood should be interested. Churches in Indiana especially should seize this opportunity to honor the memory of one whom they all knew and loved. Contributions should be sent at an early date to the pastor, G. M. Anderson, 601 W. 11th St., Indianapolis.

—The church at South Omaha has made a start toward raising money for a new lot and building.

—J. B. Mayfield has accepted the pastorate of the church at Gallatin, Mo., and has entered upon his work.

—Joe Shelby Riley would be glad to make engagements with churches in need of evangelistic and pastoral work. Address 915 W. 5th St., Waterloo, Ia.

—Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Chapman, of the Constantinople mission, will leave Turkey about July 1 to return to America. Their address after their return will be Greensburg, Ind.

—The Disciples Divinity House, University of Chicago, has received $5,000 from Mrs. Ellen M. Thomas, of Frankfort, Ky., for the endowment fund to be known as the "Ellen M. Thomas Endowment Fund."

—We regret to learn that Brother R. L. McHatton, now in Kansas City, is sick in a hospital in that city. His correspondents who have found their recent letters unanswered will know the reason.

—A. C. McKeever, who has been pastor of the church at Fresno, Cal., since last September, on a temporary engagement, has been called by a unanimous vote of the church to serve the church indefinitely as its pastor. The resolution passed by the congregation is highly complimentary both to Bro. McKeever and his wife and to the work which they have accomplished.

—The Fourth Christian Church at Akron, O., was dedicated June 16, by L. L. Carpenter, who claims Akron for his old home, since he was born and raised within five miles of that place. An indebtedness of $5,000 on the new house was provided for on the dedication day. W. D. VanVoorhis, a Butler College graduate and former student at the University of Chicago, is pastor of the church.

—A. D. Strang, of Texarkana, Ark , writes that he has lost his son, Max Strang, seven years old, and will be under obligations to any one who can give information as to his whereabouts. The boy was put on the north bound Cotton Belt train at Waco, Tex., on June 1, but either left the train or was taken from it before reaching home. It is feared that he has been kidnaped. A scar over the right eye is a distinguishing mark. Any information sent to Mr. Strang will be thankfully received and liberally rewarded.

—The Foreign Society has arranged for F. M. Rains to visit China and Japan this summer. He will leave San Francisco about the first of August. It would be better if he could go round the world and see all the work that the Society is doing. But he cannot be spared from the Mission Rooms that length of time. As a result of this visit he will be able to talk more intelligently about the work and to make a stronger plea in its behalf. Not only so, but he will be able to give wiser counsel in all that relates to the management of the work on the field. John W. Foster, one of the warmest friends of the missionary cause, who has spent much time in the East, gives it as his conviction that the missionary societies should have one of their secretaries visit the field every year. The M. E. Church has a bishop all the time in the Orient. As soon as one returns another starts to take his place. A visit from some one at home puts courage and hope and joy into the souls of the workers and is a notable event in the lives of the converts. No missionary society has ever had a more faithful or more self-sacrificing officer than F. M. Rains. He has put his life without stint into the work. In his time the receipts have increased nearly threefold. He is entitled to the rest and the recreation that the trip abroad will give him. As he goes he can have the assurance that the prayers and best wishes of the brethren whom he has served in the gospel will go with him all the way.

To Disciples in Virginia.

The approaching summer season furnishes the best opportunities for successful evangelistic work in the country districts. The state board have been studying for some time how to conduct such a campaign as will reach the greatest number of places and do the greatest good. We hope to make some very gratifying announcements at an early date. The brethren and sisters of the state have been responding quite liberally to the appeals made by our financial secretary, Bro. William Jackson Shelburne, but a number of these contributions have been in the shape of pledges to be paid at a future date. It will facilitate matters very considerably if the persons making these pledges will pay the same as promptly as possible, thus enabling the state board to prosecute the work and avoid the possibility of going into debt.

The Disciples of this state are urged to concentrate their prayers and energies in behalf of Virginia missions, that the primitive gospel may be carried to all sections and permanently established. It is not so difficult to hold brief meetings, but the problem of maintaining and supporting the mission points open is one that can hardly be solved except by careful planning and liberal contributions.

Illinois Notes.

The state meeting at Springfield Sept. 9-12 promises to be large and enthusiastic.

The cause at Toluca is prospering in the hands of A. R. Adams and many are coming into the church.

J. W. Kilborn made an address in the sixth district convention on state missions that was remarkable for its power.

A man recently asked for work as a minister, but on inquiry was found to be a drinker. When confronted with the facts he said in wrath, "I do not propose to have anything further to do with missionary secretaries." That of course set us down just where we ought to be! Such characters do not have much respect or love for boards and secretaries and they are loud in declaring their feelings. However, some churches will continue to believe the stories of the ministerial crook and look upon him as a saint suffering persecution. He can cry, pray and lie all in the same breath and it looks "good" to many soft headed people, but the awakening is sure to come. A clean preacher does not wander over the country without any place to hail from. If he comes to a church a stranger he can refer to some well known brethren and it pleases him to have the brethren look him up. Beware of the man who has a large bundle of recommendations, hails from nowhere, is asking no pay for service, over pious and tells that all preachers are against him out of jealousy because he is able to beat them preaching. Many churches will open their houses to a man and trust the honor of the cause to him when they would not loan him a dollar. Know your man before he is allowed to preach.

Our board is unable to pay the appropriation to the churches at Rockford and Fulton. The preachers there are just as heroic missionaries of the cross as any in the world and deserve better treatment and a more perfect fellowship from their brethren.

Cotner Commencement.

The twelfth of June closed the best year at Cotner for a number of years past. The attendance at the exercises from without the immediate vicinity, in spite of rains, was such as to indicate a growing interest in the institution. The meetings of the board of trustees were well attended and full of wise planning for the future of the institution. It cost no little sacrifice upon the part of faithful teachers to adhere to the rule to close each year out of debt, but it was accomplished. The feeling on all sides is that an immediate and earnest effort must be made to enlarge the foundation of the school. The beautiful property recently appraised by conservative business men appointed by the court, in connection with the securing of the new charter, stands for only fifteen dollars less than one hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars. To allow such a property to remain unendowed in this great western center would be a monument of shame to a great brotherhood. During a few weeks before the closing of the spring term, more than $5,000 was secured, and the good work will be pushed vigorously during the coming year. It is hoped that at least $25,000 may be secured in this way before another commencement.

The exercises were unusually good. The address by Hon. E. J. Burkett on commencement morning was a slight departure from our old custom of calling in one of our own orators, but it was able and entertaining. He is congressman from the Lincoln district, so long represented by Mr. Bryan, and is a warm friend of the institution.

The country never looked more beautiful at this season as seen from the university window as I write. Its prospect of fruitfulness gives promise of a prosperous year for Cotner, whose support depends so largely upon the products of the soil. W. P. AYLSWORTH.

It may be of some interest to many of our readers to see how our country grows. Excluding Porto Rico and the Philippines we have grown in area and population as shown in the census tables in the year indicated in the following fashion:

Last Bun of Supper.

'Tis the last bun of supper,
Left steaming alone;
And its light brown companions
Are buttered and gone;
No bun of its kindred,
No cookie is nigh,
To steam on the platter,
Or near its mate lie.

I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
To meet a cold fate,
Since thy mates are all eaten,
Come lie on my plate.
Thus kindly I'll butter
Thy toasted sides o'er,
And think on thy sweetness
When thou art no more.

Thus all bread must follow,
Three times every day,
When the meal time approaches
It must vanish away,
When hunger is mighty
And sickness has flown,
What bun can inhabit
The table alone?

Those who have purchased and read The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century are most enthusiastic in their praise of the book. It should be borne in mind that this book is not merely a reprint of the articles that ran through the Christian-Evangelist during 1899. The several authors have completely revised, rewritten and amplified their contributions, adding a great deal of entirely new matter. We urge all our readers to send at once for this volume. It will give them a clearer and better understanding of the origin, growth and triumph of our cause than they can otherwise gain. Price, postpaid, $2.00. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis

Correspondence.

In St. Louis.

The District C. W. B. M. convention held Friday, June 21st, at the West End Church, was well attended and well managed. There are eleven auxiliaries in the city, with a total membership of 304. All of them maintain Junior Mission Bands, circulate the Missionary Tidings, and seek to leaven the churches with missionary zeal and knowledge. The pastors are unanimous supporters of this splendid work, and several of them were present at the convention and spoke encouragingly to the delegates and visitors. R. M. Talbert, pastor of the church at Farmington, Mo., attended and delivered a most excellent address. He also responded to a toast at a meeting of one of our clubs the night before. There were several visitors from De Soto, Mo. Mrs. E. J. Gantz is the efficient president, and Mrs. W. D. Harrison the secretary of this district. These conventions are held quarterly, and are always means of grace and seasons of refreshing.

After long years of hard work, years of faith and courage and sacrifice, the Fourth Church has provided itself with a commodious building. A Bible-school room, with a capacity of several hundred, has been added to the rear of the auditorium, separated from it by roller partitions, so that the combined auditoriums give a seating capacity of about eight hundred. The old part of the building has been thoroughly renovated, reseated, carpeted, etc. They now have a modest but spacious building, quite suited to the demands of that section of the city.

Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., delivered the dedicatory address at 3:30 P. M., June 23rd. One of the most representative audiences of St. Louis Disciples ever assembled greeted him, and the responses to the appeal for help to pay off a balance of $2,500 were prompt and generous, aggregrating $2,700. While a number of brethren from other churches gave liberally, the members of the Fourth unflinchingly assumed the heaviest part of the burden. The energetic pastor, E. T. McFarland, was happy, and in spite of the heat, the audience was patient and attentive. Of course, the sermon was masterly.

Miss Mattie Burgess is visiting in St. Louis this week. She spoke for the Second Church and Beulah on the 23d, and will visit the Fifth and Fourth on the 30th. In the intervening time she will devote herself to Ellendale and Carondelet, calling on the people in their homes. She spoke at the C. W. B. M. convention, and won new friends for the great work she so ably represents.

Frank O. Fannon leaves the First church and St. Louis, for Sedalia, Mo. The whole town regrets this, because he is a most lovable man, and because he is peculiarly qualified for the work he was doing. He has few equals for evangelistic fervor, and his successes have been encouraging, if not even surprising.

Paul H. Castle, of Centralia, Ill., and —— McFarland, from Kansas, a brother of E. T., visited St. Louis June 23rd. G. E. Ireland has been called to Carondelet, and it is hoped he will accept. O. A. Bartholomew has accepted the work of city superintendent of missions, and will begin as soon as West End can be supplied with a new pastor. His wide acquaintance in the city and suburbs will make him very useful in this important post.

Summer has come. It is a violent case. But the heat, which might be intolerable, is relieved by balmy breezes, and the pressure of daily business diverts the mind. Church attendance diminishes during the heated term, and will continue to until church architects become as wise as the children of this world, and build roof gardens on the churches, instead of roller coasters.

The Men's Club of Mt. Cabanne Church was entertained last Thursday at the Cabanne Club, and the ladies were invited. More than a hundred were present, and the affair was voted a success. The Central has a flourishing Men's Club, which cultivates the social life of the church.

FRANK G. TYRRELL.

Texas Letter.

Strange as it may seem to the people of the north, it is true that our best season for protracted meetings down south is during the summer. When it is cold and sleeting and snowing and blowing your people brave the elements and go to church, but when the sun is hot they go somewhere else, or do not go at all. It is just the reverse with us. Let it snow or blow, rain or sleet, and your audience does not materialize. But when the thermometer is playing about the 95 to 100 mark your crowds, fan in hand, are there to meet you. I suppose this grows out of the fact that you have so much "ugly" weather that you become used to it, and we have so little of it that it always frightens us.

Let me note a few of the meetings of Texas: R. R. Hamlin recently assisted Pastor Schoonover of Greenville in a great meeting, with 90 additions. J. V. Updike assisted Pastor Holsapple of Sherman in a series of meetings in the opera house with 41 additions. J. H. O. Smith and Prof. Brower closed a few days since a meeting with Pastor Sweeney of Gainesville, with 50 additions. These evangelists are now at work in Bonham with "Uncle Charlie" Carlton. Bro. Hamlin is engaged in a promising meeting with his home forces at McKinney. Wilson and Huston are in a great meeting with A. E. Ewell at Waxahachie, with almost a hundred converts. C. McPherson is assisting Bro. Weaver of Van Alstyne in a series of meetings. Sanders and Douthitt are storming the walls of Rockwall. Leak and Webb are at work at Wortham. J. W. Marshall is in the midst of promising work at Ferris. Jno. L. Andrews is holding a meeting at a mission point in Waco. These are not all, but they are all that I can think of just now. But surely they are enough to prove my proposition that warm weather is the protracted meeting season down here in Dixie.

But this is not all. The Pan-Handle region is soon to have a big tent meeting at Claude, with Thos. Nance as the ruling spirit, and Seymour is the place of the fourth annual camp meeting of northwest Texas, which begins July 25 and continues eleven days.

Dr. J. W. Lowber, of Austin, recently preached a sermon on "God's Revelation to Adam," which was published in the city papers. He claims that "there is nothing in Genesis to contradict theistic evolution." He thinks "the early chapters of Genesis are poems," and that when their poetic nature is understood no serious critic can find any fault with them."

Ellsworth Faris, our missionary from the Congo in Africa, is on his first furlough with his parents in this city. He is a Texas boy, and the church is proud of him and is extending him a most cordial welcome. At our Waco convention he was greeted with enthusiastic love and heard with marked attention. He spoke for us at the Central Church of this city one Sunday evening, and the people were delighted.

Our Presbyterian friends have located their college at Waxahachie. The people gave them property worth $80,000.

A Veteran at Rest.

B. S. Campbell, of Hopkinsville, Ky., recently laid down the burden and the cross of a long and influential life. Under the prospering influences of a genial providence, he had reached the goal of a nonogenarian when, as "a shock of corn cometh in its season," he was gathered to his fathers in peace.

Like Muason of Cyprus, Mr. Campbell was an early Disciple. His conviction of the expediency of the movement of the Disciples toward a closer union of believers in Christ was not shaken by the experience of many years of observation, nor did his faith in the ultimate achievement of its purpose ever waver.

Mr. Campbell was foremost and conspicuous in every work that contemplated the progress of the gospel at home or abroad. In his relation to the educational and missionary needs of the world, he was unselfish in his purpose and was liberal in the use of his means. He was a trustworthy friend of our foreign and domestic societies, and of South Kentucky College in particular, among educational institutions, and was a generous contributor to their treasuries.

George Poindexter, E. H. Hopper, Dr. D. J. Gish and B. S. Campbell, were the distinguished quaternion of superior men that led the congregation in Hopkinsville to the front rank of Kentucky churches. Mr. Campbell was the last of this group to pass away, the beloved John permitted to outnumber the other three in years, the final link that connected a prosperous present with a distinguished past.

Those men were the presbyters of the church and were the guiding spirits in the directorate of South Kentucky College when the writer had the honor of forming their acquaintance. Truer friends or wiser counsellors an immature and inexperienced preacher could not hope to find.

Mr. Campbell was one of the most widely known citizens of Kentucky, a man of extensive business experience and of the most sterling character. He had fine natural faculties, keen penetrative wisdom, a bright and delicate humor, and a soundness and sobriety of judgment that inspired confidence. In addition, he had a pure heart, and one that held his friends in enduring remembrance.

His life did not grow drear and bleak under the snows of ninety winters. He exercised study and love, activity and meditation, and kept his body and his mind and his heart in parallel vigor.

Like Milton, the Puritan poet, a shadow fell round the path of B. S. Campbell, and for the last three years or four it was dark. It was not an eclipse of faith. Behind this outer vestment of darkness, impenetrable to light of star or sun, shone the light of love and peace.

The Author's Experiences.

U. S. Consul Pike, of Port Luis, Mauritius, has written a charming book upon this gem of the ocean, the home of Paul and Virginia.

Col. Pike, whose New York address is 43 Exchange Place, had a curious experience with coffee and the beverage almost destroyed his eyesight.

He says, "Speaking of coffee, my first warning against its use was insomnia followed by depression, and despondency. The nervous system was in such a condition that I could not attend to business, and to my distress I discovered that my eyesight was becoming more and more imperfect every day. From my knowledge of the symptoms of coffee poisoning, I concluded to leave off the coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee in its place.

The results were astonishing. Gradually my eyesight recovered, and the nervous condition and depressed feeling disappeared. I have now been using Postum in place of coffee for several years and am in perfect health.

My family of six persons discarded coffee some time ago and use Postum. I would not be without it. It is a most valuable addition to the breakfast table and should be in every household."

Missouri Mission Notes.

The great Bible-school convention of Missouri for 1901 is a thing of the past, and we are all rejoicing that it was such a great success. True the attendance was not so large as the previous year at California; in this we were all disappointed, for Sedalia is such a centrally located place, so easy of access, that an extra large convention was confidently looked for. But in every other respect the convention was a great one. The report of the board for the year's work was a splendid showing of faithful work by the men in the field, and of wise management and tireless energy on the part of the corresponding secretary. The treasurer's report showed a larger amount of money raised than ever before. Such reports put the convention in the very best of humor to enjoy the splendid program, and to make such pledges for the next year's work as to indicate determination to constantly push this feature of the state mission work.

The convention opened on Monday afternoon with the Christian Endeavor period, under the chairmanship of C. E. Hill, our efficient Christian Endeavor president. This part of the program was a splendid one, full of meat from the very first word to the final Amen. It is a pity that the minutes of this part of the program are not published with those of the Bible school period, in fact, are not published at all, and we hope that another year arrangements will be made to publish the whole convention.

It is gratifying to know that the same board that has done so much in the last several years, is continued for another year's service, and that the efficient secretary is to continue. There was great contention as to where the next convention should be. The committee reported in favor of Maryville, and this, after much pleasant rivalry on the part of Carrollton and Fulton, prevailed. They will give lodging and breakfast free, charging for dinner and supper.

Conventions are now the order of the day. Platte district begins at Weston, Monday, July 8 Grand River, Breckenridge, Monday, July 15. Clinton district, Pleasant Hill, July 17. Atchison county, Rock Port, Monday, July 22. Montgomery, Bellflower, July 24-26. Hickory, Wheatland, July 29 31. These are all I have for July now. If any others are to be held that month I will be grateful if they will communicate with me at once.

It is especially desirable that the preachers of the Clinton district make an effort to be at their convention. We must rally our cause in that territory, or suffer loss. We ask as a special favor that each preacher do his best to make that convention a great success.

The all-day mission rally at Two Mile Branch in Montgomery, June 16, was a great one. At 9:30 there were Children's day exercises. Then the writer preached, and the collection which followed both services amounted to $50. In the afternoon W. G. Surber, the pastor, preached a great sermon on the divinity of Jesus. At Jonesburg I met W. D. McCully, the pastor, and we had a delightful meeting. They gave more than two and one-half times their apportionment.

The Bible-school and C. E. Convention is gone. Now for state missions in earnest. We want every preacher at Mexico, and we want some of his members to come with him. We want the greatest convention in all our history. We want to report the greatest work, the greatest receipts, in fact, to have a regular jubilee of a time. This is the first state missionary convention in the twentieth century; let us make it glorious. We want to get 300 more contributing churches in these three last months; we can do it with all the preachers helping. Please see your church or churches at once.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The improved tone of work and appearance at Central Christian College is a pleasure to every one interested in educational work. J. W. Ellis and his corps of teachers have improved the opportunity in the instruction of the students so that it is common consent that this is one of the best years of the school, as many of us knowing the president believed would be the result when he accepted the place, while there are no better men in his line of work in the west than Breckenridge, and this is manifest in the praises of all the students as well as the citizens, who delight to do him honor, as on the evening of his lecture. If satisfactory arrangements can be made to retain the present faculty it is the dawning of a brighter day for the Central, at which the brotherhood will rejoice.

A. G. Alderman and his devoted wife have accepted work under the C. W. B. M., so that the Albany pulpit will soon be vacant. Missouri has given no truer or more efficient workers to any field than these and the state Bible-school work especially will feel their loss keenly. God bless and prosper them both.

John Giddens gave nearly the entire month to work in Wright and Texas counties and with best of results, so that we now have 21 schools in the county.

R. B. Havener did a work at Moundville that revived every department of the church and the brethren are very hopeful again, the permanency now depending upon their selection of a minister, over which brethren are praying and studying.

Union Star is where B. F. Hill and W. A. Chapman did such successful work last fall and where the Stantons and McDonalds are so devoted now, and where Ellis Davis is leading the school so joyously all the time, so that the congregation is growing into one of our best churches, taking part in all the fellowship of the cause, as one would expect under such teaching and living.

There have fallen some heavy shadows over the Orchid congregation since my pleasant work with them last summer, and the school has been decimated by the deaths of Homer Hockenberry, his dear old father and the wife of J. L., all of whom were such good friends to this work and your secretary, and the list is not near complete. But thanks to the promises of the gospel we have our hopes of meeting them in the last great day. They lived for Him and He has taken them home.

For years the burden of debt came near ruining the church at Milford, but at his visit last summer John Giddens put in Bro. Rogers as preacher and now the debt is paid, the church is revived, the house dedicated and all are happy and another little band in south Missouri thanks God for state Bible-school work.

One of the best meetings of the year was at Drexel and the pastor, A. O. Ishmael, did the work, resulting in more than one hundred additions, nearly all of them from the school where Bro. Ishmael does such good work. Our rally was just after the meeting and was "union" in every sense of the word and was fine in its program, in the co-operation of the workers of Drexel and in the good results following, so that all were glad to be there and participate, for the giving was very general and most generous, thanks to the one leading in all of it.

THE NEW BABY

Opens up a new world to the loving mother. If it is a strong, healthy baby that new world is a world of happiness. If it is a weak, fretful child the new world is full of anxiety. It has been proven in thousands of cases, that the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes all the difference between strength and weakness in children. Healthy, happy mothers have healthy, happy children. "Favorite Prescription" gives the mother strength to give her child. It makes the baby's advent practically painless and promotes the secretion of the nourishment necessary to the healthful feeding of the nursing child.

"I have been using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and can say it is just what you advertise it to be," writes Mrs. Victor J. Hadin, of Leonardsville, Riley Co., Kansas. "I began taking it just two months before baby came and was greatly benefited by its use. The doctor who attended me said I did about as well as any one he had seen (as I was sick only about three hours), and also that your 'Favorite Prescription' was 'one patent medicine' which he did have faith in. We now have a darling baby boy, strong and healthy, who weighed nine pounds when born. During this month he has gained three and one-half pounds. Have never given him one dose of medicine."

Notes From Eastern Kentucky.

By R. B. Neal.

Young Bro. J. W. Flynn is engaged in a meeting at Upper Wilson. There is no church house of any kind there. This is the place where I met eight Utah elders during a grove meeting. It is a great go-to-meeting point, a veritable mission field, and one that would repay cultivating. The Mormons have quite a hold there, but it is because others have neglected the point.

We are in our new house at Fall's Branch. When I spoke there last 4th of July I spoke in the woods. It was also a church-houseless neighborhood. I held meetings at Anglin and Buckeye, the two nearest school houses, as I could. Organized in December with forty members. We began a house of worship, the first and only one in that vicinity. Bro. Flynn located there. This young church is worthy of aid. Who will present it with a Bible, a communion set, or a pulpit?

At our last county meeting we made a twentieth century movement for mission work. Carter is a pauper county. We now have but one church "set in order" in it. That is at Grayson. We determined to form a Gospel Investment Company, a joint stock company to evangelize the county. The shares were fixed at five dollars each, the minimum number of shares 100, the maximum 500. Solicitors were appointed who, when 100 shares of stock were subscribed, were to call a meeting of the shareholders to appoint directors and organize. Over 100 shares are now subscribed for, and July 1 the stockholders will meet to organize. 'Rah for Carter! We will press on for the 500 shares.

In the teeth of gloomy predictions and fierce warnings the foes of the saloons and friends of the school went into the battle. Rowan county is redeemed from the open saloon curse. Morehead Normal College will rest no longer under the shadow of licensed drink shops. The saloonocrats were routed horse, foot and dragoons in the whole county. The majority was grand enough to easily hold the ground gained.

Bethany Assembly, Season 1901.

The annual encampment meeting of the Bethany Assembly Association will be held on the beautiful grounds of Bethany Park, beginning on Friday, July 26, and closing on Monday, August 12. The grounds, always beautiful, are this year more beautiful than ever before. With the experience of the past years, the managers feel certain that the meeting of 1901 will be more pleasant and more instructive than ever before. No pains will be spared to make our first 20th century meeting the best.

The meetings will continue only over three Lord's days, and these should be days for thousands of Disciples to gather from all parts of our country, to sit together in heavenly places in Jesus Christ.

Children's day, Saturday, July 27, will no doubt, be the greatest Children's day ever held on the assembly grounds. The exercises will consist of addresses, special songs, recitations and music, followed by an entertainment in the evening.

The Y. P. S. C. E., the Ministerial Association, the state Sunday-school convention and the state missionary convention will all be held during the sittings of the association.

The special days, Temperance day, Educational day, Bethany Assembly day, etc., will all be red letter days, and no one can well afford to stay away on these days.

We are sure that the night entertainments will be better than ever before, and this is saying very much.

The hotel, cottages, boarding, rooms, etc., will all be in the very best of order.

The mineral water from the artesian well is as free as the air, and its medicinal properties will make you feel like a new person.

Persons desiring information concerning the assembly will please write to either of the undersigned.

Programs, full announcements, railroad rates, etc., will be gladly sent to any one asking for them.

BAGSTER TEACHERS' BIBLE.

We can honestly say that every offer in this book is a genuine bargain, but perhaps this Bible is a little the greatest bargain of them all. Our Bagster Teachers' Bible is a beautiful book. It is printed in minion type. It is bound in Syrian Levant, Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, red under gold edges, full Leather-Lined and Silk Sewed, printed on fine paper. It has complete references, voluminous helps, full concordance, maps, etc.

$5.00
REDUCED TO
$2.00

This Bible should not be confounded with any of the numerous cheap editions, gotten up to look well for a few months and offered at low prices. The only cheap thing about this Bible is the price. It is the same Bible that has been everywhere sold for Five Dollars that we are now offering for Two Dollars. We have a limited number of copies on hand, and we can obtain no more to furnish at this price. Those we have are not old, shelf-worn stock. Recently the "combine" of American Bible publishers raised the wholesale price of Bibles twenty per cent. It is not probable that such a liberal offer as this will ever be made again.

This splendid edition of the Bible, strictly as described, sent postpaid on receipt of only Two Dollars. If you are dissatisfied with the Bible when you receive it, return it to us, and we will cheerfully refund the money.

Commencement at Butler College

On Thursday, the 20th, Butler College sent out its quota of graduates, four women and nine men, with the degree of A. B. The address of the occasion was given by Dr. E. S. Ames, of Chicago, upon the subject of "A Neglected Element of Culture." That element proved to be a recognition of the practical end and therefore of the unity of all knowledge. Dr. Ames contended earnestly for the service of society by all its members. It was a model address, short, clear and elevating.

One of the most interesting occasions of commencement week was the production by the students under the lead of the English department of an Elizabethan play, Thomas Delshere's "Shoemaker's Holiday." The play has been given in America only one other time. Every detail of the old English stage, manners and costume was accurately reproduced. An enthusiastic Elizabethan audience added much to the interest of the occasion, though some of its members were guilty of the anachronism of using parlor matches with their tobacco.

The Bible College celebrated its third year by conferring the degree of B. D. upon its first graduate, Willis J. Burner. Bro. Burner has an equipment for the ministry which makes him a most efficient leader in any place. He accepted a call some months ago from the church at Benton, Ill. The board of trustees of the Bible College has announced that it is prepared to receive annuities for its endowment fund. It is already receiving interest on $25,000 pledged toward this fund. One other feature of commencement betokened the progress Butler is making: the ground donated for the Bona Thompson memorial library was formally set apart. Work upon the building will soon begin.

LIFE OF GEN. U. S. GRANT

There is no "catch" about this offer; we mean just what we say. We offer this splendid biography of Gen. Grant, a volume of over 700 pages, handsomely printed on fine paper, profusely illustrated and beautifully bound, for only

Results of Home Mission Work.

We have had over 4,500 additions to the various mission churches this missionary year.

We have organized two score new churches this year.

Newark, N. J.—We organized last fall; built and dedicated our meeting house the first Lord's day in May. This would have been impossible without the help and support of the board of home missions. We are grateful.—R. P. SHEPHERD, missionary.

Pittsburg, Pa.—At Wilkinsburg, a suburb, by the help and support of the home board, we have supported H. J. Lutz, our missionary. We dedicated June 16. The unanimous expression is that the Lord has blessed us beyond our deserts at Wilkinsburg. We have a fine building costing $13,500, a fine membership, and a good church in that growing district of the city; this speaks for us the benediction of the Master on your work in city missions.—C. L. THURGOOD, Cor. Sec. western Pa.

Jackson, Miss.—If the work here had been neglected a few months longer all would have been lost. We are indebted to the American Christian Missionary Society for the continued existence of this church.—B. F. MANIRE, missionary.

Hanford, Cal.—The church here is redeemed from danger of extinction by your timely help. Our feet had well nigh slipped—the church was badly in debt and discouraged and ready to die. Then came the strong hand of our home board, and as much by encouragement and creation of confidence as by your financial aid you put us on our feet, and now we have a new song in our mouths. God bless home missions.—T. H. LAWSON.

Mexican Mission in San Antonio.—The mission among the Mexican people grows constantly. Our Sunday-school gives good results. We will open new work in San Marcos and Lockhart. I last baptized two Romans, three Presbyterians and two Methodists. My people do not understand the English, and all literature in that language is unuseful to them. If I had Spanish literature I could make good work with them. Can't you get me a printing press?—YGNACIO QUINTERO, Mexican missionary.

Parkersburg, W. Va.—Our new house was opened by L. L. Carpenter last Sunday. The church exists here because of your help. It is a monument to home missions.—O. G. WHITE, missionary pastor.

Genesee, Idaho.—I organized a church here by your help; we rejoice in the prosperity of this work. Without the support of our great brotherhood through the home board this work would never have been undertaken.—L. F. STEPHENS, missionary evangelist.

German Work.—The three German missions are growing; this is a wonderful opportunity and so much work to be done. I send you $56 50, the first fruits of our home offering for home missions.—R. H. TIMME, German missionary.

Galveston, Texas.—By the generosity of the brotherhood, the American Christian Missionary Society has been enabled to render assistance to our stricken brethren in Galveston. We have rebuilt the church house, paid off the mortgage debt on our church, purchased a parsonage for our missionary, and provided for the preacher for the next year; and, in addition they gave aid to the brethren in Alvin, Texas, who also suffered loss by the storm.

If we gain only $10,000 on the income of last year we shall report $100,000 for home missions at the Minneapolis Convention. The amount ought to be $200,000, but we are pleading for $100,000 for home missions this year. We have one thousand churches that usually give to missions that have made no offering to home missions this year. To them we appeal. Will you not help this good work by a liberal offering, the first home missionary offering of the century?

Among Our Advertisers.

Barclay Meador, Advertising Manager.

Without exception readers will be interested in our educational number to appear next week (July 4th). Interest in education has grown to such an extent that we, in common with other papers of our high class, must of necessity employ considerable space to present much that is new upon the subject and repeat much that is old and yet ever new. Our columns are seldom barren of this topic and yet a special number is regarded as necessary once a year. In this number the subject is treated from various standpoints. In addition each one of our schools is given an opportunity to say that which in the judgment of the president or principal will be most effectual in setting forth the school or college or university, as the case may be, and beyond this many of the schools are represented in the advertising columns. Our readers will find much in our educational number which will bear careful reading. Be sure then to read it.

Bro. J. B. Jones, president of William Woods College at Fulton, called at our office a few days since and left copy for the advertising his board have decided to do in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and our other papers, during the present season. The college he represents in ten years has made a very creditable showing. In some respects the year just passed has been a critical one. The generosity of the brother whose name it now wears has been unstintingly expressed within the year. As a result of this and the careful administration of the financial affairs of the school by the board, it is now in splendid condition. However, the glory of the school is the young women who are stepping out from its halls year by year to take up the duties assigned them in the economy of human affairs. The college has engaged sufficient space to comprehensively set forth its advantages. Our readers are referred to our educational number, which will bear date of July 4th, and also to the issue of the next week, which latter will contain two pages and more concerning William Woods College.

The 20th International Convention of Christian Endeavor is at hand. The date is July 6th to 10th inclusive, and the place our sister city, Cincinnati. It is not unreasonable to expect that the next, or the 21st convention, which by reason of action of the Board of Trustees of the United Society, will not be held until 1903, will be held in St. Louis. The St. Louis Union will send an invitation to the board to be considered at its Cincinnati meeting.

As to the Cincinnati convention, a few lines about the railroad accommodations, as announced elsewhere by the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, will be of interest. The round trip rate from St. Louis, including "dinner en route, badge and lodging for five nights at Hotel Emory in Cincinnati," will be $14.75. Parties living west of St. Louis will add $2 to the one fare rate to St. Louis and add the sum to $14.75. The railroad people are preparing to take good care of the many who will go. Of course, those who do not wish the hotel accommodations provided by the C. E. committee will buy railroad ticket at the station and go on the excursion train which leaves St. Louis Union Station, Saturday morning, July 6th, at 8:30 or any other train within the going limit of the ticket.

ILLINOIS.

Decatur, June 17.—Two added to Edward St. congregation yesterday by letter: one from Springfield and one from Harristown.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Exchange, June 19.—I filled my regular appointment at Gunion, Wayne county, June 16, assisted by Bro. B. F. Turner of Oskaloosa. Two young ladies obeyed the gospel. The church is in very good condition spiritually. LEW D. HILL.

Fairbury, June 17.—There were five additions here yesterday; three confessions, one from M. E.'s, one by statement. Have been invited to give the oration here July 4th at a great M. W. A. gathering.—E. N. TUCKER, pastor.

INDIANA.

Fort Wayne, June 22.—The West Jefferson Street Church has this day succeeded in paying off $5,700 of its indebtedness. The committee of faithful, persistent men cannot receive too much credit for this their work during the past twelve months. The church is united and harmonious, they have a beautiful building and we all trust a brighter day has dawned. We have been having additions nearly every Sunday recently. For the past few months I have been going out twice a month on Sunday afternoon to encourage the little band at Williamsport. They have succeeded in paying off all their indebtedness and now have a clear title to their property with sufficient money to paint and repair the building.—E. W. ALLEN.

Terre Haute, June 18.—Meeting at this place with Pastor Q. E. Sellers doing the preaching continues with great interest. Our Junior chorus of 160 voices is a special feature of the meeting. Bro. Sellers preached "Our Plea" to 1,000 people Sunday evening and four men and women responded to the invitation. Pastors or evangelists desiring our services in meetings in August or November, write now. —GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE, singing evangelists, 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Chickasha, June 17.—We had two fine services yesterday; two confessions and one addition otherwise. Our Sunday school has increased one hundred per cent. in two months.—JOHN A. STEVENS.

IOWA.

Lake City, June 17.—Fine services yesterday. Two baptized last night. Collected for home missions in May, $25. Children's day, $20.77. Paint and decoration on church house, $220. I preach baccalaureate sermon next Sunday. Northwest district, Iowa, needs 10 preachers.—F. H. LEMON, corresponding secretary.

Waterloo, June 17 —One baptized at Waterloo yesterday.—JOE S. RILEY.

KANSAS.

Leavenworth, June 17.—Two by confession since last report.—S. W. NAY.

Leavenworth, June 20.—One addtition at prayer-meeting last evening.—S. W. NAY.

Medicine Lodge, June 17.—Five accessions yesterday by letter and nine the Sunday before.—W. T. MCLAIN.

Morrill, June 18.—The work is growing gradually here. No recent addition. Beginning June 3rd I held a 12 days' meeting at Baker, Kan., where they have had no regular preaching for five years. The meeting revived the membership somewhat and five were baptized. I think they will co-operate with Powhattan and these two points promise to be a fruitful field for the right man.—I. N. WILSON.

Reserve, June 20.—Our Children's Day exercises were interesting and successful. The offering amounted to $83.65. There have been seven confessions and baptisms at our regular services in the last two weeks.—MELANCTHON MOORE.

KENTUCKY.

Walton, June 17.—At my last appointment at Liberty, Ind., one young lady made the confession, and at a previous appointment two took membership by letter. At my last appointment at Old Campbellsburg Church, Ky., one young man took membership by letter.—J. W. ROGERS.

MAINE.

South Lubec, June 18.—During my recent visit to Nova Scotia we had 43 additions; 41 baptisms and two from the Baptists. I am now in Harry Minnick's field, preaching a few days in South Lubec. After a short visit in my former New England field I shall start for home. I am engaged for annual meeting work till the middle of September. Churches wishing my help in fall and winter meetings should address me at once at Muncie, Indiana.—A. MARTIN.

MINNESOTA.

Lewisville, June 20.—We have just concluded a meeting in this place which resulted in 38 confessions and baptisms. Leslie Wolfe is the pastor and a most excellent co-worker. —SIMPSON ELY, Des Moines, Iowa.

MISSOURI.

Albany, June 21.—The work at Denver is prospering. The children rendered their program Sunday night, June 9. The amount raised was $12.25. Will send in after expenses are paid about $10. We expect to begin a meeting with home forces the latter part of July.—HOMER L. MAGEE.

Farmington, June 17.—We had the banner Bible school of the year yesterday. Four additions to the church—one Catholic.—R. M. TALBERT.

Grant City, June 17.—Bro. O. W. Lawrence, of Maryville, Mo., will dedicate a new house of worship the fifth Sunday in this month. At Isadora, Mo., I preached for them yesterday, five baptisms, three confessions, one by statement.—W. H. HARRIS.

Hamilton.—My meeting here closed June 9 with 13 additions and a good offering for a pastor to locate at $600 a year.—E. J. LAMPTON.

Independence, June 12.—We have recently closed a good meeting held by Bro. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City. There was much love, interest and unity throughout the entire meeting; audiences especially large at the evening services. The afternoon talks at 3 P. M. were beautiful and impressive. We had 30 accessions to the church. We feel that Bro. Haley has helped and strengthened us, and we hope he may be spared to labor with us again.—MRS. R. LIN CAVE

Kirksville, June 18.—We baptized three last night at prayer-meeting, seven additions since last report.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Kirksville, June 20.—At our regular meeting at Darbey last Lord's day we baptized five. This church has not been doing much for some time, but prospects now are very good. We have large audiences and good interest.—J. F. HOLLOWELL.

Nevada, June 17.—One addition at Walker Saturday night which makes three since last report.—S. MAGEE.

Paynesville.—Five added by letter, one reclaimed and one baptized at Eolia since last report, also one by letter at Paynesville and one by letter at Annada.—J. O. WALTON.

Richland, June 19.—We had four accessions at Linn Creek June 16, two by letter, two by baptism, one of which was from the M. E's. We are having a fine interest manifested at Richland, good social meetings when I am not here.—J. R. BLUNT, pastor.

St. Louis, June 24.—Two confessions at Compton Heights last night.—J. N. CRUTCHER.

West Plains, June 17.—Our work is doing nicely here. Our collection for Children's Day amounted to $7 over our apportionment. I preached the memorial sermon for the "Modern Woodmen of America" yester

THE CRISIS

By WINSTON CHURCHILL

This new work by the author of Richard Carvel and The Celebrity, is undoubtedly the novel of the year. Mr. Churchill's first book, Richard Carvel, has reached a circulation of 375,000 copies, and the new book, which every one is reading this summer, promises to exceed that wonderful figure.

THE CRISIS is a story of the days just prior to and during the war of 1861–1865. The scene is chiefly laid in St. Louis. Among the leading characters are Abraham Lincoln, U. S. Grant, W. T. Sherman, Fremont, Lyons, and other historic personages who figured prominently in the great civil war.

THE CRISIS is a great novel. It pictures actual conditions in the Mississippi Valley at the outbreak and during the war more clearly than any work we have ever seen. A very sweet love story runs through it. All the characters are strongly drawn. The work is handsomely illustrated.

He is now at Geneva attempting to put that congregation in working order. John T. Smith reports three baptisms at Nemaha City and one added at Schubert recently. J. S. Beem reports 24 added in the meeting at Burwell at the end of four weeks. Continue another week. Will likely go into a tent meeting at the close of that meeting. A. W. Henry closed at Wakefield. Ready for a meeting in July.—W. A. BALDWIN, Cor. Sec.

OHIO.

Bellaire, June 17.—We reached our apportionment of $275 yesterday. Had three additions.—C. M. WATSON.

Bowling Green, June 19.—I have been unanimously called to remain another year with the church here. The pastoral year ended June 1. Ninety-nine additions during the year, 65 by confession; $1,000 expended for repairs; over $3,000 given to missions and benevolences; all this above running expenses. A $600 lecture course successful; C. W. B. M. of 80 members on the state honor roll; three C. E. Societies; three children supported in India; a young people's Bible class well attended; good Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. A clean roll of 365, perfect harmony and practically no indebtedness.—JOHN RAY EWERS.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Oklahoma City, June 19.—Four additions at regular service on last Lord's day.—S. D. DUTCHER.

Oklahoma City, June 21.—I preached one week near Miller, Okla., a short time ago. Had large and interested audiences with visible results of two reclaimed. The "anti's" had prejudiced the people against us, but this was largely overcome after two or three services. We have only a few members there and no organization. The harvest week coming prevented my continuing longer. They hope to have a good meeting this fall.—OTHA WILKISON.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Johnston.—Miss Mary Orvis, who is sent by the C. W. B. M. of this state to visit weak churches in the interest of missions, came to us recently for a few days and by her encouraging words did us much good and aroused great interest among all the religious people of the town.—MRS. J. H. WHITE.

Sumter, June 18.—One addition from Presbyterians last Sunday.—M. B. INGLE.

WASHINGTON.

Fletcher, June 18.—Our meeting here is a little over two weeks old with 41 additions; 25 added Sunday and four last night. Baptized 16 yesterday afternoon. There have been 27 confessions and baptisms. Will continue another week.—J. R. CHARLTON.

THE GOSPEL CALL.

This book is undoubtedly the most popular song-book in use among our churches at the present time. Its popularity is based on genuine worth. It contains over 400 standard chorals and "popular hymns," and is thus a first-class, "all-around" book, which can be used in the Church, Sunday-school, C. E. Society, Missionary and Revival Meetings, etc. It consists of two parts, which are published separately and combined.

SILVER AND GOLD.

The latest book by Hackleman and Coombs, the authors of the Gospel Call. This book was first issued about two years ago, and has already reached the enormous sale of nearly 200,000 copies! It is a book containing 174 songs—every one "singable." No pieces were put in just to fill up, but thousands of dollars were spent by the publishers in securing the very best songs to be had. Just the book for Revival Meetings, Sunday-schools, etc.

Going Back to Childhood.

By J. M. Lowe.

I'm going back to childhood,
Back to the painless play,
Back to those happy, innocent years
So full of joy, so free from fears,
When the world was far away.

Back to the home between the hills
Where spring's sweet flowers grew,
Nestling close to shaded rills,
Forget-me-nots and daffodils
And modest violets blue.

Back to the heaven of mother's love,
In the sweet, bright days of yore,
No burden too great for her to bear,
No sorrow too deep for her to share,
So great the love she bore.

So far withdrawn from toil and care
Were those dear days of old,
A splendor lay upon the earth,
"The sunshine was a glorious birth,"
Each day was edged with gold.

Glad days gone by, how fair thou art!
As beautiful as truth:
Our eyes saw not a world of sin
While life was kindly kept within
The golden gates of youth.

I'm going on to childhood,
In the happy time to be,
When the sweetest joys of other years,
When youth's glad days without their tears,
Will all come back to me.

Battle and the Railroad.

If 7,123 men were killed and 44,620 were wounded in battle, even the most staid newspaper would be pardoned for sensational headlines. A thrill of horror would vibrate civilized people, prayers would be uttered in all churches for the dead, and sympathetic feeling for relatives and wounded would be universal.

Such a calamity, however, happens every year, almost without comment. But for the official report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, annually rendered to Congress, the world would be but little the wiser for it, and as it is, goes on almost unmoved and unconcerned about it. The figures given above form the brief official announcement of the number killed and injured by railways of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1899. The statistic is officially softened by a ratio statement that only one person was killed or injured for a certain number of million miles accomplished by trains. The public is further reassured to the effect that only 239 passengers were killed and only 3,342 were injured, which gives over sixty million miles traveled for one killed and over four and one-half million miles traveled for one injured. We are told that 4,574 persons killed were really trespassers, as were also 6,355 of the injured. They got in front of the trains when they ought to have had business elsewhere. Some of them were only tramps stealing rides, thus ridding communities of their maintenance and pilferings, and saddling the burial expenses on the railway corporations.

A careful examination of the official report fails to reveal any other philanthropic or reassuring features. On the contrary, a glance at a table in the report shows that during the period from September 30, 1888, to same date, 1899, the awful slaughter of railways amounted to 78,412 killed and 415,707 injured—a population greater than the city of New Orleans. But what is strictly germane to this article is the fact that during those years the number of railway employees killed in the United States was 25,990, and the number injured was 322,146.—Harper's Weekly.

Infidelity.

The following flight of eloquence from ex-Governor Robert L. Taylor, of Tennessee, one of the greatest lecturers on the American continent, is worthy of a wide circulation. It is a vivid and eloquent description of a lecture by the late Col. Ingersoll and is kindly sent by J. W. Zachary:

"I sat in the great theater in the national capital. It was thronged with youth and beauty, old age and wisdom. I saw a man, the image of his God, stand upon the stage, and I heard him speak. His gestures were the perfection of grace, his voice was music, and his language was more beautiful than any I had ever heard from mortal lips. He painted picture after picture of pleasures and joys and sympathies of home. He enthroned love and preached the gospel of humanity like an angel. Then I saw him dip his brush in the ink of mortal blackness and blot out the beautiful picture he had painted. I saw him stab love dead at his feet. I saw him blot out the stars and the sun and leave humanity and the earth in eternal darkness and eternal death. I saw him, like the serpent of old, worm himself into the paradise of human hearts, and by his seductive eloquence and subtle device of sophistry inject his fatal venom, under whose blight its flowers faded, its music was hushed, its sunshine was darkened, and the soul was left a desert waste with the new-made graves of faith and hope. I saw him like a lawless and erratic meteor without orbit, sweep across the intellectual sky, brilliant only in its self-consuming fire, generated by friction with the indestructible and eternal truths of God. That man was the archangel of modern infidelity, and I said: How true is holy writ, which declares that the fool has said in his heart: 'There is no God!'

"Tell me not, O infidel, there is no God, no heaven, no hell! Tell me not, O infidel, there is no risen Christ! What intelligence less than God's could fashion the human body? What motive power is it, if not God, that drives those throbbing engines of the human heart, sending the crimson stream of life bounding through every vein and artery? Whence and what, if not God, is this mystery we call 'mind'? What is it that thinks, and feels, and plans, and acts? Oh, who can deny the divinity that stirs within us? God is everywhere and is in every thing. His mystery is in every bud, and blossom, and leaf, and tree; in every rock, and hill, and mountain; in every spring, and rivulet, and river. The rustle of his wings is in every zephyr; his might is in every tempest. He dwells in the dark pavilion of every storm cloud. The lightning is his messenger, and the thunder is his voice. His awful tread is in every earthquake and on every angry ocean. The heavens above us teem with his myriads of shining witnesses—the universe of solar systems whose wheeling orbs course the crystal dread halls of eternity, the glory and power and dominion of the all-wise, omnipotent and eternal God."

Vest-Pocket Cook Stoves.

The Commissary General of the army has recently bought, for the special use of our soldiers, large numbers of little cookers of a kind newly invented. Each of them is hardly bigger than a teacup, so that the contrivance has the merit of being easily portable, while possessing the additional advantages of extreme simplicity and cheapness. With a single twist one unscrews from it a metal rim, and this, having three legs, is made to serve as a tripod-stand for holding a brass receptacle from which the cover is removed with a twist.

The receptacle, which is nothing but a small cylindrical cup, is partly filled with a whitish-looking substance that has the appearance of spermaceti. One is informed, however, that the stuff is really a mixture of wood alcohol and "some vegetable material," the nature of which is not explained. On being touched with a match it catches fire instantly and burns with a steady, lambent flame, which, though almost invisible to the eye, is extremely hot.

Now, the small quantity of alcohol mixture in the cup—it is quite solid—will burn for an hour and a half, and the cost of it is almost nothing. It will serve to heat water, or for any purpose of minor cookery, a saucepan or light pot being placed upon the tripod. When the fuel mixture is used up, a fresh supply is scooped out of a pint can with a spoon and put into the brass cup, so that culinary operations may proceed. In a region where fuel is scarce—as China, for example, or in parts of the west, —such a contrivance is invaluable. It is likely to be adopted by sportsmen for use in camp.

The navy has purchased a quantity of these impromptu cookers, and is furnishing them by way of experiment to some of the ships.

As a means for heating shaving water under conditions where the ordinary conveniences are not at hand, the contrivance described is specially available.

Family Food.

Crisp, Toothsome and Requires No Cooking.

A little boy down in N. C. asked his mother to write an account of how Grape-Nuts Food had helped their family.

She says Grape-Nuts was first brought to her attention on a visit to Charlotte, where she visited the Mayor of that city who was using the Food by the advice of his physician. She says, "They derive so much good from it that they never pass a day without using it. While I was there I used the Food regularly. I gained about 15 pounds and felt so well that when I returned home I began using Grape-Nuts in the family regularly.

My little 18 months old baby shortly after being weaned was very ill with dyspepsia and teething. She was sick nine weeks and we tried everything. She became so emaciated that it was painful to handle her and we thought we were going to lose her. One day a happy thought urged me to try Grape-Nuts soaked in a little warm milk.

Well, it worked like a charm and she began taking it regularly and improvement set in at once. She is now getting well and round and fat as fast as possible and on Grape Nuts.

Some time ago a number of the family were stricken with la grippe at the same time, and during the worst stages we could not relish anything in the shape of food but Grape-Nuts and oranges, everything else nauseated us.

We all appreciate what your famous food has done for our family."

Two Little Girls.

I'm twins, I guess, 'cause my ma say
I'm two little girls, an one of me
Is Good little girl, an the other'n she
Is Bad little girl as she can be,
An ma say so 'most ever' day.

An she's the funniest ma! 'Cause when
My doll won't mind an I 'ist cry,
W'y, nen my ma she sob an sigh
And say: "Dear Good little girl, good-by!
Bad little girl's comed here again!"

Last time 'at ma act' that a-way
I cried all to myse'f awhile
Out on the steps, an nen I smile
An get my doll all fix' in style
An go in where ma's at an say:
"Morning to you, mommy dear!
Where's that Bad little girl wuz here?
Bad little girl's goned clean away,
An Good little girl's comed back to stay."

Women as Miners.

A French consul in a recent report, says "Mining and Metallurgy," gives an interesting description of the crude methods of placer mining used in the French colony of Bambuk in West Africa. The work is done almost entirely by the native women of the colony.

The women are provided, for the performance of this work, with a certain num- of calabashes filled with gold-bearing earth, generally two or three at a time, a large calabash filled with water and a shell similar to that of a mollusk. They usually work in an erect position, the washing of two calabashes requiring about ten or twelve minutes.

Taking a calabash about two-thirds full of earth, the gold-washer fills the remaining space with water and agitates the mixture vigorously with one hand, removing such pebbles as may be encountered. The calabash is then filled up with water and the mixture is churned as butter is churned, the gravel being removed and thrown away from time to time and water being added until the receptacle remains about one-third full of a very thin mud. She then takes the calabash between the palms of her hands and imparts to it an oscillating motion in order to precipitate the metal, and the washing water is then poured off. More water is then added in small quantities and the rotary motion continued until the bottom of the calabash contains nothing but a fine sand mixed with a black powder of sesqui-oxide of iron. The washer then turns the contents with a quick movement into a little calabash and commences the operation again with a new lot of earth.

When the portion of the earth assigned to the woman has all been treated thus, she takes up the little calabash and, if necessary, clarifies the water and reduces it to a minimum quantity, causing the sand which is left behind to collect on the sides of the vessel, removing all that is possible with the finger, and forcing the residue to a nearly flat part of the calabash. It is then collected in a shell, which, when passed over a gentle fire, contains nothing after operation except a mixture in which the gold is distinguishable from the black ferruginous powder by its color. The impurities are separated by agitating the shell and blowing gently upon it, or even with the aid of the fingers, and the gold is then sealed up in the horn of an antelope.

All these operations are performed with a quickness and skill that are marvelous, and a keen attention which reduces the loss, if there be any, to a minimum.

Why John Was Promoted.

"I feel deeply hurt," said a faithful and trusted clerk, "that you should promote one of my juniors right over my head. I do not wish to seem impertinent, but I would very much like to know the reason."

"What is making all that noise in front of the store?" suddenly asked the manager, without seeming to notice the clerk's protest. "Please ascertain at once."

"It is a lot of wagons going by," said the clerk, when he returned.

"What are they loaded with so heavily?"

"They are all loaded with wheat," was the reply, after a second trip had been made to the front of the building.

"How many are there?"

"Sixteen," was the third reply.

"Find where they come from."

Ten minutes later the information came that all the wagons were from Lucena.

"Very good," said the manager. "Now call John, whom I have promoted; then take a seat and listen."

"Will you see what is the meaning of that rumbling noise in front?" he continued, when John appeared.

"It is unnecessary," was the reply, "for I have already ascertained that it is caused by sixteen wagons loaded with wheat. Twenty more will pass to-morrow. They all belong to Romero & Company, of Lucena, and are on their way to Marchesa, where wheat is selling at a dollar and a quarter a bushel, while it only costs a dollar at Lucena. The wagons carry one hundred bushels each and get fifteen cents a bushel for hauling."

"My friend," said the manager, turning to the old clerk, "you see now why John was promoted over you."—Success.

"I Want to do Suthin'."

The quickest way to interest a person in an enterprise, or to increase an existing interest, is to get him to do something for it. The principle is aptly illustrated in the following episode of an Endeavor convention, as narrated by a writer in the Christian Endeavor World:

After the quiet hour, and when more and more were coming in, the writer noticed a little waif from the street, who, attracted by the crowds, and curious to know what was going on, entered the auditorium, and gazed about in a bewildered sort of way. His hands and face were soiled, hair uncombed, and his whole appearance told of poverty and neglect at home. But he caught the spirit of the place almost instantly, and seemed to feel that he would like to stay with such a crowd.

An idea came to him, and, walking up to one of the bright-faced lady ushers and looking up at her, he said "Say, I want to do suthin'."

She saw her opportunity at once, and with a smile replied, "All right, my little man; run home, and have your face and hands washed, get slicked up a little, and come back, and you shall have something to do."

He fairly flew down from that great room, forgetful of everything but that he was "goin' to do suthin'."

Soon he came back quite transformed, hands and face clean, and some change in his clothing making him look almost like another child. He did not care for his old shoes, or that he was not dressed as well as the other little fellows that moved about in joyous helpfulness.

"Here I be; now pin a badge on me, and let me do suthin'!"

The badge was pinned on the front of his old cap, and he asked, "What be I now?"

"Now you are a page, and you can do anything you can to help."

All day that day and all day the next day the little fellow was seen going here and there, handing out programs, carrying satchels, distributing papers, everything and all things possible. Some one gave him some gum, and the harder he worked, the more vigorously he chewed the gum. Toward night he looked up at the face of the young lady who had given him his badge and "suthin'" to do, and said: "I'm a page, ain't I? It's kinder hard work, but it's fun just the same!"

How often since then have the words come to me, and how much have they suggested! "It's kinder hard, but it's fun just the same." The lesson he learned so quickly and well thousands have not learned—the joy of willing, unselfish service, the losing the consciousness of self in that of service, the rising above the thought of personal appearance when one has done the best he can to appear presentable. Is not this the central idea of the great Christian Endeavor movement the world over, the idea that we are in the mighty crowd for service, to "do suthin'"?

The new battleship Illinois has just broken the world's record of ships of its class for speed. Its builders were under contract to give it a speed of sixteen knots an hour, but on trial last Wednesday it averaged 17.31 knots for nearly four hours. With its four thirteen-inch guns, each of which can throw half a ton of metal fourteen miles, and its abundant secondary battery, it forms perhaps the most perfect illustration of a thoroughly modern battleship.

The Far Country.

You stand at the brim o' the hill, little girl,
And look with a sweet despair
At the melting hilltops of purple red,
With the fleecy bars of the blue o'erhead,
And you want to be running still, little girl,
To the country of Over There.

Oh, a brave, brave country it shows, little girl,
With colors and trappings rare,
A bustle of happy sounds and sights,
A glistening current of sweet delights,
Where everyone's known and knows, little girl,
In the country of Over There.

There are strains of a sweeter song, little girl,
Than hearts of this land can bear;
There are delicate whispers and flitting feet,
And gay, bright laughing at pleasures fleet,
Where nothing but sorrow's wrong, little girl,
In that country of Over There.

But no one can tell you the way, little girl,
To that land so dear and fair;
It glows in the sunset pools of light,
It shines in the starry clouds at night,
And only your heart can stray, little girl,
To the country of Over There.

The Honor of the Uniform.

The reports of drunkenness and disorderliness in the army, especially on pay days, have been much exaggerated since the abolition of the canteen, but in so far as such trouble exists it is partly due to a failure on the part of officers to set the right kind of an example to the enlisted men and to present to them the strongest motives for sobriety. The Vancouver Register-Democrat gives the following account of an unusual case at Vancouver Barracks, where a kindly and well worded admonition from Col. Mott Hooton produced the desired effect.

Col. Mott Hooton has accomplished something entirely original in the history of Vancouver Barracks.

Six hundred soldiers received two months' pay yesterday, and there was not a single case of disorderly conduct reported this morning, no one is in the guard house, and every boy in blue responded to the first roll call at 11 o'clock last night, except a few tardy ones who reported soon after. All were present at guard mount this morning.

This is a new regiment, and as yet has only three officers, in addition to the chaplain, and such behavior is unprecedented in the experience of army officers, as well as in the experience of the civilians of the city.

The reason for such conduct is to be ascribed to a circular order, issued to the regiment by Col. Hooton, and which has been read to them the last four evenings. It reads as follows:

"This being the first time you have received pay from the government, and considering your inexperience as soldiers, the commanding officer indulges the hope that your behavior will be such as to reflect credit upon yourselves, this new regiment now organizing, and upon the army as a whole. Let your conduct be above reproach: and commit no act that would bring disgrace on the uniform you wear. A strict compliance with these admonitions is enjoined."

The foregoing order is dignified and places a value on the uniform of the soldier not generally recognized. It is not therefore to be wondered at that the men behaved so well. Their better nature was appealed to, and a recognized worth of the soldier shown by their superior officer, to which true American manhood responded, as it always will respond when appealed to in the right way.

Oklahoma.

By W. J. Nixon.

[We are not acting as land-agents and have no pecuniary interest in the opening up of new sections of the country, but having lately given space in our news columns to considerable matter in regard to the new lands in Indian Territory, it seems but fair to allow a resident of Oklahoma to express his sentiment and present the advantages of his territory to those who seek happy homes or healthful sport or who flee from the ravages of chilblains.]

On Oklahoma's fertile plains
In peace and rest we live,
Content if only moderate gains
The Master please to give.

We labor hard in dust and heat
From June until November,
When from the fields we make retreat,
Our toils no more remember.

Then horse and cow go in the fields
To pasture on the wheat,
Which only seems to swell the yields
And put on extra meat.

And then we don't have much to do
But milk and feed the pigs
And read the papers, false or true,
And ride around in rigs.

The sportsman mounts his bronco gay
To give the coyote chase,
And with his greyhound hies away
All eager for the race.

And if the wolf they fail to find
Jack-rabbit will suffice.
Though luckless horseman falls behind,
The honest greyhound flies.

And now the iron horse has come,
With whistle long and loud,
Although he takes the richest plum
He's sure to draw a crowd.

We don't have near so far to go
To haul our hogs and wheat,
And though the price is sometimes low
We think it quite a treat.

Now if you're tired of mud and snow
And chilblains on your feet
Remember, when you start to go,
This country's hard to beat.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries, grapes and peaches a year old, fresh as when picked. I used the California Cold Process. Do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last year I sold directions to over 120 families in one week; anyone will pay a dollar for directions when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars around home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and full directions to any of your readers for nineteen (19) two-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc. MRS. M. The Value Of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines, and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking, or after eating onions or other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion; it whitens the teeth; and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant-tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood; and the beauty of it is that no harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

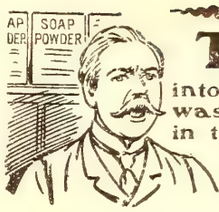
XVII.—The Search for Pete.



Although Edgar Brown was alarmed over the disappearance of Pete, he felt a deep thrill of delight with Madge's arm about him, and Letitia's hand in his. He knew their attitude was entirely unconscious, that in their excitement they knew not what they did; but at the same time this very unconsciousness told him that he had gained their trust and friendship at last. It was such a sweet experience to feel these dear innocent children clinging to him that he feared to move lest he should break the charm. And there was small chance of his finding Pete or doing anything except standing there like a ridiculous statue, if Mrs. Morris had not made the girls go in the house to keep out of the rain. Edgar's first thought was the barn, and although assured that it had been searched, he went carefully over the building with a lantern, examining nooks in the hay where she might have fallen asleep. But no, Pete was not in the barn; and by this time the rain was descending in torrents. Mrs. Morris was in such grief and terror that she could give Edgar no help in his search, and Madge was crying herself to sleep in her room. Letitia had gone home, but her father was searching the streets with his lantern, his rubber coat flapping about his legs. No wonder Mrs. Morris was almost wild with excitement, for the rain came down with great violence, while awful crashes of thunder shook the house. She feared her little girl was out in that storm. Edgar searched the back alley, the grape arbor, the neighboring streets, even the hollow in Mr. Pendleton's woodpile. Then he returned to Mrs. Morris' house, and oh, how strange he looked with the water dripping from his very hair, and without any protection from the weather! His collar was like a rag, and his tie had worked around to the back of his head, and his trousers were splattered with mud till they looked perfectly dreadful. But what do you think? When he went in the front door without knocking (for excitements have an etiquette all their own), Jennie Morris stood under the swinging lamp, waiting for news. And when the young lady saw Edgar, somehow she liked him very much for that miserable collar and tie, and for those splattered garments, and for the uneasiness in his eyes. She wouldn't have thought near as much of him if he had come dressed up for a party. Because his wild state told her that he loved her little sister. "This is Miss Morris?" he said, setting his lantern on the floor. You see, he had never met Jennie. But he knew who she was, so he just went on without waiting for her to bow: "I have come back here to ask some questions about Pete. I don't see much hope of finding her in this terrible storm, unless I have something to go by." As he spoke a fierce gust of wind rattled the windows. "Miss Morris, I understand your mother saw her last about eight o'clock; that when Pete didn't come to kiss her good-night, your mother grew uneasy, went up to her room, and found Pete gone. But I don't understand why Pete should have stayed away from Mrs. Morris till her bed-time,nor why Mrs.Morris should have thought Pete was all alone up in her bedroom. Can you help me out here?"

"Mamma was punishing Pete," said Jennie, "for something she had done; and the punishment was, that she couldn't go to Linda May's party, which was this evening. Pete felt so bad, knowing the other children were having such a good time, that she wouldn't stay with mamma and me, but went off by herself. Oh, if she had only gone to the party with Madge! Or if I had stayed with her! But she wouldn't be comforted. Mr. Brown, what can have become of her? She is so reckless, sometimes!"

Edgar picked up his lantern. "Miss Morris, I would be sorry to rouse your hopes and then disappoint them, but what you have told me gives me a clew. I believe I can go right to her. I believe she is this moment in Miss Dollie Dudley's storm-cellar!" His manner was so bright and assured that a hopeful color spread over Jennie's white face.

"Do you?" she cried, "Oh, I will call mamma—No! she mustn't go out in this storm. But I will go with you. I can't stay here doing nothing. Will you wait till I get my waterproof? So he waited, and pretty soon they were breasting the storm together. Although it was now very late, it was not as if they were in the streets alone, for every once in a while a light would flash by, telling them that somebody else was hunting for the missing girl. They went straight to the storm-cellar, and when they were near, they saw a light shining through the glass in the door. Edgar tried to open it. "Go away!" cried the voice of Miss Dollie; "There's a storm out there!" Edgar crawled up the embankment and peered through the glass. "Pete is here!" he called to Jennie; "Pete and Linda May and Miss Dollie." Then without further ceremony he forced open the door and he and Jennie almost dropped into the excavation. Miss Dollie screamed. "Oh, Jennie!" cried Pete, her voice sounding strangely broken. Pete was barefooted, in fact all her clothes had been taken off, and she was wrapped up in Miss Dollie's shawl. Jennie threw off her cloak and took the child in her arms. "What does it mean?" asked the sister in bewilderment, as her eyes fell upon Pete's clothes in a corner—they were fairly swimming in water. "Mamma wouldn't let me come to the party," said Pete in a very hoarse voice, "so I thought I'd sneak up and look into the yard and watch um playing. So I came to Mrs. Taggart's yard, and stood at the fence and watched them a long time. And they went to supper, and I laid on the nice grass for um to come out, but I went 'sleep, and when I woke up, oh! it was pouring down, and the lightning was like it was setting the world on fire in a whole lots of different places, sose 'twould be sure to burn. I was so scared I couldn't run home, but I thought of this cellar, and I got here, I don't know how I did!"

"Yes," said Miss Dollie, "when Linda May and I ran in here to escape the storm, there she lay wringing and dripping wet and shivering with a chill. I got her things off and my shawl around her, meaning to take her home when the storm let up." "You see," remarked Pete, "her shawl ain't very big, so it don't come far enough up at one end of me, nor far enough down at the other. So Mr. Brown had better not look." "How dreadfully hoarse!" exclaimed Jennie. "Oh, my poor, darling, bad little sister! I'm afraid you are going to be very ill." "Of course she is," said Miss Dollie promptly; "how can she help being ill? Nature is just like a mother, and punishes us when we do wrong. That's the manner of Nature." She spoke as if this manner had her entire approval. Edgar left Jennie there, and hurried to tell Mrs. Morris the news, and the church bells were rung to spread the tidings. And I wonder if Pete is going to be very ill.

The New Queen.

Queen Alexandra was brought up in simple, domestic fashion, her early life in her Danish home being watched over by a thrifty, sensible mother, who never forgot that her daughter was a child first and a princess afterward. This heritage of careful education Alexandra of Wales afterward passed faithfully down to her own family of children. Her betrothal to the Prince of Wales was the result quite as much of a mutual attraction so soon as they had met as a furtherance of royal diplomacy, and not only Albert Edward, but the entire English populace, fell a victim to her sweet smile when it beamed upon them. It is close upon forty years since she rode through London the affianced bride of the heir to the throne, but reams of glowing words in print and verbal testimony are still accessible describing the enthusiasm which attended the sight of her at every step of that progress. Queen Alexandra is not beautiful in the sense of possessing perfect features or a form modeled on classic lines, but she is none the less one of the most fascinating of women. She has in a remarkable degree that intangible element called charm, which is the greatest gift the gods can bestow upon any one. She radiates in every line of her figure, in every gesture and motion, an ideal refinement that attracts all who approach her, and an attraction that is quickly enslavement when the winning force of her lovable nature is felt. The affection of the Danish people for her was enthusiastically shown as she took leave of them for her future home in the continuous celebrations in her honor that took place. By her express wish three thousand thalers was distributed as dowries among six Danish brides belonging to the poorer classes at the time of her marriage, an incident which testifies not only to her kindness of heart, but to a personal anticipation of her happiness in her coming marriage, which emphasized her interest in other weddings.—Harper's Bazar.

Our Country.

(Patriotic service).

TEXT: He hath not dealt so with any nation. And as for his judgments, they have not known them.
Praise ye the Lord.—Ps. 147:20.

This psalm begins and ends with a hallelujah. The poet reviews the goodness and mercy of God, especially as seen in his country's history, and in the manifold processes of nature. We may well be imitators of him in this, for if any modern nation can claim and acknowledge exceptional benefits, America can.

Divine Care.

The song of Moses, in the thirty-second chapter of Deuteronomy, contains devout expressions of thankfulness for God's care over the young nation. It is impossible to review our own history and not be impressed with a consciousness of divine guidance and unfailing assistance. This continent was kept veiled through many centuries, until the full time had come. And immediately upon its discovery, the people who had been providentially prepared, moved to these shores to occupy it. They came, not for gold or conquest, but to find room for their altar fires. They sought civil and religious liberty. They were the custodians of that truth which makes men free.

And all through the troublous times of that early history, in wars and tumults, in the midst of tyranny and oppression, God was with the embryonic nation. It almost seems as if, in the words of Henry W. Grady, He has "sown in our soil the seed of His millennial harvest." Again and again there were conjunctions of events, of natural forces and human agencies, that seem little short of the miraculous. The nation has been saved from its powerful enemies, saved from obliteration by civil strife, saved from fatal blunders in legislation, and kept in peace while maturing its strength.

Personal Thankfulness.

What American cannot, will not, exclaim with the psalmist,—

"The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places. Yea, I have a goodly heritage" (Ps. 16:6).

To be born in a land of equality of opportunity is a great blessing. Here are colleges and universities open to the poorest; here are superb opportunities for the agriculturist, the miner, the lumberman, the merchant, the manufacturer; for men in all the walks of life. What fertile fields we may till! What tremendous forces we may harness! What delightful homes we may build! Personally, then, as dependent upon nature and nature's God, we can but be grateful for these pleasant places, this goodly heritage. And besides, the individual counts for more here than elsewhere. Almost any man who is intelligent, industrious, honest, and inspired by right motives, can make himself heard and his influence felt in legislation, in commerce, in government; in religion. There is no imprisonment for debt; no incurable oppression; no slavery.

National Righteousness.

"Happy is the people whose God is the Lord" (Ps. 144:15). We have a Chief Executive, whom we call President, elected by the people every four years; but the majority of the citizens look higher, and acknowledge the Supreme Ruler as the Executive. God governs; God guides; God is immanent in law and custom, and is coming nearer to the nation day by day. There are many imperfections in our government. Industry has never been adjusted to the revolutionary changes wrought by machinery and the introduction of steam and electricity. We are perplexed with the problem of the distribution of wealth. Covetousness abounds. Speculation is rife. The gambling mania seizes men like an awful contagion, and they go mad. Our cities are in the hands of corrupt rings. There is great danger that the spirit of uncurbed commercialism will dictate our national policies.

Hence, we must remember the lessons of history, and the teachings of revelation. "The only greatness of men or of nations is righteousness." It is still true, as when the warning words were uttered, "They that take the sword must perish by the sword." May God save us from a revival of the savagery of the dark ages, the reign of militarism! God's purpose for America can never be fulfilled merely by the development of a superior facility for making money. The nation itself must be His.

Let us pray for the more general and thoughtful participation of Christian citizens in government; for rulers that fear God and work righteousness; for the abolition of the saloon, and the annihilation of the drink traffic; for the healing of every open sore.

Prayer.

We praise Thee, O God, for a land that blooms like Eden; for a history in which Thou hast revealed Thyself; for liberty, equality, and fraternity; for judgment and justice. Wilt Thou continue to guide our nation. Rule in it, O God, for the purity and safety of its citizens, and hasten its transformation, until it shall be a segment of the kingdom of Christ. Amen.

California the Mecca of Every American.

A certain advertising agency employs a significant phrase in its own advertising, namely, "The time to advertise is all the time." So in reference to visiting the Golden Gate state. The time to go is either spring or summer, fall or winter or between seasons.

The many trans-continental lines of railway now in operation afford, not only cheap fare, but superior service and quick time. Some are better than others in this respect. Surely no system has surpassed the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain in providing for the comfort and convenience of the traveling public. Especially has the passenger department of this great system exerted itself in preparing for the Epworth League convention to be held in San Francisco from July 18th to 21st. They offer a choice of two routes, with an innumerable number of advantages as to stop-overs at points of interest, with a list of diverse routes in the far west which will no doubt puzzle many a "tenderfoot."

The very low rates offered to the Epworth League are open to all. Many who have waited long and patiently for opportunity to visit the land of sunshine and flowers will do so at this most opportune time. Tickets are good going from July 6th to 13th, with a final return limit of August 31st.

THE AKRON ROUTE.

Through Passenger Service to Buffalo for Pan-American Exposition.

The opening of the Pan-American Buffalo Line—"Akron Route"—May 5th establishes a new outlet from the West and Southwest to Chautauqua Lake, Buffalo, Niagara Falls and St. Lawrence River and Canada resorts. It also opens a new tourist route via Buffalo and the Niagara frontier to New York and the East.

Schedules for the new route are out, and their arrangement indicates passengers over it are to have enjoyable trips to and from the Pan-American Exposition.

The service from St. Louis for Pan-American Exposition visitors from that gateway and the West and Southwest includes two daily trains in both directions. The Pan-American Express leaves St. Louis Union Station at 8:44 a. m., arrives Buffalo 8:15 next morning. This train has sleeping car on which passengers may go from St. Louis to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo without change. The Buffalo Express leaves St. Louis at 8:15 p. m. with sleeping car from St. Louis to Columbus and from Columbus through to Chautauqua Lake and Buffalo, arriving at latter point at 12:50 midnight. Passengers occupying sleeping car may remain in their berths until 7:00 a. m. Returning trains leave Buffalo daily at 1:00 p. m., arrive St. Louis at noon next day; leave Buffalo 6:30 p. m., arrive St. Louis 6:40 next evening.

Information about fares to Buffalo, Niagara Falls and beyond, stop-over privileges at Buffalo and other details may be ascertained by communicating with J. M. CHESBROUGH, A. G. P. Agt., St. Louis.

God the Creator of all Things.*

We turn back, with the lessons of this quarter, to the very dawn of human history. Genesis is the "book of beginnings" as the name indicates, and our present lesson treats of the completion and climax of God's creative work in the forming of our first parents. The earlier portion of the first chapter of Genesis tells of the coming into being of the heavens and earth, and all the orders beneath man. Men have studied carefully the record of creation, as given in this Scripture, that they might show its agreement or disagreement with the facts of geology and biology, and the record of God's word be thus confirmed or disproved. We doubt the wisdom of spending so much time on that subject. The supreme object of the writer of Genesis seems to us to be, not to tell the exact method and order of creation, but to account for the existence of the universe by declaring its origin in the will of God. Science may determine the method and order of the world's development, but it stands dumb before the question of its origin. The beginning lies not within its ken. This revelation must supply, and it does so by declaring God to be the creator of all things. "In the beginning, God," is the most sublime proclamation ever voiced in human speech. With such a beginning all things are easily accounted for; without it, they remain ever a mystery. "Geology may tell us the how and when and where of creation, but Genesis alone tells us the why and whence and whither."

During the first three days of the creative week God fitted up the three realms of nature: the heavens, or the sky; the air and water; and the earth. On the next three days he placd within these realms their proper occupants, the sun, moon and stars; the birds and fishes; animals and man. This perhaps explains why the earth is represented as completed before the heavenly bodies appear. At the end of the sixth day man is brought forth the evident reason for all that had preceded him. A glory is his beyond that of any other creature, for he alone is made in the image of God. Upon his intellectual and moral nature lies the impress of the divine, and he alone is able to think God's thoughts after him, to enjoy communion with him and to aspire to eternal life in him. He is to have dominion over the rest of the dwellers of earth and is to subdue to his service all the forces of nature. Many are the victories man has won over the earth and sea and sky. Could the primitive dwellers on this globe return to witness the remarkable changes that have taken place since man began to assume his place of rulership, they might think that the end was almost in sight. But there are countless difficulties yet to be overcome, numberless enemies yet to be defeated, ere man shall fully realize his estate. Most of all, man must learn to subdue himself, to bring his animal nature into subjection to his spiritual, before he can be the royal master of this earth, as God designed him to be.

Placing in this beautiful and wonderful world the man whom he had made, God gave to him a wealth of delicious food for the nourishing of his physical life. The language of our lesson seems to indicate that man, in his state of innocence, ate only vegetable food. The herb and the tree bore their fruit for him and for the lower orders of animals as well. There seems to be no hint of flesh being eaten, by either man or beast. Does this mean that the destruction of life so widespread in the world has entered since the fall, and that all the human carnage and the cruelty of the brute creation are the result of sin? Such has been assumed as the meaning of this record, by some students of the word of God. But science teaches otherwise and the meaning of the passage must be some other than this. It perhaps means only that the vegetable kingdom forms the ultimate basis of the food supply of all living creatures, for the carniverous beasts feed upon those which are herbivorous, and the nourishment of all life must come at last from the soil. And what endless variety of grains and fruits has the Lord spread before his children. A thousand different kinds of living plants grow for the sustenance of the human race. Every tree and herb, every grass and flower, seems to have its office, in satisfying the hunger, healing the diseases, or gratifying the other wants of man. Surely the world is full of signs of God's infinite goodness to his children.

When the creative work was ended, God looked upon the work of his hands, and behold, it was very good. Then God rested from his labors, in the graphic language of the writer of this book. We now understand that this expression means no more than that God ceased from his distinctively creative work when he had finished preparing the universe for the coming of man, and had placed him in the midst of his wonderful home. "My Father worketh even until now," said Jesus, and it is manifest that the supreme ruler of the universe can never be inactive. It requires his unceasing energy to sustain as it did to create. But the ending of the process of creation is represented as a rest day, and in commemoration of the completed work the Lord blessed the seventh day of the week and made it his holy Sabbath. It is doubtful whether this day was set apart for man's observance before the exodus from Egypt, and it is certain that no mention of it is made before that time in the Old Testament, but whatever be the truth regarding it, the day was made sacred by the specific command of God, given through Moses at Sinai, and embodied in the fourth commandment of the decalogue. For centuries the chosen people testified for the living God, by observing this seventh day and thus declared among the heathen the doctrine of a creator of all things. But with the coming of the Son of God and the completion of the new creation, through the ministry, death, resurrection and ascension of the conqueror of sin and death, the people of God began the observance of the first day of the week, or the Lord's day. By so much as redemption exceeds creation, does the glory of the latter day exceed that of the former. The Sabbath pointed backward to the completion of the first heaven and first earth, wherein dwelt but two untried and undeveloped human souls. The Lord's day points backward, too, to the completion of a redemption which shall present to God a mighty host which no man can number, whose dwelling shall be in the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth only righteousness.

A GREAT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Young Man from Middlefield

By MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

THIS ENTRANCING STORY of twenty-six chapters ran as a serial in the columns of OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, and was followed with absorbing and ever-increasing interest by the many thousands of readers of that weekly journal. It relates, in the popular author's most charming style, the trials and triumphs of a plain young man from the country, who left his father's farm and went to the great city to fill a position in the lumber yard of his uncle. In his new surroundings he came into contact with a variety of people, every way different from the plain, honest country folks with whom he had formerly associated; but in the midst of his new surroundings, with their many temptations, he maintained his Christian integrity and lived up to the motto he had adopted, to "Make Christ First in Everything."

His good influence soon began to be felt in his uncle's family, among his fellow-workmen, and most of all among the young Christian Endeavorers with whom he associated, whose society was in due time revolutionized.

EVERY YOUNG PERSON should read this charming volume, and it should at once find a place in every Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school Library.

TOPIC FOR JULY 7.

Religion and Patriotism.

(Rom. 13:1-7.)

One of the most famous sayings of Jesus was his reply to the scheming Pharisees and scribes: "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." This expresses the relation of religion and patriotism most completely; and all that any one can do is to ring the changes on that utterance.

And this is what Paul does in the thirteenth of Romans. He urges the church at Rome to pay tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, honor to whom honor. This is strongly reminiscent of Jesus' word. It is the attitude which the Master assumed toward government, the attitude of quiet subjection and obedience. And is this not the proper attitude for all Christians?

This is not to say that bad governments should not be resisted. This is not to deny the right of revolution. A wicked government ought to be resisted, and even overturned, and yet how often does it happen that governments are disturbed and overturned which would better be left standing. Many revolutions that have taken place in the world should never have happened. The conservative course is far the wiser course. Bear till you can bear no more, and then pull up paving stones, build barricades and break the necks of tyrants.

In general, loyalty to country is very plainly taught by Christianity. "Lives there a man with soul so dead," is a saying perfectly in keeping with the spirit of our Master. Although it is true that he was larger than a mere Jew, still it is true that he was a Jew. And although Christianity is certainly larger than any nation, the church can certainly be national, patriotic, intensely loyal.

And yet Christianity certainly sets itself like flint against any narrow patriotism. "My country right or wrong," is a maxim altogether out of harmony with religion, especially Christian religion. Right first, and my country afterward; or rather right all the while, and my country only when right; this is a far truer maxim. There is a vast deal of shoddy patriotism in America. There is plenty of pseudo-patriotism. Let us have the right sort in harmony with our Christianity.

...OTHER THINGS GROW IN SUMMER...

Why Should Not The Circulation Of The Christian-Evangelist

It is not mere idle talk when we say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is better than it ever was. This is claiming much, for it has always been the exponent of first quality among the religious periodicals of the Current Reformation.

Our Readers have Helped to Make the Christian-Evangelist What It Is, and We Are Depending Upon Their Aid in Improving It Still More.

We are quite certain that our readers believe that individual lives would be better, homes would be happier, and the power of the church would be many times multiplied if the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was read in every home represented in the church. It is upon this ground that

We Ask for the Hearty Co-operation of Every Reader in this Mid-Summer Effort to Double the Circulation of the Christian-Evangelist.

How are we to accomplish this result? Those whom we are most desirous of reaching do not know the helpfulness of our journal. They must become acquainted with its good qualities. Sample copies accomplish this in a very limited degree; it takes several months for one to become interested in and attached to any particular class of reading. Therefore,

We Offer the Christian-Evangelist for the Six Months Beginning July 1, 1901, and Ending December 31, 1901, for Only Fifty Cents.

If you are really interested in this question of good literature, you may induce every family in your congregation (and many of your neighbors who are not church members) to invest fifty cents for twenty-six weeks' reading of the very best quality. Of course, we shall lose money on all such subscriptions, but

These Are to be Considered as Trial Subscriptions and are to be Discontinued Promptly December 31, 1901, Unless Renewed at the Regular Price of One Dollar and Fifty Cents a Year.

The justification of this very generous offer is the fact that those who read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for six months will not desire to part with it after that time, but will renew as regular subscribers. Circulating religious literature is as truly missionary and evangelistic as preaching from the pulpit. Therefore,

We Call Upon Pastors, Sunday-school Superintendents, and all Others Actively Interested in the Advancement of Christian Teaching Among Us to Engage With Us in the Present Effort to Increase the Knowledge, Piety and Zeal for Good Works of Those With Whom They Have Influence. Who Will Send Us the Largest List of Trial Subscribers?

Two-cent postage stamps will be accepted in payment, but the best way to remit large amounts is by Postoffice Order, Express Order or Draft on St. Louis, Chicago or New York.

MILLER.

Bessie M. Miller, daughter of Eli H. and Malinda Miller, was born Oct. 9, 1878, and departed this life May 20, 1901, aged 22 years, 7 months, and 11 days. At the age of fourteen she made the good confession and put on Christ by baptism, and ever since lived a beautiful, consistent Christian life. It was her cherished desire to prepare herself for the work of the Lord in the mission field or elsewhere, and to this end she attended Drake University until her health began to fail, and like the scholar in the "Bonnie Brier Bush" she was "needed for some grand work in the other world." She was the joy and comfort of her dear father, and often led in family worship with him. Her sainted mother had preceded her to the home-land, and her father, two brothers and a sister are left to sorrow, but not as those that have no hope. The funeral services were conducted in the church at Norwalk, Ia., by the writer, at her request. The large audience at this busy season showed the love and esteem in which she was held. Her remains were laid beside those of her beloved mother in the Norwalk cemetery to await the trumpet call of the Lord. May the Lord bless and keep the mourning loved ones.

MYERS.

Mrs. Emiline Blue Myers, died May 29, 1901, at Mexico, Mo. Her life was long and full of kind thoughts, gentle influences and "alms deeds which she did." Her friendship was a choice blessing to the recipient She requested on her dying bed that there be no exaggerated praise in her obituary We can observe her request and yet praise her far beyond what most of us deserve. Memory pictures her as one always thoughtful of others and concerned to render help to the sick and needy. And in her last sickness we saw her ready and willing and longing to go to be forever with her Lord.

SMART.

Miss Martha Esther Brown was born near Petersburg, Va., Oct. 22, 1815. When two years old her parents moved to North Carolina. When six years old they moved to Tennessee. Then when thirteen years old moved to Missouri. She was married to E. W. Smart, Aug. 7, 1838. Became a Christian Aug. 1, 1840. She departed this life June 1, 1901, near Billings, Mo., where she had lived the greater part of her life. She was anxious to go and be with the Savior. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

WILLIS.

Mrs. Lulu Carroll Willis was born July 26, 1874, in St. Louis, died April 30, in Carrollton, Mo. Deprived of parental care and love at the early age of four years, she was the ward of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Eunis, by whom she was reared as tenderly as if their own daughter. April 21, 1897, she was happily married to Mr. E. T. Willis, a young merchant of Carrollton. She became a member of the Central Christian Church, St. Louis, in 1893, and developed a strong, symmetrical character, full of the sweetness and grace of true womanhood. She loved her home and her friends. Her tastes were domestic, but she never shirked any social duty or obligation. The writer baptized her, performed her marriage ceremony and preached her funeral sermon. She was a constant reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and had preserved a file of the papers for several years.

A New Music Book

EVANGELISTS will find the Gospel Proclamation in song a department of the book eminently suited to every phase of a successfully conducted revival.

SINGING EVANGELISTS will be pleased with the analytical classification, enabling them without reference to indices to find a suitable song on a moment's warning. The rich variety and power of the solo and special song department, selected specially for his use in revivals, will be joyfully received.

CHORISTERS will find the average choir supplied with a rich selection of beautiful and impressive solos, with choruses, duets, quartettes, invocations and doxologies specially selected for the distinctive part a choir is expected to take in the service.

PASTORS who are responsible for the kind of pasture upon which the sheep and lambs are fed, will NOT find a sentiment out of harmony with New Testament Christianity. He will find it a companion vade mecum for his pocket Testament, containing gems for public worship, for the prayer-meeting, for funeral occasions, for Baptismal, Thanksgiving and Convention services. He will find that an expensive hymnal will not be needed, unless it be to keep in the style.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS will find in Popular Hymns No. 2 all that they can wish, because it is full from back to back with soul-stirring sentiment set to soul-inspiring music, the only kind C. E.'s care to sing. The Solos, Duets and Quartettes may be impressively used to enrich every session of the Society.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENTS who believe the Sunday-school should be the nursery of the church, the church at work saving the young, will find Popular Hymns No. 2 richly supplied with music within the voice compass and heart reach of the children, giving them a desire to remain and participate in the song service of the church. Popular Hymns No 2. contains 256 songs.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Book Notes.

Whoso misseth The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century misseth a good thing. Gentle reader, ponder a moment on the following fact: Such men as J. J. Haley, W. F. Richardson, B. A. Jenkins, F. D. Power, B. B. Tyler, et al, unhesitatingly endorse this volume as the most valuable addition to our literature made in recent years. You know these men—know that they have good judgment, and that they would not, for any consideration, give a book higher praise than it merits. Can you afford, then, to deprive yourself of so valuable and excellent a work as The Reformation of the Nineteenth Century must be? Certainly not, in justice to yourself. Do you say to yourself: "I read this history when it appeared in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and so we do not need to buy the book." Excuse us, but you did not read this history in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, or any other place. The authors have so changed, corrected, revised and amplified their work that it is practically new. And even if it remained unchanged, you need the work to refer to, for, you will remember, this is the only complete, correct, adequate history of the Disciples of Christ ever published. It is a splendid volume, the production of several of our ablest men and edited by J. H. Garrison, and well worth the price asked—$2.00.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an advertisement of Winston Churchill's splendid new novel, The Crisis. There are novels and novels. There are works of fiction the reading of which is rather worse than a waste of time and energy. Such books are not recommended by the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. But there are other novels which are bound to aid and instruct the reader, as well as entertain, and in this latter class is The Crisis. The writer of these notes has been somewhat a reader of English and American fiction, and he candidly avers that not in years has he read a story that delighted him so much as The Crisis. He has read it through twice within a month, and will give it a third reading during the summer. In St. Louis every bookstore, department store and news stand is handling the work, and thousands of copies are sold each week. Everybody seems to be reading, or to have read, the story. The verdict on the merits of the book varies in the manner of expression, but not in sentiment. The sweet young thing's "too utterly heavenly," the professional man's "a masterly work" and the very young man's "It sure is a peach, all right, all right," unite in harmonious praise of Mr. Churchill's story. The book is most handsomely printed, bound and illustrated. The fact that nearly all the action of the story takes place in St. Louis and in contiguous portions of Missouri and Illinois gives the narrative an especial interest for the people of the Mississippi Valley. The price is $1.50, on receipt of which we will forward the book (cloth, gilt edges, about 500 pages) postpaid.

Since the beginning of the trouble in China we have received hundreds of orders for that excellent little book—a genuine multum in parvo—by W. Remfry Hunt, entitled Facts About China. It is not often that the title of a work so fitly describes its contents. Mr. Hunt has been for many years a resident of Chu Cheo, China, and his book is a compilation of facts about China, told in an attractive manner. The book contains more information concerning the government, commerce, geography, topography, language, customs and religions of the Chinese Empire than many volumes five-fold larger and costlier. The price, postpaid, is but 25 cents.

Another work that is comparatively small in size and cheap in price but valuable for the information it conveys is Christian Science Dissected by "A. D. Sector." Many readers of this work have testified to the benefit they have received from it, in having their eyes opened to the true character of "Mother" Eddy, founder and "discoverer" of Christian Science, and the utter folly and falsity of Christian Science doctrines No intelligent and unprejudiced person, we believe, can read Christian Science Dissected without being convinced that "Christian Science" is a religion without Christ, a school of healing without science and a system of metaphysics without reason. Christian Scientists are conspicuously ready and anxious, as a rule, to rush into print to reply to those who denounce their doctrines, but one of their chief propagandists, a man holding high official position among the disciples of Mrs. Eddy, politely declined our invitation, extended to him after he had read the book, to write a reply, which reply would have been incorporated in the book without expense to him or his associates. In this he was wise, for Christian Science Dissected is unanswerable. Moreover, it is the only work on this subject issued by any of our publishing houses. Price, 25 cents.

Our Special Catalogue No. 31, issued especially for the summer trade, ought to be in every Christian home. No family should try to keep house without it. It contains hundreds of most attractive offers of all kinds of books—all good kinds that is—for everybody. Travel, biography, poetry, fiction, theology, science—all are included. The prices are right, from the purchaser's standpoint. Some valuable volumes are offered for less than the cost of production. Send for a copy—free—and see for yourself what we offer.
